CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

[From December 7, 1874, to January 28, 1875.]

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FORTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, December 7, 1874.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the second session of the Forty-third Congress commenced this day. The Senators assembled in the Senate Chamber at the Capitol, in the city of Washington.

SENATORS PRESENT.

The following Senators were present: from the State of—

Maine—Hon. Hannibal Hamlin and Hon. Lot M. Morrill.
New Hampshire—Hon. Aaron H. Cragin and Hon. Bainbridge Wadleigh.
Vermont—Hon. George F. Edmunds and Hon. Justin S. Morrill.
Massachusetts—Hon. George S. Boutwell and Hon. William B. Washburn.

Oregon—Hon. James K. Kelly and Hon. John H. Mitchell.

The VICE PRESIDENT (Hon. HENRY WILSON, of Massachusetts) called the Senate to order at twelve o'clock m., there being a quorum of Senators present.

PRAYER.

Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate for the Forty-third Congress, offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God, we come to worship Thee as the Supreme Ruler and Rightful Lawgiver of the world; and as Thou hast borne us all hither in safety, let us not be unmindful of Thee this day, nor turn away from the love of our Father and our God. We thank Thee for Thy mercies to our nation; we acknowledge Thy chastisements, and pray that we may be corrected through them. We beseech Thee, bestow that favor upon all this great people without which they are wholly unequal to their mission in this land. Help the Government in its grave responsibilities. Bless this Congress during its present session. May the candle of the Lord light them through every maze of difficulty; and may Thy good Spirit rest and abide upon them. We ask it for Christ, the Redeemer's sake: Amen.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

HOUR OF MEETING.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That the hour of the daily meeting of the Senate be twelve o'clock meridian, until otherwise ordered.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. CONKLING submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee, consisting of two members, be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States, and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Messrs. CONKLING and THURMAN were appointed.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, the joint select committee appointed under the act of Congress of the last session to make a frame of government for the District of Columbia have attended to that duty, and have instructed me to report a frame of government for the District of Columbia, with sundry provisions of statute designed to enforce such frame of government, accompanied by a written report, to which I respectfully ask the attention of the Senate. I move that the report lie on the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to; and the accompanying bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia was read and passed to the second reading.

REPORTS REQUIRED BY LAW.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. I have received and now lay before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Senate, in compliance with section 73 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, containing a full and complete statement of the receipts and expenditures of the contingent fund of the Senate from July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1874. The report will lie on the table and be printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it would be better not to print these detailed reports until they are referred to the Committee on Printing. I move, therefore, that the question of printing the document lie on the table for the present, as we have no committees as yet.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Senate, in compliance with the seventy-fifth section of the Revised Statutes of the United States, containing a full and complete account of all property belonging to the United States in his possession on this day; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, containing, in compliance with the seventy-fifth section of the Revised Statutes of the United States, a full and complete account of all property belonging to the United States in his possession this day; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting, in compliance with section 9 of the act entitled "An act to provide for appeals from the Court of Claims, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1868, a statement of all judgments rendered by that court for the year ending December 7, 1874, the amounts thereof, the parties in whose favor rendered, and a brief synopsis of the nature of the claims upon which said judgments have been rendered; which was ordered to lie on the table.

CREDENTIALS OF SENATORS ELECT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the credentials of Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, elected by the Legislature of Vermont a Senator from that State for the term commencing on the 4th day of March, 1875; which were read and ordered to be filed.

He also presented the credentials of Hon. William W. Eaton, elected by the Legislature of Connecticut a Senator from that State for the term commencing on the 4th day of March, 1875; which were read and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I present the petition of Hiram Bateman, late of Company I, Third Regiment Michigan Volunteers, praying to be granted a pension. I propose that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committees have not yet been appointed. The petition will be received, and lie on the table for the present.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Very well; let that course be taken.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I present the memorial of Laban Heath, praying remuneration on account of defective work done at the Treasury printing department. I move that this memorial lie on the table until the committees shall have been appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I present the petition of Rear-Admiral John L. Worden, United States Navy, praying that there may be granted to him, the officers and crew of the iron-clad steamer Monitor, the estimated value of the Merrimac, destroyed by the Monitor, to be distributed among the same as the estimated value of the Alabama was distributed to the officers and crew of the Kearsarge. I shall ask that this petition be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, when appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. SARGENT. I also present the petition of Rufus Saxton and A. R. Eddy, lieutenant colonels and deputy quartermasters-general of the United States Army, praying to be restored to their appropriate rank, of which they claim to have been deprived by previous legislation of Congress. I shall ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, when appointed.

The petition was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SARGENT. I also present the petition of Mrs. Susan Roberts, of Humboldt County, California, praying compensation for lands and private property taken and used by the Government of the United States for public purposes. This also is to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, when appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. SCHURZ presented the petition of Elizabeth Reidenbach, widow of F. Reidenbach, late of Company E, Second Artillery, Illinois Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of J. S. Savage, of Newton, Massachusetts, inventor of a safety ballot-box, praying to be allowed to appear before the proper committee and explain its advantages; which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 964) to provide for the revision of the laws for the collection of customs-duties; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 965) for the relief of certain settlers upon the public lands in the State of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 966) to increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 967) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 968) for the relief of persons suffering from the ravages of grasshoppers; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 969) for the relief of Ferdinand Monti, a wagon-master in the Mexican war; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 970) for the relief of Andrew Hosmer, of Peoria, Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 971) to protect persons of foreign birth against forcible constraint or involuntary servitude; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 972) to enable Indians in certain cases to enter public lands of the United States under the homestead law, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 973) to correct the date of commission of certain officers of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

RECESS.

Mr. ANTHONY, (at twelve o'clock and seventeen minutes p. m.) Mr. President, there seems to be no business before the Senate; and, while we are waiting for the message of the President of the United States, I move that the Senate take a recess until one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and at one o'clock p. m. the Senate reassembled.

ARKANSAS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. WRIGHT. On the 17th of June last I had the honor to report from the Committee on the Judiciary House bill No. 3621, to abolish the western district of Arkansas, and for other purposes; and I give notice now that on Thursday morning, if I can obtain the floor, immediately on the expiration of the morning hour, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that bill.

THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. INGALLS. I beg leave to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be directed to inquire into the recent disturbances in the Indian Territory, and to report to the Senate what measures are necessary for the protection of life, liberty, and property, and the preservation of law and order, in that region, and whether the best interests of civilization do not demand the immediate establishment of courts of the United States in said Territory, as provided by the treaties of 1866.

As the committees have not yet been appointed, Mr. President, I suppose the proper course would be to have the resolution lie on the table for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will take that direction.

RECESS.

Mr. ANTHONY, (at one o'clock and five minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate take a recess until half-past one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate was again called to order at one o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Hon. EDWARD MCPHERSON, its Clerk, as follows:

Mr. President, I have been directed to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled, and that the House is now ready to proceed to business.

The House has passed a resolution directing the appointment of a committee, on the part of the House, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make; and has appointed Mr. HENRY L. DAWES of Massachusetts, Mr. ROBERT S. HALE of New York, and Mr. JAMES B. BECK of Kentucky the committee on the part of the House.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to apprise the President of the United States of the presence of the two Houses, and their readiness to proceed to business, having discharged that duty, have been informed by the President that he will presently communicate with the two Houses in writing.

Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, the Private Secretary of the President, then appeared below the bar and said: Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States; which will be read.

The Chief Clerk, Mr. William J. McDonald, thereupon read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Since the convening of Congress one year ago the nation has undergone a prostration in business and industries such as has not been witnessed with us for many years. Speculation as to the causes for this prostration might be indulged in without profit, because as many theories would be advanced as there would be independent writers—those who expressed their own views without borrowing—upon the subject. Without indulging in theories as to the cause of this prostration, therefore, I will call your attention only to the fact, and to some plain questions as to which it would seem there should be no disagreement. During this prostration two essential elements of prosperity have been most abundant: labor and capital. Both have been largely unemployed. Where security has been undoubted, capital has been attainable at very moderate rates. Where labor has been wanted, it has been found in abundance at cheap rates, compared with what—of necessaries and comforts of life—could be purchased with the wages demanded. Two great elements of prosperity, therefore, have not been denied us. A third might be added: our soil and climate are unequaled, within the limits of any contiguous territory under one nationality, for its variety of products to feed and clothe a people, and in the amount of surplus to spare to feed less favored peoples. Therefore, with these facts in view, it seems to me that wise statesmanship, at this session of Congress, would dictate legislation, ignoring the past, directing in proper channels these great elements of prosperity to any people. Debt—debt abroad—is the only element that can, with always a sound currency, enter into our affairs to cause any continued depression in the industries and prosperity of our people. A great conflict for national existence made necessary, for temporary purposes, the raising of large sums of money from whatever source attainable. It made it necessary, in the wisdom of Congress—and I do not doubt their wisdom in the premises regarding the necessity of the times—to devise a system of national currency which it proved to be impossible to keep on a par with the recognized currency of the civilized world. This begot a spirit of speculation involving an extravagance and luxury not required for the happiness or prosperity of a people, and involving, both directly and indirectly, foreign indebtedness. The currency being of fluctuating value, and therefore unsafe to hold for legitimate transactions requiring money, became a subject of speculation in itself. These two causes, however, have involved us in a foreign indebtedness, contracted in good faith by borrower and lender, which should be paid in coin, and according to the bond agreed upon when the debt was contracted—gold or its equivalent. The good faith of the Government cannot be violated toward creditors without national disgrace.

But our commerce should be encouraged; American ship-building and carrying capacity increased; foreign markets sought for products of the soil and manufactories, to the end that we may be able to pay these debts. Where a new market can be created for the sale of our products, either of the soil, the mine, or the manufactory, a new means is discovered of utilizing our idle capital and labor to the advantage of the whole people. But, in my judgment, the first step toward accomplishing this object is to secure a currency of fixed, stable value; a currency good wherever civilization reigns; one which, if it becomes superabundant with one people, will find a market with some other; a currency which has as its basis the labor necessary to produce it, which will give to it its value. Gold and silver are now the recognized medium of exchange the civilized world over; and to this we should return with the least practicable delay. In view of the pledges of the American Congress when our present legal-tender system was adopted, and debt contracted, there should be no delay—certainly no unnecessary delay—in fixing by legislation a method by which we will return to specie. To the accomplishment of this end I invite your special attention. I believe firmly that there can be no prosperous and permanent revival of business and industries until a policy is adopted, with legislation to carry it out, looking to a return to a specie basis. It is easy to conceive that the debtor and speculative classes may think it of value to them to make so-called money abundant until they can throw a portion of their burdens upon others. But even these, I believe, would be disappointed in the result if a course should be pursued which will keep in doubt the value of the legal-tender medium of exchange. A revival of productive industry is needed by all classes—by none more than the holders of property, of whatever sort, with debts to liquidate from realization upon its sale. But admitting that these two classes of citizens are to be benefited by expansion, would it be honest to give it? Would not the general loss be too great to justify such relief? Would it not be just as honest and prudent to authorize each debtor to issue his own legal-tenders to the extent of his liabilities? Than to do this would it not be safer, for fear of overissues by unscrupulous creditors, to say that all debt-obligations are obliterated in the United States, and now we commence anew, each possessing all he has at the time free from incumbrance? These proportions are too absurd to be entertained for a moment by thinking or honest people. Yet every delay in preparation for final resumption partakes of this dishonesty, and is only less in degree as the hope is held out that a convenient season will at last arrive for the good work of redeeming our pledges to commence. It will never come, in my opinion, except by positive action by Congress, or by national disasters which will destroy, for a time at least, the credit of the individual and the State at large. A sound currency might be reached by total bankruptcy and discredit of the integrity of the nation and of individuals. I believe it is in the power of Congress, at this session, to devise such legislation as will renew confidence, revive all the industries, start us on a career of prosperity to last for many years, and to save the credit of the nation and of the people. Steps toward the return to a specie basis are the great requisites to this devoutly to be sought for end. There are others which I may touch upon hereafter.

A nation dealing in a currency below that of specie in value labors under two great disadvantages: First, having no use for the world's acknowledged medium of exchange, gold and silver, these are driven out of the country, because there is no need for their use; second, the medium of exchange in use being of a fluctuating value—for after all it is only worth just what it will purchase of gold and silver; metals having an intrinsic value just in proportion to the honest labor it takes to produce them—a larger margin must be allowed for profit by the manufacturer and producer. It is months from the date of production to the date of realization. Interest upon capital must be charged, and risk of fluctuation in the value of that which is to be received in payment added. Hence high prices, acting as a protection to the foreign producer, who receives nothing in exchange for the products of his skill and labor except a currency good at a stable value the world over.

It seems to me that nothing is clearer than that the greater part of the burden of existing prostration, for the want of a sound financial system, falls upon the workingman, who must, after all, produce the wealth, and the salaried man who superintends and conducts business. The burden falls upon them in two ways: by the deprivation of employment, and by the decreased purchasing power of their salaries. It is the duty of Congress to devise the method of correcting the evils which are acknowledged to exist, and not mine. But I will venture to suggest two or three things which seem to me as absolutely necessary to a return to specie payments, the first great requisite in a return to prosperity. The legal-tender clause to the law authorizing the issue of currency by the National Government should be repealed, to take effect as to all contracts entered into after a day fixed in the repealing act; not to apply, however, to payments of salaries by Government or for other expenditures now provided by law to be paid in currency in the interval pending between repeal and final resumption. Provision should be made by which the Secretary of the Treasury can obtain gold as it may become necessary from time to time from the date when specie redemption commences. To this might and should be added a revenue sufficiently in excess of expenses to insure an accumulation of gold in the Treasury to sustain permanent redemption.

I commend this subject to your careful consideration, believing that a favorable solution is attainable, and, if reached by this Congress, that the present and future generations will ever gratefully remember it as their deliverer from a thralldom of evil and disgrace.

With resumption, free banking may be authorized with safety, giving the same full protection to bill-holders which they have under existing laws. Indeed, I would regard free banking as essential. It would give proper elasticity to the currency. As more currency should be required for the transaction of legitimate business new banks would be started, and in turn banks would wind up their business when it was found that there was a superabundance of currency. The experience and judgment of the people can best decide just how much currency is required for the transaction of the business of the country. It is unsafe to leave the settlement of this question to Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Executive. Congress should make the regulation under which banks may exist, but should not make banking a monopoly by limiting the amount of redeemable paper currency that shall be authorized. Such importance do I attach to this subject, and so earnestly do I commend it to your attention, that I give it prominence by introducing it at the beginning of this message.

During the past year nothing has occurred to disturb the general friendly and cordial relations of the United States with other powers.

The correspondence submitted herewith between this Government and its diplomatic representatives, as also with the representatives of other countries, shows a satisfactory condition of all questions between the United States and the most of those countries, and, with few exceptions, to which reference is hereafter made, the absence of any points of difference to be adjusted.

The notice directed by the resolution of Congress of June 17, 1874, to be given to terminate the convention of July 17, 1858, between the United States and Belgium, has been given, and the treaty will accordingly terminate on the 1st day of July, 1875. This convention secured to certain Belgian vessels entering the ports of the United States exceptional privileges which are not accorded to our own vessels. Other features of the convention have proved satisfactory, and have tended to the cultivation of mutually beneficial commercial intercourse and friendly relations between the two countries. I hope that negotiations which have been invited will result in the celebration of another treaty which may tend to the interests of both countries.

Our relations with China continue to be friendly. During the past year the fear of hostilities between China and Japan, growing out of the landing of an armed force upon the island of Formosa by the latter, has occasioned uneasiness. It is earnestly hoped, however, that the difficulties arising from this cause will be adjusted, and that the advance of civilization in these empires may not be retarded by a state of war. In consequence of the part taken by certain citizens of the United States in this expedition, our representatives in those countries have been instructed to impress upon the governments of China and Japan the firm intention of this country to maintain strict neutrality in the event of hostilities, and to carefully prevent any infraction of law on the part of our citizens.

In connection with this subject I call the attention of Congress to a generally conceded fact, that the great proportion of the Chinese mmigrants who come to our shores do not come voluntarily, to make their homes with us and their labor productive of general prosperity, but come under contracts with head-men, who own them almost absolutely. In a worse form does this apply to Chinese women. Hardly a perceptible percentage of them perform any honorable labor, but they are brought for shameful purposes, to the disgrace of the communities where settled and to the great demoralization of the youth of those localities. If this evil practice can be legislated against, it will be my pleasure as well as duty to enforce any regulation to secure so desirable an end.

It is hoped that negotiations between the government of Japan and the treaty powers, looking to the further opening of the empire and to the removal of various restrictions upon trade and travel, may soon produce the results desired, which cannot fail to inure to the benefit of all the parties. Having on previous occasions submitted to the consideration of Congress the propriety of the release of the Japanese government from the further payment of the indemnity under the convention of October 22, 1864, and as no action had been taken thereon, it became my duty to regard the obligations of the convention as in force, and as the other powers interested had received their portion of the indemnity in full, the minister of the United States in Japan has, in behalf of this Government, received the remainder of the amount due to the United States under the convention of Simonoseki. I submit the propriety of applying the income of a part, if not of the whole, of this fund to the education in the Japanese language of a number of young men, to be under obligations to serve the Government, for a specified time, as interpreters at the legation and the consulates in Japan. A limited number of Japanese youths might at the same time be educated in our own vernacular; and mutual benefits would result to both governments. The importance of having our own citizens competent and familiar with the language of Japan, to act as interpreters and in other capacities connected with the legation and the consulates in that country, cannot readily be overestimated.

The amount awarded to the government of Great Britain by the mixed commission organized under the provisions of the treaty of Washington, in settlement of the claims of British subjects arising from acts committed between April 13, 1861, and April 9, 1865, became payable, under the terms of the treaty, within the past year, and was paid upon the 21st day of September, 1874. In this connection I renew my recommendation, made at the opening of the last session of Congress, that a special court be created, to hear and determine all claims of aliens against the United States arising from acts committed against their persons or property during the insurrection. It appears equitable that opportunity should be offered to citizens of other states to present their claims, as well as to those British subjects whose claims were not admissible under the late commission, to the early decision of some competent tribunal. To this end I recommend the necessary legislation to organize a court to dispose of all claims of aliens of the nature referred to in an equitable and satisfactory manner, and to relieve Congress and the Departments from the consideration of these questions.

The legislation necessary to extend to the colony of Newfoundland certain articles of the treaty of Washington of the 8th day of May, 1871, having been had, a protocol to that effect was signed in behalf of the United States and of Great Britain on the 28th day of May last, and was duly proclaimed on the following day. A copy of the proclamation is submitted herewith.

A copy of the report of the commissioner appointed under the act of March 19, 1872, for surveying and marking the boundary between the United States and the British possessions from the Lake of the Woods to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, is herewith transmitted. I am happy to announce that the field-work of the commission has been completed, and the entire line from the northwest corner of the Lake of the Woods to the summit of the Rocky Mountains has been run and marked upon the surface of the earth. It is believed that the amount remaining unexpended of the appropriation made at the last session of Congress will be sufficient to complete the office-work. I recommend that the authority of Congress be given to the use of the unexpended balance of the appropriation to the completion of the work of the commission in making its report and preparing the necessary maps.

The court known as the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, created by an act of Congress of the last session, has organized and commenced its work, and it is to be hoped that the claims admissible under the provisions of the act may be speedily ascertained and paid.

It has been deemed advisable to exercise the discretion conferred upon the Executive at the last session, by accepting the conditions required by the government of Turkey for the privilege of allowing citizens of the United States to hold real estate in the former country and by assenting to a certain change in the jurisdiction of courts in the latter. A copy of the proclamation upon these subjects is herewith communicated.

There has been no material change in our relations with the independent states of this hemisphere which were formerly under the dominion of Spain. Marauding on the frontiers between Mexico and Texas still frequently takes place, despite the vigilance of the civil and military authorities in that quarter. The difficulty of checking such trespasses along the course of a river of such length as the Rio Grande, and so often fordable, is obvious. It is hoped that the efforts of this Government will be seconded by those of Mexico to the effectual suppression of these acts of wrong.

From a report upon the condition of the business before the American and Mexican joint claims commission, made by the agent on the part of the United States, and dated October 28, 1874, it appears that of the 1,017 claims filed on the part of citizens of the United States 483 had been finally decided and 75 were in the hands of the umpire, leaving 462 to be disposed of; and of the 998 claims filed against the United States 726 had been finally decided, one was before the umpire, and 271 remained to be disposed of. Since the date of such report other claims have been disposed of, reducing somewhat the number still pending, and others have been passed upon by the arbitrators. It has become apparent, in view of these figures and of the fact that the work devolving on the umpire is particularly laborious, that the commission would be unable to dispose of the entire number of claims pending prior to the 1st day of February, 1875, the date fixed for its expiration. Negotiations are pending looking to the securing of the results of the decisions which have been reached and to a further extension of the commission for a limited time, which it is confidently hoped will suffice to bring all the business now before it to a final close.

The strife in the Argentine Republic is to be deplored, both on account of the parties thereto and from the probable effects on the interests of those engaged in the trade to that quarter, of whom the United States are among the principal. As yet, so far as I am aware, there has been no violation of our neutrality rights, which, as well as our duties in that respect, it shall be my endeavor to maintain and observe.

It is with regret I announce that no further payment has been received from the government of Venezuela on account of awards in favor of citizens of the United States. Hopes have been entertained that if that republic could escape both foreign and civil war for a few years, its great natural resources would enable it to honor its obligations. Though it is now understood to be at peace with other countries, a serious insurrection is reported to be in progress in an important region of that republic. This may be taken advantage of as another reason to delay the payment of the dues of our citizens.

The deplorable strife in Cuba continues without any marked change in the relative advantages of the contending forces. The insurrection continues, but Spain has gained no superiority. Six years of strife give to the insurrection a significance which cannot be denied. Its duration and the tenacity of its adherence, together with the absence of manifested power of suppression on the part of Spain, cannot be controverted, and may make some positive steps on the part of other powers a matter of self-necessity. I had confidently hoped at this time to be able to announce the arrangement of some of the important questions between this Government and that of Spain, but the negotiations have been protracted. The unhappy intestine dissensions of Spain command our profound sympathy, and must be accepted as perhaps a cause of some delay. An early settlement, in part at least, of the questions between the Governments is hoped. In the mean time, awaiting the results of immediately-pending negotiations, I defer a further and fuller communication on the subject of the relations of this country and Spain.

I have again to call the attention of Congress to the unsatisfactory condition of the existing laws with reference to expatriation and the election of nationality. Formerly, amid conflicting opinions and decisions, it was difficult to exactly determine how far the doctrine of perpetual allegiance was applicable to citizens of the United States. Congress, by the act of the 27th of July, 1868, asserted the abstract right of expatriation as a fundamental principle of this Government. Notwithstanding such assertion, and the necessity of frequent application of the principle, no legislation has been had defining what acts or formalities shall work expatriation, or when a citizen shall be deemed to have renounced or to have lost his citizenship. The importance of such definition is obvious. The representatives of the United States in foreign countries are continually called upon to lend their aid and the protection of the United States to persons concerning the good faith or the reality of whose citizenship there is at least great question. In some cases the provisions of the treaties furnish some guide; in others it seems left to the person claiming the benefits of citizenship, while living in a foreign country, contributing in no manner to the performance of the duties of a citizen of the United States, and without intention at any time to return and undertake those duties, to use the claims to citizenship of the United States simply as a shield from the performance of the obligations of a citizen elsewhere.

The status of children born of American parents residing in a foreign country, of American women who have married aliens, of American citizens residing abroad where such question is not regulated by treaty, are all sources of frequent difficulty and discussion. Legislation on these and similar questions, and particularly defining when and under what circumstances expatriation can be accomplished or is to be presumed, is especially needed. In this connection I earnestly call the attention of Congress to the difficulties arising from fraudulent naturalization. The United States, wisely, freely, and liberally offers its citizenship to all who may come in good faith to reside within its limits on their complying with certain prescribed reasonable and simple formalities and conditions. Among the highest duties of the Government is that to afford firm, efficient, and equal protection to all its citizens, whether native-born or naturalized. Care should be taken that a right carrying with it such support from the Government should not be fraudulently obtained, and should be bestowed only upon full proof of a compliance with the law; and yet frequent instances are brought to the attention of the Government of illegal and fraudulent naturalization and of the unauthorized use of certificates thus improperly obtained. In some cases the fraudulent character of the naturalization has appeared upon the face of the certificate itself; in others, examination discloses that the holder had not complied with the law; and in others, certificates have been obtained where the persons holding them not only were not entitled to be naturalized, but had not even been within the United States at the time of the pretended naturalization. Instances of each of these classes of fraud are discovered at our legations, where the certificates of naturalization are presented either for the purpose of obtaining passports or in demanding the protection of the legation. When the fraud is apparent on the face of such certificates, they are taken up by the representatives of the Government and forwarded to the Department of State. But even then the record of the court in which the fraudulent naturalization occurred remains, and duplicate certificates are readily obtainable. Upon the presentation of these for the issue of passports, or in demanding protection of the Government, the fraud sometimes escapes notice, and such certificates are not infrequently used in transactions of business to the deception and injury of innocent parties. Without placing any additional obstacles in the way of the obtainment of citizenship by the worthy and well-intentioned foreigner who comes in good faith to cast his lot with ours, I earnestly recommend further legislation to punish fraudulent naturalization, and to secure the ready cancellation of the record of every naturalization made in fraud.

Since my last annual message the exchange has been made of the ratification of treaties of extradition with Belgium, Ecuador, Peru, and Salvador; also of a treaty of commerce and navigation with Peru, and one of commerce and consular privileges with Salvador; all of which have been duly proclaimed, as has also a declaration with Russia with reference to trade-marks.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury, which by law is made directly to Congress and forms no part of this message, will show the receipts and expenditures of the Government for the last fiscal year, the amount received from each source of revenue, and the amount paid out for each of the departments of Government. It will be observed from this report that the amount of receipts over expenditures has been but $2,344,882.30 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, and that for the current fiscal year the estimated receipts over expenditures will not much exceed nine millions of dollars. In view of the large national debt existing and the obligation to add 1 per cent. per annum to the sinking fund—a sum amounting now to over $34,000,000 per annum—I submit whether revenues should not be increased or expenditures diminished to reach this amount of surplus. Not to provide for the sinking fund is a partial failure to comply with the contracts and obligations of the Government.

At the last session of Congress a very considerable reduction was made in rates of taxation and in the number of articles submitted to taxation. The question may well be asked whether or not, in some instances, unwisely. In connection with this subject, too, I venture the opinion that the means of collecting the revenue, especially from imports, have been so embarrassed by legislation, as to make it questionable whether or not large amounts are not lost by failure to collect, to the direct loss of the Treasury, and to the prejudice of the interests of honest importers and tax-payers.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his report, favors legislation looking to an early return to specie payments, thus supporting views previously expressed in this message. He also recommends economy in appropriations; calls attention to the loss of revenue from repealing the tax on tea and coffee, without benefit to the consumer; recommends an increase of ten cents a gallon on whisky; and further, that no modification be made in the banking and currency bill passed at the last session of Congress, unless modification should become necessary by reason of the adoption of measures for returning to specie payments. In these recommendations I cordially join. I would suggest to Congress the propriety of readjusting the tariff so as to increase the revenue and at the same time decrease the number of articles upon which duties are levied. Those articles which enter into our manufactures, and are not produced at home, it seems to me should be entered free. Those articles of manufacture which we produce a constituent part of, but do not produce the whole, that part which we do not produce should enter free also. I will instance fine wool, dyes, &c. These articles must be imported to form a part of the manufacture of the higher grades of woolen goods. Chemicals used as dyes, compounded in medicines, and used in various ways in manufactures, come under this class. The introduction free of duty of such wools as we do not produce would stimulate the manufacture of goods requiring the use of those we do produce, and therefore would be a benefit to home production. There are many articles entering into "home manufactures" which we do not produce ourselves, the tariff upon which increases the cost of producing the manufactured article. All corrections in this regard are in the direction of bringing labor and capital in harmony with each other, and of supplying one of the elements of prosperity so much needed.

The report of the Secretary of War, herewith attached, and forming a part of this message, gives all the information concerning the operations, wants, and necessities of the Army, and contains many suggestions and recommendations which I commend to your special attention.

There is no class of Government employés who are harder worked than the Army, officers and men—none who perform their tasks more cheerfully and efficiently, and under circumstances of greater privations and hardships. Legislation is desirable to render more efficient this branch of the public service. All the recommendations of the Secretary of War I regard as judicious, and I especially commend to your attention the following: The consolidation of Government arsenals; the restoration of mileage to officers traveling under orders; the exemption of money received from the sale of subsistence stores from being covered into the Treasury; the use of appropriations for the purchase of subsistence stores without waiting for the beginning of the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made; for additional appropriations for the collection of torpedo material; for increased appropriations for the manufacture of arms; for relieving the various States from indebtedness for arms charged to them during the rebellion; for dropping officers from the rolls of the Army, without trial, for the offense of drawing pay more than once for the same period; for the discouragement of the plan to pay soldiers by checks; and for the establishment of a professorship of rhetoric and English literature at West Point. The reasons for these recommendations are obvious, and are set forth sufficiently in the reports attached. I also recommend that the status of the staff corps of the Army be fixed—where this has not already been done—so that promotions may be made and vacancies filled as they occur, in each grade when reduced below the number to be fixed by law. The necessity for such legislation is specially felt now in the Pay Department. The number of officers in that Department is below the number adequate to the performance of the duties required of them by law.

The efficiency of the Navy has been largely increased during the last year. Under the impulse of the foreign complications which threatened us at the commencement of the last session of Congress, most of our efficient wooden ships were put in condition for immediate service, and the repairs of our iron-clad fleet were pushed with the utmost vigor. The result is that most of these are now in an effective state, and need only to be manned and put in commission to go at once into service.

Some of the new sloops authorized by Congress are already in commission, and most of the remainder are launched and wait only the completion of their machinery to enable them to take their places as part of our effective force. Two iron torpedo-ships have been completed during the last year, and four of our large double-turreted iron-clads are now undergoing repairs. When these are finished everything that is useful of our Navy, as now authorized, will be in condition for service; and with the advance in the science of torpedo warfare the American Navy, comparatively small as it is, will be found at any time powerful for the purposes of a peaceful nation.

Much has also been accomplished during the year in aid of science, and to increase the sum of general knowledge, and further the interests of commerce and civilization. Extensive and much needed soundings have been made for hydrographic purposes, and to fix the proper routes of ocean telegraphs. Further surveys of the great isthmus have been undertaken and completed, and two vessels of the Navy are now employed, in conjunction with those of England, France, Germany, and Russia, in observations connected with the transit of Venus, so useful and interesting to the scientific world.

The estimates for this branch of the public service do not differ materially from those of last year; those for the general support of the service being somewhat less, and those for permanent improvements at the various stations rather larger, than the corresponding estimate made a year ago. The regular maintenance and a steady increase in the efficiency of this most important arm, in proportion to the growth of our maritime intercourse and interests, is recommended to the attention of Congress.

The use of the Navy, in time of peace, might be further utilized by a direct authorization of the employment of naval vessels in explorations and surveys of the supposed navigable waters of other nationalities on this continent; especially the tributaries of the two great rivers of South America, the Oronoco and the Amazon. Nothing prevents, under existing laws, such exploration, except that expenditures must be made in such expeditions beyond those usually provided for in the appropriations. The field designated is unquestionably one of interest, and one capable of large development of commercial interests advantageous to the peoples reached and to those who may establish relations with them.

Education of the people entitled to exercise the right of franchise I regard essential to general prosperity everywhere, and especially so in republics, where birth, education, or previous condition does not enter into account in giving suffrage. Next to the public school the post-office is the great agent of education over our vast territory; the rapidity with which new sections are being settled, thus increasing the carrying of mails in a more rapid ratio than the increase of receipts, is not alarming.

The report of the Postmaster-General, herewith attached, shows that there was an increase of revenue in his Department in 1873 over the previous year of $1,674,411, and an increase of cost of carrying the mails and paying employés of $3,041,468.91. The report of the Postmaster-General gives interesting statistics of his Department, and compares them with the corresponding statistics of a year ago, showing a growth in every branch of the Department.

A postal convention has been concluded with New South Wales, an exchange of postal cards established with Switzerland, and the negotiations pending for several years past with France have terminated in a convention with that country, which went into effect last August. An international postal congress was convened in Berne, Switzerland, in September last, at which the United States was represented by an officer of the Post-Office Department of much experience and of qualification for the position. A convention for the establishment of an international postal union was agreed upon and signed by the delegates of the countries represented, subject to the approval of the proper authorities of those countries.

I respectfully direct your attention to the report of the Postmaster-General, and to his suggestions in regard to an equitable adjustment of the question of compensation to railroads for carrying the mails.

Your attention will be drawn to the unsettled condition of affairs in some of the Southern States.

On the 14th of September last the governor of Louisiana called upon me, as provided by the Constitution and laws of the United States, to aid in suppressing domestic violence in that State. This call was made in view of a proclamation issued on that day by D. B. Penn, claiming that he was elected lieutenant-governor in 1872, and calling upon the militia of the State to arm, assemble, and drive from power the usurpers, as he designated the officers of the State government. On the next day I issued my proclamation, commanding the insurgents to disperse within five days from the date thereof, and subsequently learned that on that day they had taken forcible possession of the State-house. Steps were taken by me to support the existing and recognized State government; but before the expiration of the five days the insurrectionary movement was practically abandoned, and the officers of the State government, with some minor exceptions, resumed their powers and duties. Considering that the present State administration of Louisiana has been the only government in that State for nearly two years, that it has been tacitly acknowledged and acquiesced in as such by Congress, and more than once expressly recognized by me, I regarded it as my clear duty, when legally called upon for that purpose, to prevent its overthrow by an armed mob under pretense of fraud and irregularity in the election of 1872.

I have heretofore called the attention of Congress to this subject, stating that on account of the frauds and forgeries committed at said election, and because it appears that the returns thereof were never legally canvassed, it was impossible to tell thereby who were chosen; but from the best sources of information at my command I have always believed that the present State officers received a majority of the legal votes actually cast at that election. I repeat what I said in my special message of February 23, 1873, that in the event of no action by Congress I must continue to recognize the government heretofore recognized by me.

I regret to say that with preparations for the late election decided indications appeared in some localities in the Southern States of a determination, by acts of violence and intimidation, to deprive citizens of the freedom of the ballot because of their political opinions. Bands of men, masked and armed, made their appearance; White Leagues and other societies were formed; large quantities of arms and ammunition were imported and distributed to these organizations; military drills, with menacing demonstrations, were held; and, with all these, murders enough were committed to spread terror among those whose political action was to be suppressed, if possible, by these intolerant and criminal proceedings. In some places colored laborers were compelled to vote according to the wishes of their employers, under threats of discharge if they acted otherwise; and there are too many instances in which, when these threats were disregarded, they were remorselessly executed by those who made them.

I understand that the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution was made to prevent this and a like state of things, and the act of May 31, 1870, with amendments, was passed to enforce its provisions; the object of both being to guarantee to all citizens the right to vote, and to protect them in the free enjoyment of that right. Enjoined by the Constitution "to take care that the laws be faithfully executed," and convinced by undoubted evidence that violations of said act had been committed, and that a widespread and flagrant disregard of it was contemplated, the proper officers were instructed to prosecute the offenders, and troops were stationed at convenient points to aid the officers, if necessary, in the performance of their official duties. Complaints are made of this interference by Federal authority; but if said amendment and act do not provide for such interference under the circumstances as above stated, then they are without meaning, force, or effect, and the whole scheme of colored enfranchisement is worse than mockery and little better than a crime. Possibly Congress may find it due to truth and justice to ascertain by means of a committee whether the alleged wrongs to colored citizens for political purposes are real or the reports thereof were manufactured for the occasion.

The whole number of troops in the States of Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, Maryland, and Virginia at the time of the election were four thousand and eighty-two. This embraces the garrisons of all the forts from the Delaware to the Gulf of Mexico.

Another trouble has arisen in Arkansas. Article 13 of the constitution of that State (which was adopted in 1868, and upon the approval of which by Congress the State was restored to representation as one of the States of the Union) provides in effect that before any amendments proposed to this constitution shall become a part thereof, they shall be passed by two successive assemblies, and then submitted to and ratified by a majority of the electors of the State voting thereon. On the 11th of May, 1874, the governor convened an extra session of the General Assembly of the State, which on the 18th of the same month passed an act providing for a convention to frame a new constitution. Pursuant to this act, and at an election held on the 30th of June, 1874, the convention was approved, and delegates were chosen thereto, who assembled on the 14th of last July and framed a new constitution, the schedule of which provided for the election of an entire new set of State officers in a manner contrary to the then existing election laws of the State. On the 13th of October, 1874, this constitution, as therein provided, was submitted to the people for their approval or rejection, and according to the election returns was approved by a large majority of those qualified to vote thereon, and at the same election persons were chosen to fill all the State, county, and township offices. The governor elected in 1872 for the term of four years turned over his office to the governor chosen under the new constitution; whereupon the lieutenant-governor, also elected in 1872 for the term of four years, claiming to act as governor and alleging that said proceedings by which the new constitution was made and a new set of officers elected were unconstitutional, illegal, and void, called upon me, as provided in section 4, article 4, of the Constitution, to protect the State against domestic violence. As Congress is now investigating the political affairs of Arkansas, I have declined to interfere.

The whole subject of executive interference with the affairs of a State is repugnant to public opinion, to the feeling of those who from their official capacity must be used in such interposition, and to him or those who must direct. Unless most clearly on the side of law, such interference becomes a crime; with the law to support it, it is condemned without a hearing. I desire, therefore, that all necessity for executive direction in local affairs may become unnecessary and obsolete. I invite the attention, not of Congress, but of the people of the United States, to the causes and effects of these unhappy questions. Is there not a disposition on one side to magnify wrongs and outrages, and on the other side to belittle them or justify them? If public opinion could be directed to a correct survey of what is, and to rebuking wrong and aiding the proper authorities in punishing it, a better state of feeling would be inculcated, and the sooner we would have that peace which would leave the States free indeed to regulate their own domestic affairs. I believe on the part of our citizens of the Southern States—the better part of them—there is a disposition to be law-abiding, and to do no violence either to individuals or to the laws existing. But do they do right in ignoring the existence of violence and bloodshed in resistance to constituted authority? I sympathize with their prostrate condition, and would do all in my power to relieve them—acknowledging that in some instances they have had most trying governments to live under, and very oppressive ones in the way of taxation for nominal improvements not giving benefits equal to the hardships imposed—but can they proclaim themselves entirely irresponsible for this condition? They cannot. Violence has been rampant in some localities, and has either been justified or denied by those who could have prevented it. The theory is even raised that there is to be no further interference on the part of the General Government to protect citizens within a State where the State authorities fail to give protection. This is a great mistake. While I remain Executive, all the laws of Congress and the provisions of the Constitution, including the recent amendments added thereto, will be enforced with rigor; but with regret that they should have added one jot or tittle to executive duties or powers. Let there be fairness in the discussion of southern questions, the advocates of both, or all political parties, giving honest, truthful reports of occurrences, condemning the wrong and upholding the right, and soon all will be well. Under existing conditions the negro votes the Republican ticket, because he knows his friends are of that party. Many a good citizen votes the opposite, not because he agrees with the great principles of State which separate parties, but because, generally, he is opposed to negro rule. This is a most delusive cry. Treat the negro as a citizen and a voter—as he is and must remain—and soon parties will be divided, not on the color line, but on principle. Then we shall have no complaint of sectional interference.

The report of the Attorney-General contains valuable recommendations relating to the administration of justice in the courts of the United States, to which I invite your attention.

I respectfully suggest to Congress the propriety of increasing the number of judicial districts in the United States to eleven, the present number being nine, and the creation of two additional judgeships. The territory to be traversed by the circuit judges is so great, and the business of the courts so steadily increasing, that it is growing more and more impossible for them to keep up with the business requiring their attention. Whether this would involve the necessity of adding two more justices of the Supreme Court to the present number I submit to the judgment of Congress.

The attention of Congress is invited to the report of the Secretary of the Interior and to the legislation asked for by him. The domestic interests of the people are more intimately connected with this Department than with either of the other Departments of the Government. Its duties have been added to from time to time, until they have become so onerous that without the most perfect system and order it will be impossible for the Secretary of the Interior to keep trace of all official transactions having his sanction and done in his name, and for which he is held personally responsible.

The policy adopted for the management of Indian affairs, known as the peace policy, has been adhered to with most beneficial results. It is confidently hoped that a few years more will relieve our frontiers from danger of Indian depredations.

I commend the recommendation of the Secretary for the extension of the homestead laws to the Indians and for some sort of territorial government for the Indian Territory. A great majority of the Indians occupying this Territory are believed yet to be incapable of maintaining their rights against the more civilized and enlightened white man. Any territorial form of government given them, therefore, should protect them in their homes and property for a period of at least twenty years, and before its final adoption should be ratified by a majority of those affected.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior, herewith attached, gives much interesting statistical information, which I abstain from giving an abstract of, but refer you to the report itself.

The act of Congress providing the oath which pensioners must subscribe to before drawing their pensions cuts off from this bounty a few survivors of the war of 1812 residing in the Southern States. I recommend the restoration of this bounty to all such. The number of persons whose names would thus be restored to the list of pensioners is not large. They are all old persons, who could have taken no part in the rebellion, and the services for which they were awarded pensions were in defense of the whole country.

The report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, herewith, contains suggestions of much interest to the general public, and refers to the approaching centennial and the part his Department is ready to take in it. I feel that the nation at large is interested in having this exposition a success, and commend to Congress such action as will secure a greater general interest in it. Already many foreign nations have signified their intention to be represented at it, and it may be expected that every civilized nation will be represented.

The rules adopted to improve the civil service of the Government have been adhered to as closely as has been practicable with the opposition with which they meet. The effect, I believe, has been beneficial on the whole, and has tended to the elevation of the service. But it is impracticable to maintain them without direct and positive support of Congress. Generally the support which this reform receives is from those who give it their support only to find fault when the rules are apparently departed from. Removals from office without preferring charges against parties removed are frequently cited as departures from the rules adopted, and the retention of those against whom charges are made by irresponsible persons, and without good grounds, is also often condemned as a violation of them. Under these circumstances, therefore, I announce that if Congress adjourns without positive legislation on the subject of "civil-service reform" I will regard such action as a disapproval of the system, and will abandon it except so far as to require examinations for certain appointees to determine their fitness. Competitive examinations will be abandoned.

The gentlemen who have given their services, without compensation, as members of the board to devise rules and regulations for the government of the civil service of the country, have shown much zeal and earnestness in their work, and to them as well as to myself it will be a source of mortification if it is to be thrown away. But I repeat that it is impossible to carry this system to a successful issue without general approval and assistance, and positive law to support it.

I have stated that three elements of prosperity to the nation, capital, labor, skilled and unskilled, and products of the soil, still remain with us. To direct the employment of these is a problem deserving the most serious attention of Congress. If employment can be given to all the labor offering itself, prosperity necessarily follows. I have expressed the opinion, and repeat it, that the first requisite to the accomplishment of this end is the substitution of a sound currency in place of one of a fluctuating value. This secured, there are many interests that might be fostered to the great profit of both labor and capital. How to induce capital to employ labor is the question. The subject of cheap transportation has occupied the attention of Congress. Much new light on this question will without doubt be given by the committee appointed by the last Congress to investigate and report upon this subject.

A revival of ship-building, and particularly of iron-steamship building, is of vast importance to our national prosperity. The United States is now paying over $100,000,000 per annum for freights and passage on foreign ships—to be carried abroad and expended in the employment and support of other peoples—beyond a fair percentage of what should go to foreign vessels, estimating on the tonnage and travel of each, respectively. It is to be regretted that this disparity in the carrying trade exists, and to correct it I would be willing to see a great departure from the usual course of Government in supporting what might usually be termed private enterprise. I would not suggest as a remedy direct subsidy to American steamship lines, but I would suggest the direct offer of ample compensation for carrying the mails between Atlantic sea-board cities and the Continent on American-owned and American-built steamers, and would extend this liberality to vessels carrying the mails to South American states and to Central America and Mexico; and would pursue the same policy from our Pacific sea-ports to foreign sea-ports on the Pacific. It might be demanded that vessels built for this service should come up to a standard fixed by legislation in tonnage, speed, and all other qualities looking to the possibility of Government requiring them at some time for war purposes. The right also of taking possession of them in such emergency should be guarded.

I offer these suggestions believing them worthy of consideration in all seriousness, affecting all sections and all interests alike. If anything better can be done to direct the country into a course of general prosperity, no one will be more ready than I to second the plan.

Forwarded herewith will be found the report of the commissioners appointed under an act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, to wind up the affairs of the District government. It will be seen from the report that the net debt of the District of Columbia, less securities on hand and available, is:

Bonded debt issued prior to July 1, 1874		$8,883,940 43
3.65 bonds, act of Congress June 20, 1874		2,088,168 73
Certificates of the board of audit		4,770,558 45
		15,742,667 61
Less special-improvement assessments (chargeable to private property) in excess of any demand against such assessments	$1,614,054 37
Less Chesapeake and Ohio Canal bonds	75,000 00
And Washington and Alexandria Railroad bonds	59,000 00
In the hands of the commissioners of the sinking fund		1,748,054 37
Leaving actual debt, less said assets		13,994,613 24

In addition to this there are claims preferred against the government of the District amounting in the estimated aggregate reported by the board of audit to $3,147,787.48, of which the greater part will probably be rejected. This sum can with no more propriety be included in the debt account of the District government than can the thousands of claims against the General Government be included as a portion of the national debt. But the aggregate sum thus stated includes something more than the funded debt chargeable exclusively to the District of Columbia. The act of Congress of June 20, 1874, contemplates an apportionment between the United States Government and the District of Columbia, in respect of the payment of the principal and interest of the 3.65 bonds. Therefore, in computing with precision the bonded debt of the District, the aggregate sums above stated as respects 3.65 bonds now issued, the outstanding certificates of the board of audit, and the unadjusted claims pending before that board should be reduced to the extent of the amount to be apportioned to the United States Government in the manner indicated in the act of Congress of June 20, 1874.

I especially invite your attention to the recommendations of the commissioners of the sinking fund relative to the ambiguity of the act of June 20, 1874, the interest on the District bonds, and the consolidation of the indebtedness of the District.

I feel much indebted to the gentlemen who consented to leave their private affairs and come from a distance to attend to the business of this District, and for the able and satisfactory manner in which it has been conducted. I am sure their services will be equally appreciated by the entire country.

It will be seen from the accompanying full report of the board of health that the sanitary condition of the District is very satisfactory.

In my opinion the District of Columbia should be regarded as the grounds of the national capital, in which the entire people are interested. I do not allude to this to urge generous appropriations to the District, but to draw the attention of Congress, in framing a law for the government of the District, to the magnificent scale on which the city was planned by the founders of the Government; the manner in which, for ornamental purposes, the reservations, streets, and avenues were laid out, and the proportion of the property actually possessed by the General Government. I think the proportion of the expenses of the government and improvements to be borne by the General Government, the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and the county should be carefully and equitably defined.

In accordance with section 3, act approved June 23, 1874, I appointed a board to make a survey of the mouth of the Mississippi River, with a view to determine the best method of obtaining and maintaining a depth of water sufficient for the purposes of commerce, &c.; and in accordance with an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a commission of engineers to investigate and report a permanent plan for the reclamation of the alluvial basin of the Mississippi River subject to inundation," I appointed a commission of engineers. Neither board has yet completed its labors. When their reports are received, they will be forwarded to Congress without delay.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 7, 1874.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, pursuant to the second section of the act of Congress approved the 23d of March last, entitled "An act to authorize the President to accept for citizens of the United States the jurisdiction of certain tribunals in the Ottoman dominions and Egypt, established or to be established under the authority of the Sublime Porte and of the government of Egypt," the President is authorized, for the benefit of American citizens residing in the Turkish dominions, to accept the recent law of the Ottoman Porte ceding the right of foreigners possessing immovable property in said dominions.

And whereas, pursuant to the authority thus in me vested, I have authorized George H. Boker, accredited as minister-resident of the United States to the Ottoman Porte, to sign, on behalf of this Government, the protocol accepting the law aforesaid of the said Ottoman Porte, which protocol and law are, word for word, as follows:

[Translation.]

The United States of America and His Majesty the Sultan being desirous to establish by a special act the agreement entered upon between them regarding the admission of American citizens to the right of holding real estate granted to foreigners by the law promulgated on the 7th of Sepher, 1284, (January 18th, 1867,) have authorized:

The President of the United States of America, George H. Boker, minister-resident of the United States of America near the Sublime Porte, and

His Imperial Majesty the Sultan, His Excellency A. Aarifi Pasha, his minister of foreign affairs, to sign the protocol which follows:

Protocol.

The law granting foreigners the right of holding real estate does not interfere with the immunities specified by the treaties, and which will continue to protect the person and the movable property of foreigners who may become owners of real estate.

As the exercise of this right of possessing real property may induce foreigners to establish themselves in larger numbers in the Ottoman empire, the imperial government thinks it proper to anticipate and to prevent the difficulties to which the application of this law may give rise in certain localities. Such is the object of the arrangements which follow.

The domicile of any person residing upon the Ottoman soil being inviolable, and as no one can enter it without the consent of the owner, except by virtue of orders emanating from competent authority, and with the assistance of the magistrate or functionary invested with the necessary powers, the residence of foreigners is inviolable on the same principle, in conformity with the treaties, and the agents of the public force cannot enter it without the assistance of the consul or of the delegate of the consul of the power on which the foreigner depends.

By residence we understand the house of inhabitation and its dependencies: that is to say, the out-houses, courts, gardens, and neighboring inclosures, to the exclusion of all other parts of the property.

In the localities distant by less than a nine hours' journey from the consular residence the agents of a public force cannot enter the residence of a foreigner without the assistance of a consul, as was before said.

On his part the consul is bound to give his immediate assistance to the local authority, so as not to let six hours elapse between the moment at which he may be informed and the moment of his departure, or the departure of his delegate, so that the action of the authorities may never be suspended more than twenty-four hours.

In the localities distant by nine hours or more than nine hours of travel from the residence of the consular agent, the agents of the public force may, on the request of the local authority, and with the assistance of three members of the council of the elders of the commune, enter into the residence of a foreigner, without being assisted by the consular agent, but only in case of urgency, and for the search and the proof of the crime of murder, of attempt at murder, of incendiarism, of armed robbery either with infraction or by night in an inhabited house, of armed rebellion, and of the fabrication of counterfeit money; and this entry may be made whether the crime was committed by a foreigner or by an Ottoman subject, and whether it took place in the residence of a foreigner or not in his residence, or any other place.

These regulations are not applicable but to the parts of the real estate which constitute the residence, as it has been heretofore defined.

Beyond the residence, the action of the police shall be exercised freely and without reserve; but in case a person charged with crime or offense should be arrested, and the accused shall be a foreigner, the immunities attached to his person shall be observed in respect to him.

The functionary or the officer charged with the accomplishment of a domiciliary visit, in the exceptional circumstances determined before, and the members of the council of elders who shall assist him, will be obliged to make out a procès-verbal of the domiciliary visit, and to communicate it immediately to the superior authority under whose jurisdiction they are, and the latter shall transmit it to the nearest consular agent without delay.

A special regulation will be promulgated by the Sublime Porte to determine the mode of action of the local police in the several cases provided heretofore.

In localities more distant than nine hours' travel from the residence of the consular agent, in which the law of the judicial organization of the valayet may be in force, foreigners shall be tried without the assistance of the consular delegate by the council of elders fulfilling the function of justices of the peace, and by the tribunal of the canton, as well for actions not exceeding one thousand piasters as for offenses entailing a fine of five hundred piasters only at the maximum.

Foreigners shall have, in any case, the right of appeal to the tribunal of the arrondissement against the judgments issued as above stated, and the appeal shall be followed and judged with the assistance of the consul, in conformity with the treaties.

The appeal shall always suspend the execution of a sentence.

In all cases the forcible execution of the judgments, issued on the conditions determined heretofore, shall not take place without the co-operation of the consul or of his delegate.

The imperial government will enact a law which shall determine the rules of procedure to be observed by the parties in the application of the preceding regulations.

Foreigners, in whatever locality they may be, may freely submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the council of elders or of the tribunal of the canton, without the assistance of the consul, in cases which do not exceed the competency of these councils or tribunals, reserving always the right of appeal before the tribunal of the arrondissement, where the case may be brought and tried with the assistance of the consul or his delegate.

The consent of a foreigner to be tried as above stated, without the assistance of his consul, shall always be given in writing, and in advance of all procedure.

It is well understood that all these restrictions do not concern cases which have for their object questions of real estate, which shall be tried and determined under the conditions established by the law.

The right of defense and the publicity of the hearings shall be assured in all cases to the foreigners who may appear before the Ottoman tribunals, as well as to Ottoman subjects.

The preceding dispositions shall remain in force until the revision of the ancient treaties, a revision which the Sublime Porte reserves to itself the right to bring about hereafter by an understanding between it and the friendly powers.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the protocol, and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done at Constantinople the 11th of August, 1874.

Law conceding to foreigners the right of holding real estate in the Ottoman empire.

Imperial rescript.—Let it be done in conformity with the contents. 7 Sepher, 1284, (January 18, 1867.)

With the object of developing the prosperity of the country, to put an end to the difficulties, to the abuses, and to the uncertainties which have arisen on the subject of the right of foreigners to hold property in the Ottoman empire, and to complete, in accordance with a precise regulation, the safeguards which are due to financial interests and to administrative action, the following legislative enactments have been promulgated by the order of His Imperial Majesty the Sultan:

ARTICLE I. Foreigners are admitted, by the same privilege as Ottoman subjects, and without any other restriction, to enjoy the right of holding real estate, whether in the city or the country, throughout the empire, with the exception of the province of the Hédjaz, by submitting themselves to the laws and the regulations which govern Ottoman subjects, as is hereafter stated.

This arrangement does not concern subjects of Ottoman birth who have changed their nationality, who shall be governed in this matter by a special law.

ART. II. Foreigners, proprietors of real estate in town or in country, are in consequence placed upon terms of equality with Ottoman subjects in all things that concern their landed property.

The legal effect of this equality is—

1st. To oblige them to conform to all the laws and regulations of the police or of the municipality which govern at present, or may govern hereafter, the enjoyment, the transmission, the alienation, and the hypothecation of landed property.

2d. To pay all charges and taxes, under whatever form or denomination they may be, that are levied, or may be levied hereafter, upon city or country property.

3d. To render them directly amenable to the Ottoman civil tribunals in all questions relating to landed property, and in all real actions, whether as plaintiffs or as defendants, even when either party is a foreigner. In short, they are in all things to hold real estate by the same title, on the same condition, and under the same forms as Ottoman owners, and without being able to avail themselves of their personal nationality, except under the reserve of the immunities attached to their persons and their movable goods, according to the treaties.

ART. III. In case of the bankruptcy of a foreigner possessing real estate, the assignees of the bankrupt may apply to the authorities and to the Ottoman civil tribunals requiring the sale of the real estate possessed by the bankrupt, and which by its nature and according to law is responsible for the debts of the owner.

The same course shall be followed when a foreigner shall have obtained against another foreigner owning real estate a judgment of condemnation before a foreign tribunal.

For the execution of this judgment against the real estate of his debtor he shall apply to the competent Ottoman authorities, in order to obtain the sale of that real estate which is responsible for the debts of the owner; and this judgment shall be executed by the Ottoman authorities and tribunals only after they have decided that the real estate of which the sale is required really belongs to the category of that property which may be sold for the payment of debt.

ART. IV. Foreigners have the privilege to dispose, by donation or by testament, of that real estate of which such disposition is permitted by law.

As to that real estate of which they may not have disposed, or of which the law does not permit them to dispose by gift or testament, its succession shall be governed in accordance with Ottoman law.

ART. V. All foreigners shall enjoy the privileges of the present law as soon as the powers on which they depend shall agree to the arrangements proposed by the Sublime Porte for the exercise of the right to hold real estate.

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States of America, have caused the said protocol and law to be made public, for the information and guidance of citizens of the United States.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this twenty-ninth day of October, [SEAL.] in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, and of the Independence of the United States of America the ninety-ninth.

U. S. GRANT.

By the President:
HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

Mr. Campbell to Mr. Fish.

UNITED STATES NORTHERN BOUNDARY COMMISSION,
Washington, December 2, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the information of the Department, a preliminary report and sketch from Major W. J. Twining, United States Engineers, chief astronomer of the commission, showing the progress of the survey of the boundary during the past season.

From this report it will be seen that the survey of the boundary-line defined in the treaty of 1818 has been completed, and connected (on the summit of the Rocky Mountains) with the eastern terminus to the boundary-line from the Pacific Ocean defined in the treaty of 1846. The whole boundary-line between the United States and British possessions has now been established, with the exception of the boundary between British Columbia and Alaska.

The United States commission and the British commission are now engaged in working out the results of their field-operations, for the purpose of preparing the final joint maps necessary to a proper representation of the boundary-line and the territories adjacent thereto.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL,
Commissioner Northern Boundary Survey.

Hon. HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

Major Twining to Mr. Campbell.

UNITED STATES NORTHERN BOUNDARY COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., December 1, 1874.

SIR: In answer to your request, I respectfully submit a brief statement of the work performed by the commission during the past summer.

During the summer of 1873 the boundary was surveyed and marked from the Red River of the North west to longitude 106° 12′. For a distance of ninety miles the marks were of a temporary nature, and are to be replaced by permanent monuments. This arrangement resulted from a difference of opinion which existed at that time in regard to the true definition of the forty-ninth parallel of latitude.

During the winter of 1873–'74 the surveys east of the Red River were completed to the Lake of the Woods, including the shore-line of that lake so far east as the Rainy River.

During the present season the work has been executed in the same manner as heretofore, under the agreement made last year between the chief astronomers of the United States and British commissions. This agreement was to the effect that the officers of the United States were to determine astronomical stations at intervals of forty miles, and to survey a belt of territory five miles wide south of the parallel, the English to determine a similar series of astronomical stations and to survey an equal belt of topography north of the line.

The distance remaining to be surveyed during the present year was three hundred and fifty-eight miles, from longitude 106° 12′ to longitude 114° 05′. I organized the parties in Saint Paul, Minnesota, on the 1st of June, and proceeded, by way of the Northern Pacific Railroad and the Missouri River, to Fort Buford. Thence, traveling by land, the advanced working parties reached the line at the initial point of this year's operations on the 1st of July.

The shortness of the season, and the immense distance to be traveled after the work should be completed, required that it should be finished early in September. With this object in view, the working parties were pushed to the utmost limit of their endurance, and by the 1st of September the eight astronomical stations assigned to the United States commission had been determined (by one party) and the line had been connected with the last station of the northwestern boundary, at the summit of the Rocky Mountains. Full details of the survey have been given in the preliminary reports from this office. Without recapitulation, I will only say that the results have been in every respect satisfactory.

The commission returned to Saint Paul by way of the Missouri River and the Northern Pacific Railroad, making the distance from Fort Benton to Bismarck, (twelve hundred miles,) in open boats, in eighteen days. The men were discharged on the 5th of October.

Thus in four months this expedition accomplished a journey of thirty-seven hundred miles, nine hundred of which was by land, and twelve hundred by water, in open boats, besides surveying and marking three hundred and fifty-eight miles of the boundary-line.

The topographical parties have been continuously in the field, both winter and summer, from the 1st of June, 1873, until the present time, with the exception of two months in the spring of 1874. They have demonstrated by experience that instrumental work can be done in that high latitude, even in the most rigorous part of the winter, where the country is wooded. On the open plains such exposure would be, beyond question, exceedingly dangerous.

The limits of this report will allow only a very brief statement of the general character of the country passed over.

That portion crossed by the part of the line surveyed during the present year was found to be an open plain, entirely destitute of timber, but easily practicable for wagon-trains, except in the vicinity of Frenchman's Creek, and the crossing of Milk River, where wide detours had to be made to avoid the bad lands.

From longitude 106° to the crossing of Milk River the country cannot be called attractive. The rain-fall is small, and water consequently scarce during the summer months. The soil is alkaline, and produces mostly sage-brush and cactus.

From the Sweet Grass Hills to the Rocky Mountains its character is entirely changed. The rain-fall appears to be ample. The belt along the foot of the mountains, in addition to scenery of rare beauty, presents to the eye of the practical man the more solid advantage of an unsurpassed fertility. Northwestern Montana is still the range of immense herds of buffaloes, whose numbers, contrary to the commonly-received opinion, are constantly increasing. This region is the country of the Blackfoot and Piegan tribes of Indians. It is also the debatable ground of the North Assinaboines, the Gros Ventres of the prairie, and the River Crows, while an occasional war-party of Sioux may be found as far northwest as the Sweet Grass Hills. With the exception of the Sioux, these tribes appear to be peaceably enough disposed.

W. J. TWINING,
Captain Engineers, Chief Astronomer.

ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, Esq.,
Commissioner Northern Boundary.

Mr. CARPENTER. I move that the message be laid upon the table and printed, together with the accompanying documents.

The motion was agreed to.

ANNUAL REPORTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the finances; which, on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate the annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency, in compliance with the provisions of section 61 of the national-bank act; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate the annual report of the Attorney-General, showing the operations of the Department of Justice for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at two o'clock and forty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 7, 1874.

This being the day designated by the Constitution for the meeting of Congress, the members of the House of Representatives of the Forty-third Congress assembled in their Hall for their second session.

At twelve o'clock m. the Speaker, Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE, a member from the State of Maine, called the House to order.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We come to Thee, O God, with adoration and thanksgiving. Thou art upon the throne; upon Thee the nations depend. In Thee we live. We thank Thee for life preserved and for the kind providence that again brings us together in the enjoyment of health both of body and of mind. We confess our sins and draw nigh with confidence to God because Thou art the God of pardons. O blot out all our transgressions and grant us Thy peace.

We seek Thy blessing, O Lord, as we enter upon these new responsibilities. Lift upon our land, upon our Government, and upon all our people the light of Thy countenance. Guide, we pray Thee, the Executive of this great nation, enduing him with heavenly wisdom, Give unto the members of his Cabinet Thy divine spirit. Control, we beseech Thee, our Senators, bestowing upon them heavenly wisdom. May our judges be clothed with righteousness. And remember in mercy these Thy servants, O Lord, blessing them in their persons, in their families, in their social relations, and in these great responsibilities which meet them day by day. We pray that Thou wouldst give unto them power over their own hearts, that Thou wouldst control them by Thy divine spirit; that Thou wouldst preserve them in their integrity in the midst of temptation, and give them consciences void of offense toward God and toward man.

Remember our great land, O God, in all its interests, that our garners may be full, yielding all manner of fruit; that our sheep may bring forth thousands and tens of thousands; that our oxen may be strong to labor; that our commerce and the industries of the nation may all be promoted; that education and religion may be advanced; that the press may be purified and made an engine of great power for good in our land; and that all that pertains to the well-being of this nation may be under Thy divine guidance; that there may be no complaining in our streets, and ours may be that righteousness which exalts a nation and the blessedness of that people whose God is the Lord.

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

The SPEAKER. This being the time fixed by the Constitution for the opening of the second session of the Forty-third Congress the Clerk of the House will call the roll of Members to ascertain whether a quorum is in attendance, and will also call the Delegates from the various Territories.

The SPEAKER. The roll-call shows the presence of two-hundred and forty members—more than a quorum of the House.

SWEARING IN OF NEW MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the roll of members-elect (to fill vacancies caused by resignation and otherwise) whose credentials have been forwarded and are now on file.

The roll was called, and Mr. L. CASS CARPENTER of South Carolina in place of Mr. Robert B. Elliott, Mr. SIMEON B. CHITTENDEN of New York in place of Mr. Stewart L. Woodford, Mr. WILLIAM E. FINCK of Ohio in place of Mr. Hugh J. Jewett, and Mr. RICHARD SCHELL of New York in place of the late David B. Mellish, presented themselves and were duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House a quorum of the Senate had assembled and that body was ready to proceed to business; and further, that the Senate had passed a resolution for the appointment of a committee on its part to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States to inform him that a quorum of each House has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make, and that the Senate had appointed Mr. CONKLING of New York and Mr. THURMAN of Ohio the committee on its part.

MESSAGE TO THE SENATE.

Mr. GARFIELD submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, The Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared, and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed on the part of the House, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of both Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

Mr. MAYNARD. Such committee, we have just been notified, has been appointed on the part of the Senate, and we should therefore recognize that fact in our resolution.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it will be journalized accordingly.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. DAWES of Massachusetts, Mr. HALE of New York, and Mr. BECK of Kentucky as the committee on the part of the House.

JURISDICTION OF CRIMINAL COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PHELPS. I send to the desk a bill which I ask unanimous consent of the House to introduce for consideration at this time. I would ask the courtesy, if any member has objections to its consideration after the reading, that I may be allowed three minutes in which to state the scope and object of the amendment which it contains.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] asks unanimous consent to introduce a bill for consideration now.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair—whether it is the custom of the House to present any business before the reception of the President's message? If it is, then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey requires unanimous consent.

Mr. NEGLEY. Is it not proper to call for the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The usage is as indicated by the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts, not to present any business, but to wait until the joint committee appointed to wait upon the President has been heard from. The usage is to that effect, and the last time this question arose the House took a recess to wait for the report of the committee appointed to wait upon the President.

Mr. COX. Suppose we have the title of the bill read, and then perhaps there will be no objection from any quarter.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the bill will be read by its title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the criminal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1874.

Be it enacted, &c., That the second section of an act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the criminal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1874, be, and hereby is, so amended as to read:

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the thirty-third section of the judiciary act of 1789 shall apply in all cases, except in actions for libel, to courts created by act of Congress in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Is that bill before the House?

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I object, unless it is referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

RECESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move the House take a recess for twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. That will hardly be sufficient time, if the House is to wait for the report of the committee to wait upon the President, and the gentleman from Ohio had better suggest a longer time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move, then, that the House take a recess of an hour.

The motion was agreed to; and (at twenty-five minutes to one o'clock p. m.) the House took a recess for an hour.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The recess having expired,

Mr. DAWES, from the committee appointed on the part of the House to join a like committee on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House had assembled, and that the two Houses were ready to proceed to business, reported that the committee had performed that duty, and that the President had informed them that he would immediately send a message in writing to the two Houses.

Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, Private Secretary of the President, being announced at the bar of the House, said:

Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the House of Representatives a message in writing.

The SPEAKER. The message of the President of the United States will be read.

The Clerk read the message, (which is printed in the record of the proceedings of the Senate.)

Mr. DAWES. I move that the message be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that, with the accompanying documents, it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I also offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed twenty thousand extra copies of the President's annual message for the use of this House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred, under the law, to the Joint Committee on Printing.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, ordered to be printed, and made a special order for Tuesday, December 15, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve all points of order on this bill.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3819) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, ordered to be printed, and made a special order for Wednesday, December 16, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. RANDALL. Can points of order be reserved against all these bills together?

The SPEAKER. They must be reserved against each bill separately, as separate entries must be made upon the Journal.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I reserve all points of order upon this bill.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3820) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, ordered to be printed, and made a special order for Thursday, December 17, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. ARCHER. I reserve all points of order on this bill.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, ordered to be printed, and made a special order for Friday, December 18, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. ARCHER. I reserve all points of order on this bill.

POST-OFFICE SCALES.

Mr. TYNER. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to ask that, by unanimous consent, I have leave to report, for present consideration, a bill making an appropriation to enable the Postmaster-General to carry into effect the law requiring the prepayment of postage on newspapers, approved June 25, 1874.

Mr. COX. Does the bill have any reference to the rates of postage?

Mr. TYNER. Not at all.

Mr. COX. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for information, after which objections, if any, to its present consideration, will be in order.

Mr. TYNER. I suggest that the Clerk read also the letter accompanying the bill.

The bill was read. It appropriates the sum of $30,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of scales for the use of the Post-Office Department.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, APPOINTMENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November —, 1874.

SIR: The necessity for prompt action by Congress, in appropriating the necessary funds for the purchase of scales to enable this Department to carry into effect the law which requires the weighing of newspapers in bulk, on and after January next, it is hoped will be early brought to the attention of Congress.

From the best accessible data for estimates $30,000 will be required for platform and counter scales, independent of the estimates for letter-balances for current supplies.

Be pleased to give this your early attention.

Respectfully,

MARSHALL JEWELL.

Hon. J. A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering this bill at this time? The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the House.

Mr. COX. I do not object to the passage of this bill, but I would like to say one thing: If prepayment of postage on newspapers must be enforced, Congress should amend the act, so as to allow the postage on all subscriptions taken before the law goes into effect to be paid at the destination of the paper, as heretofore, allowing no unpaid paper or printed matter to go from a post-office from and after the day such law shall take effect. This will enable publishers and patrons to close their accounts with no loss to any one.

I have prepared a bill to amend the Post-Office appropriation bill of June 23 last, so as to allow the postage on newspapers and publications referred to in the fifth and sixth sections of that bill to be paid at the destination of the mail-matter where the subscription was taken, prior to the 1st of January, 1875. Unless some such law be passed, there will be a great deal of trouble in the newspaper and publication offices of the country, and I hope the modification will be made before the 1st of January next. I hold in my hand a bill designed to effect that purpose.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. COX. The regular order of business is that I am on the floor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. What is the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. TYNER] is entitled to the floor, and the Chair understands that he has yielded to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. TYNER. I must notify my friend from New York that I shall cut his speech short. I will hear what he has to say, if he will be very brief.

Mr. COX. I have been used to being cut short in this House; but perhaps in future I shall have a longer time, and I may treat the gentleman from Indiana more liberally, if he is here.

Mr. TYNER. But I shall not be here.

Mr. COX. The gentleman, then, was cut short before his time.

Mr. TYNER. You are right, sir.

Mr. COX. I want to call the attention of the House and the country to this matter. I desire that the committee shall consider the amendment to the law which I suggest, which is one that will save an immense amount of trouble to the publishers of newspapers and others.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana whether it would not be better to amend his bill by inserting the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary." The bill, as he offers it, appropriates absolutely $30,000. A less sum may be needed.

Mr. TYNER. If the gentleman makes a point on that, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SPEER. Then I suggest that the words I have indicated be added.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYNER. I am satisfied that the House is willing to pass this bill, and I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill (H. R. No. 3822) received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. TYNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I now desire unanimous consent to introduce, for reference to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, a bill to amend the Post-Office appropriation act of June 23, 1874, so as to allow the postage on newspapers and publications referred to in sections 5 and 6 to be paid at the destination of the mail-matter where subscriptions were taken prior to the 1st of January, 1875.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3824) was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. STARKWEATHER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3823) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, ordered to be printed, and made the special order for December 22, after the morning hour.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to reserve all points of order on that bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I demand the regular order of business. I think the rules require that the States shall be called for bills and joint resolutions.

The SPEAKER. If the regular order be demanded, that is the regular order of business.

Mr. KELLEY. I must insist on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let us introduce bills and resolutions for reference.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to give notice that on Monday next, after the morning hour, or as soon thereafter as I may be recognized by the Speaker, I shall move that the rules be suspended, so as to enable me to introduce and have passed the bill which has been read.

Mr. KELLEY. I insist on my motion.

The question was taken on Mr. KELLEY's motion, and it was agreed to; and thereupon (at two o'clock and fifty-six minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ARTHUR: The petition of W. F. Maddux, of Covington, Kentucky, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BUFFINTON: The petition of citizens of Westport, Bristol County, Massachusetts, for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Westport, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts: The petition of 2,000 citizens of Massachusetts, for the relief and indemnification of William H. Steele, of Gloucester, Massachusetts, for the destruction of his schooner, Samantha A. Steele, at St. Helena Island, by the Federal forces, in 1863, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, the petition of Nancy T. Eastman, widow, mother of George W. Parsons, late a private in Company F, First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: Petitions from citizens of Alabama, Arizona, Massachusetts, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, Virginia, and Wisconsin, for the completion of the Washington National Monument by appropriation from the public Treasury, to the Select Committee on the Washington National Monument.

By Mr. FARWELL: The petition of publishers of periodicals, for the reduction of postage on periodicals to two cents per pound, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GUNCKEL: The petition of Ernst Rost, for removal of charge of desertion, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Susan M. Seebohm, of Dayton, Ohio, for relief, to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the petition of Michael O'Brien, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KENDALL: The petition of Max Rosenberg, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POTTER: The petition of Jeremiah T. Hallett, of New York City, for increase of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia: The petition of A. Bostick, of Halifax County, Virginia, for compensation for property taken by Federal troops in April, 1865, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Ira Hurt, sr., of Franklin County, Virginia, for compensation for cotton destroyed by the Federal Army in 1865, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Isabella W. Cunningham, of Pittsylvania County, Virginia, for compensation for cotton destroyed by the Federal Army in 1865, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 8, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

Hon. JOHN W. JOHNSTON, from the State of Virginia; Hon. A. S. MERRIMON and Hon. MATT W. RANSOM, from the State of North Carolina; Hon. WILLIAM SPRAGUE, from the State of Rhode Island; and Hon. JOHN P. STOCKTON, from the State of New Jersey, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, in compliance with the act of July 12, 1870, containing a list of property belonging to the United States in charge of that Department; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico, concerning land grant to Ignacio de Roival and Jacinto Pelaez, being private land claim No. 92, in Santa Fé County; also, report on land granted for the cañon del Rio Colorado tract, being private land claim No. 93—land grant to Antonio Elias Armenta, and others, in Taos County; also, report concerning land granted to Salvador Vernal and Tomas Lopez, being private land claim No. 94, in Colfax County, all in said Territory; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of Rosa Ward, mother of Andrew Ward, a soldier in the late war, praying for a pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Mary E. Cane, mother of Martin Cane, late a private of Company B, Tenth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, praying for a pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of F. M. Blount, praying the passage of a law relieving him from loss by reason of having taken a counterfeit five hundred dollar United States note as a clerk in the office of the assistant treasurer at Chicago, Illinois; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of the publishers of the Little Corporal and other periodicals, praying an amendment of the postal law, fixing the rate on periodicals, &c., at two cents per pound, and authorizing prepayment of postage by stamps or stamped wrappers; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of William G. Ford, praying compensation for use and occupancy by the Government of a certain building owned by him in Memphis, Tennessee, from 1862 to 1865; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Jonathan G. Lang, late of Company B, First United States Dragoons, praying for a pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PRATT. I present the petition of Nathan Upham, late corporal of Company G, Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension. The petition is accompanied with evidence, which I ask may be laid, with the petition, on the table, until the appointment of the Committee on Pensions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. HARVEY presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, signed by the governor, secretary of state, and others, praying the passage of House bill No. 3281, to amend the act entitled "An act to amend an act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, approved July 2, 1864;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. STEVENSON presented the petition of Mrs. Elizabeth Carson, of Paris, Bourbon County, Kentucky, praying compensation for commissary and quartermaster stores taken for the use of the United States Government; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Annie Horine, of Jessamine County, Kentucky, praying compensation for commissary stores taken for the use of the United States Government; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CONOVER presented the petition of Salvador Costa, of Tallahassee, Florida, praying compensation for losses sustained by reason of the destruction and use of the sloop Mary Lawrence; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of David Fultz, a citizen of Staunton, Virginia, praying the Senate to reject the nomination of Samuel M. Yost as postmaster of the city of Staunton; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SCOTT. I present the petition of J. B. Lippincott & Co. and others, publishers of Philadelphia, praying that the postage upon periodicals be fixed at two cents per pound; that prepayment by fractional stamps or stamped wrappers, when desired, be authorized, and that the rate on transient matter sent from the office of publication be fixed at two cents per pound. I move that the petition lie on the table to be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, when appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT presented the supplemental petition of William Williams, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, late captain of Company A, First Battalion Pennsylvania Cavalry, praying to be granted a pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 974) to enable the supreme court of the District of Columbia to proceed with its jury business; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 975) to amend section 110 of the act of June 30, 1864, and section 9 of the act of July 13, 1866, imposing taxes upon the circulation of other than national banks; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CAMERON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 976) to promote economy and efficiency in the marine-hospital service; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 977) fixing the times for holding the circuit court of the United States in the districts of California, Oregon, and Nevada; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HARVEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 978) for the relief of homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 979) for the relief of First Lieutenant Henry Jackson, Seventh Cavalry, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 980) fixing the salary of the President of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 981) providing for the construction of a United States telegraph line between the cities of Washington, District of Columbia, and Boston, Massachusetts; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. INGALLS. I have been requested to ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for the relief of William G. Ford. The bill is accompanied by numerous documents and papers. I ask that it lie on the table and be printed, and be referred, with the papers, when the committees are appointed.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 982) for the relief of William G. Ford; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 983) to provide for the transfer of certain causes from the district to the circuit courts of the State of Alabama; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. PRATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 984) to regulate the lien of judgments in the courts of the United States on real estate; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

DELINQUENT OFFICERS—IMPROVEMENT GRANTS.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the following resolution that I ask may be printed, and lie on the table for the present:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the Senate with a detailed statement, commencing with the 30th of June, 1865, and closing with the last fiscal year, showing therein the names of all postmasters, paymasters, quartermasters, commissaries, collectors of internal revenue, collectors of customs, officers of the Freedmen's Bureau, and any other officers or set of officers from whom any sums of money were due at the close of the last fiscal year, and which now remain unpaid; also the names of the sureties of such officers, the penalty of their official bond, the amount due and when due in each case; the total of such sums so due, by whom and from what State such officers were appointed, and whether there are any suits now pending to recover said sums of money, and, if so, against whom, in what courts, and for what amount.

The President is also requested to report the number of acres of the public lands and the amount of bonds and money granted to railroads, canals, or other works of internal improvement, giving therewith the names, dates, and amounts in each case, and also the grand total; also, the number of acres of the public lands and the amount of bonds heretofore granted or voted by Congress to railroads or contemplated railroads for which no certificates or evidences of ownership have been issued, stating in detail the name of the railroad and the amount granted or voted to the same, and the grand totals of such grants.

Mr. President, the information sought is somewhat voluminous, and it may be that there may be some objection to some part of the resolution. Therefore I ask that it lie upon the table and be printed, with a view of being called up at an early day. I now give notice that at an early day I will call it up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is moved that the resolution lie on the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, there is a bill pending between the two Houses relative to the internal-revenue bill and to customs duties, upon a motion made by me at the last session to postpone it until yesterday. A committee of conference had been appointed by the two Houses and agreed on a report, but the House of Representatives disagreed to the report of the committee. Upon examining the rules of the Senate I am at a loss to know whether, under the circumstances, it can be taken up now, or must be postponed until next Monday. I should like to have the judgment of the Chair upon that question. The Secretary has the bill before him. It would expedite the public business, and would give us better time now to examine the details of the bill in a new committee of conference, if we were at once to have a committee appointed; but I am at a loss to know whether, under the rules of the Senate, it would be in order to move to take up the bill now. It is pending here in the Senate, and was postponed until yesterday. It strikes me it does not fall within the rule which makes bills pending between the two Houses in order at the end of six days from the beginning of the session. I ask the decision of the Chair on that question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it would not be in order to act upon the bill now; that the twenty-first joint rule binds the Senate, and prevents action upon any business of the last session until the expiration of six days.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall not question the decision of the Chair, because there is some doubt about the point, but will allow the matter to go over until Monday, when I give notice I will make a motion to take up the bill with a view to have another committee of conference appointed. [After a pause.] If there is no other business, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at twelve o'clock and twenty-seven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 8, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS.

The following additional members appeared: WILLIAM B. SMALL of New Hampshire, ALVAH CROCKER of Massachusetts, THOMAS J. CREAMER of New York, ROBERT HAMILTON of New Jersey, JOHN W. KILLINGER of Pennsylvania, CARLTON B. CURTIS of Pennsylvania, EPHRAIM K. WILSON of Maryland, JOHN P. C. SHANKS of Indiana.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the calling of committees for reports. The morning hour now begins at twelve minutes past twelve o'clock, and reports are first in order from the Select Committee on the Centennial Celebration and the Proposed National Census of 1875.

Mr. KELLEY. That committee is not prepared to report.

AFFAIRS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. POLAND, from the select committee to inquire into the condition of affairs in Arkansas, reported the testimony taken by the committee during the vacation; and the same was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. RANDALL. Not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. It is merely testimony, and cannot be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

BOARD OF AUDIT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 119) to continue the board of audit to examine and audit the unfunded or floating debt of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The joint resolution provides that the board of audit constituted by section 6 of the act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved June 20, 1874, shall be continued until otherwise provided by law, with all the power and duties specified in said section, and with compensation to the members of the board at a rate proportioned according to time to that granted in said act, and payable as therein provided; that the time for presenting claims be extended for the period of thirty days from this date, and that persons having sustained damages to real estate, but failed to present the same to the board of public works, may present the same for audit and allowance within the time above limited as specified in the seventh class of claims mentioned in the said sixth section; provided, that when the title to claims evidenced by certificates of the auditor of the board of public works is involved in suits now pending in any court of competent jurisdiction, such court shall not be ousted of jurisdiction in respect of such question of title; and that after the board of audit shall have ascertained the amount, if any, due upon any such claims, the certificates of said board of audit shall be issued and be convertible in favor only of the person finally adjudged in such court to be entitled thereto, and when said party may, by law, have execution of such judgment or decree.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that bill should be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. If the gentleman will allow me a moment, the board of audit created by the act for the temporary government of the District of Columbia consisted of the First and Second Comptrollers of the Treasury——

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not yield my point of order; I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I think the gentleman will have no objection when I explain. The term of service of that board of audit so created expired on yesterday. The gentleman will see, of course, that it is essential that the work they have almost completed should be completed. It is nothing but a matter of auditing those claims. The members of the board were carefully selected; there was a unanimous sentiment in this House in their favor, I believe. This joint resolution proposes nothing except to provide that for the continuance of the work this board shall go on and continue to audit. The gentleman must see that if this joint resolution shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole it may go over for a week or a fortnight, perhaps for a month; and I do not think he would desire that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The principal objection I have to considering this joint resolution at this time is, that it has not been printed and we do not understand what it is. Let it be again reported.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I hope that will be done.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the gentleman if there ought not to be a provision in this resolution requiring the report of the board to be made to this House not later than the 1st day of February next? According to the joint resolution, as it now reads, it is an indefinite postponement of their report.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The joint resolution was first drawn extending the time no further than the 4th of March next. But with the view that probably this Congress would pass some bill from the committee authorized to report upon the permanent government of the District of Columbia, it was thought better to insert the words "until otherwise provided by law." I have no objection to insert after those words the words "not later than the 1st of February next."

Mr. BECK. If that is done we can then have knowledge of the debt.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think this should go to the Committee of the Whole and be printed.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. If the Chair shall rule that this, being the regular report of a committee, is liable to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] then I will ask that it be printed, and that the committee have leave to call it up for consideration to-morrow morning.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will see that individual rights are here involved to a large extent.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not wish to press it unduly. I will move that it be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and ask that they have leave to report it back to-morrow morning.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask leave to submit an amendment, to be printed with this joint resolution.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have no objection.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided further, That interest on such unaudited claims be reckoned to the date of presentation.

There being no objection, the proposed amendment was ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC MAIL CONTRACT.

Mr. TYNER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a letter of the Attorney-General of the United States to the Postmaster-General, concerning the obligation of the Post-Office Department to continue the contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for an additional monthly mail between San Francisco and China and Japan, under the provisions of the act of June 1, 1872, authorizing such contract; and moved that the same be printed and recommitted.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that can be brought back on a motion to reconsider I desire to prevent it.

The SPEAKER. No legislation can be based upon it.

The motion of Mr. TYNER was then agreed to.

PAY OF NATIONAL-BANK EXAMINERS.

Mr. DURHAM, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3825) amending the act providing a national currency and fixing the compensation of national-bank examiners; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that section 54 of the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, be so amended that the latter clause of the section, after the word "chancery," fixing the compensation of persons authorized to make examinations of national banks, be amended to read as follows: "That all persons appointed to be examiners of national banks shall receive compensation for such examinations as follows: For examining national banks having a capital not exceeding $100,000, $20; those having a capital of from $100,000 to not exceeding $200,000, $25; those having a capital of from $200,000 to not exceeding $300,000, $30; those having a capital of from $300,000 to not exceeding $400,000, $35; those having a capital of from $400,000 to not exceeding $500,000, $40; those having a capital of from $500,000 to not exceeding $600,000, $50; those having a capital exceeding $600,000, $75; which amounts shall be assessed by the Comptroller of the Currency upon, and paid by, the respective associations so examined; and shall be in lieu of the compensation heretofore allowed for making said examinations."

Mr. SPEER. Is the compensation named in this bill for these bank examiners an increase of that allowed by existing law?

Mr. DURHAM. It is not.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I raise the point of order, that this bill, affecting salaries, must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the bill is liable to that point, because it does not propose to take money from the Treasury of the United States, but directs that the bank examiners shall be paid by the banks.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen will examine the present law they will find that under it national-bank examiners are entitled to five dollars a day for making these examinations, together with mileage. For illustration, the examiner of a bank located in my own town may live in the city of Louisville, a distance of one hundred miles from Danville, yet such examiner, when he estimates his mileage, counts it from the city of Washington. So it is all over the Western and Southern States. There is a great deal of difficulty growing out of this fact, and for the purpose of obviating this difficulty the Committee on Banking and Currency have, at the request of the Comptroller of the Currency, prepared this bill, regulating the amount to be allowed by the amount of the capital invested in these various banks. That is the difference between the existing law and the bill now reported.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest to my colleague on the committee [Mr. DURHAM] that the title of the bill be so amended as to read "An act to amend the national-bank act, and fixing the compensation of national-bank examiners."

Mr. DURHAM. I suppose that modification is appropriate.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the title will be amended as suggested.

There was no objection, and the title was amended accordingly.

NATIONAL BANKS IN LIQUIDATION.

Mr. MAYNARD, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3826) to amend the act entitled "The national-bank act;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides in the first section that when any association organized under the national-bank act shall have gone into liquidation and have been closed under the provisions of the forty-second section thereof, and any creditor of such association shall have obtained a judgment against it, and execution thereon shall have been returned unsatisfied, it shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency forthwith, on the application of such judgment creditor, and a certificate from the clerk of the court in which such judgment may have been rendered, setting forth that such judgment has been rendered and that execution thereon has been issued and returned unsatisfied, to appoint a receiver for such association, who shall proceed in the manner provided for receivers under the fiftieth section of said act, and who shall enforce the personal liability of the shareholders in the manner prescribed in said section 50 and in this.

The second section provides that when any association organized under the said act shall have gone into liquidation and have been closed under the provisions of the forty-second section thereof, and no receiver shall have been appointed for the term of two years, or when any association so organized shall have been in the hands of a receiver for the same length of time, the individual liability of the shareholders provided for by the twelfth section of said act may be enforced by any creditor of such association by bill in equity, in the nature of a creditor's bill, brought by such creditor on his own behalf and on behalf of all other creditors of the association, against the shareholders thereof, in any court of the United States having original jurisdiction in equity for the district within which any of the shareholders may reside or be found, or in which such association may have been located or established.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, the nature of this bill is such that I ought, probably, to call the attention of the House to the defect in the present national-bank act which the bill is intended to remedy. For this purpose I will ask the Clerk to read the forty-second section of that act.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 42. And be it further enacted, That any association may go into liquidation and be closed by the vote of its shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock. And whenever such vote shall be taken, it shall be the duty of the board of directors to cause notice of this fact to be certified, under the seal of the association, by its president or cashier, to the Comptroller of the Currency, and publication thereof to be made for a period of two months in a newspaper published in the city of New York, and also in a newspaper published in a city or town in which the association is located, and if no newspaper be there published, then in the newspaper published nearest thereto, that said association is closing up its affairs, and notifying the holders of its notes and other creditors to present the notes and other claims against the association for payment. And at any time after the expiration of one year from the time of the publication of such notice as aforesaid the said association may pay over to the Treasurer of the United States the amount of its outstanding notes in the lawful money of the United States, and take up the bonds which said association has on deposit with the Treasurer for the security of its circulating notes; which bonds shall be assigned to the bank in the manner specified in the nineteenth section of this act, and from that time the outstanding notes of said association shall be redeemed at the Treasury of the United States, and the said association and the shareholders thereof shall be discharged from all liabilities therefor.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will now ask to have the forty-sixth section read as far as I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 46. And be it further enacted, That if any such association shall at any time fail to redeem in the lawful money of the United States any of its circulating notes, when payment thereof shall be lawfully demanded, during the usual hours of business, at the office of such association or at its place of redemption aforesaid, the holder may cause the same to be protested.

Mr. MAYNARD. Read now section 50 as far as I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 50. And be it further enacted, That on becoming satisfied, as specified in this act, that any association has refused to pay its circulating notes as therein mentioned, and is in default, the Comptroller of the Currency may forthwith appoint a receiver, and require of him such bond and security as he shall deem proper, who, under the direction of the Comptroller, shall take possession of the books, records, and assets, of every description, of such association, collect all debts, dues, and claims belonging to such association, and upon the order of a court of record of competent jurisdiction may sell or compound all bad or doubtful debts, and on a like order sell all the real and personal property of such association on such terms as the court shall direct; and may, if necessary to pay the debts of such association, enforce the individual liability of the stockholders provided for by the twelfth section of this act.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, it will be seen from these parts of the national-bank act which have been read that a bank may go into voluntary liquidation, at the option of the shareholders, by providing for the payment of its outstanding notes, but there is no special provision made for its general creditors. There is a provision made by which the holders of the outstanding notes may present them, and, if not paid, have them protested. There is a further provision, made in case the notes are not paid and are protested, that the Comptroller may appoint a receiver to take charge of the assets of the bank, to collect the debts due it, and pay off its obligations, as well as to discharge its notes of circulation. And, if it becomes necessary, the receiver may call upon the shareholders of the bank to pay in, as they are required to do under the twelfth section of the act, an amount equal to their share of stock.

Now, then, the difficulty which has arisen is this—it is not an imaginary one, but an actual one: A bank goes into voluntary liquidation. It provides for the redemption of its notes, so they are redeemed as often and as fast as they are presented; but the Comptroller has held that being done under the act, he has no power to appoint a receiver. The creditors, bringing suit against the bank, getting judgment, and issuing execution, find no assets, and their execution is returned unsatisfied, attempt to reach the shareholders and require them to respond under the provisions of the twelfth section of the act to meet unsatisfied judgments. It has been held by one of the courts of the city of New York that this cannot be done except through and by the appointment of a receiver, and the creditor repelled in attempting to reach the shareholders without the interposition of a receiver by the holding of the Comptroller of the Currency in that regard he had no power to appoint a receiver except in the case of notes not being paid on presentation, is substantially without remedy. It is quite possible the decision of the court in New York, if an appeal has been taken, may be reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States. In the opinion of the Banking and Currency Committee it is not right to keep the creditors waiting and make them incur the expense of settling the construction of the law by a future decision, when it may be settled by legislative enactment. Therefore we provide in the bill which we now offer, consisting of two sections, a twofold remedy. In the first place, where the creditor, in a case like that which I have presented, shall obtain judgment and have execution returned unsatisfied, upon the Comptroller of the Currency being notified to that effect he shall appoint a receiver, whose duty it shall be to proceed against the shareholders and require them to respond according to the provisions of the twelfth section of the national-bank act. That is one section. The other section—the second section—is that a creditor may himself, if there be no receiver, proceed by a general bill against the shareholders of the bank in the name of himself and the other creditors of the bank who may choose to take advantage of it. The bill has been introduced to remedy the evil I have pointed out, and this is the remedy proposed. The committee thought it would be a comparatively simple remedy, and that it would be efficacious, and unless any gentleman desires to raise any question in regard to it I will ask the previous question.

Mr. PIKE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question for information.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. PIKE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee inform the House whether it is the purpose of this amendment to make the shareholders of national banks personally liable for debts of the bank?

Mr. MAYNARD. It is not intended by this bill to make them liable any further than the original act, under the twelfth section of which they are now held liable to an extent equal to the amount of their shares. This is a method of enforcing that liability.

Mr. PIKE. The bill goes no further than that?

Mr. MAYNARD. No further.

Mr. NIBLACK. I was called out of the Hall, and was not present when the gentleman from Tennessee commenced to explain his bill. I desire to ask whether it has been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. MAYNARD. It is reported by that committee.

Mr. NIBLACK. At the present session, or during last session?

Mr. MAYNARD. During last session.

Mr. NIBLACK. Then I desire to be allowed to say in the hearing of the gentleman from Tennessee that the experience of the last year or two shows the necessity of amending the existing banking law in some particulars which are not embraced in this bill. For instance, I am aware the question has arisen in the Comptroller's Office as to his power to supervise the action of directors of national banks in the declaration of dividends or in their refusal to make dividends and in the carrying of the earnings of the banks almost indefinitely to the surplus fund. This, and some other questions kindred to this, it was my intention to bring in some form or other before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I trust the gentleman from Tennessee will consent that this bill may be postponed for a short time, until the suggestions in a report of the Comptroller of the Currency can be more carefully considered by that committee, and until various gentlemen have an opportunity of being heard in regard to some proposed amendments which it is thought should be made in view of recent experiences of the working of the banking act.

I was not able to hear very distinctly the reading of the bill, but I am satisfied that it does not cover the whole ground which an amendment of the banking law ought to cover, in view of the difficulties that have surrounded the management of the banks, and especially the closing up of banks within the past year. I hope, therefore, the gentleman will consent to a postponement or recommittal of the bill, which will only involve the necessity of reporting it again with some other amendments.

Mr. MAYNARD. There is much force in the remarks of my honorable friend from Indiana, and the Committee on Banking and Currency by no means regard this bill as the sum of what they may feel disposed to recommend. This bill was presented to meet a case which had arisen. It was presented at an early day of last session, and it is now brought forward to-day because the committee is called in regular order, and I suppose it is morally certain that after this call the Committee on Banking and Currency will not be again reached in regular order.

Mr. NIBLACK. I suggest that the gentleman move to recommit the bill with a motion to reconsider pending, so that it may be brought up at any time. I know that some legislation on the subject is urgent, but I think that whatever is done should be done in one bill. Let it go back to the Committee on Banking and Currency, a motion to reconsider being pending.

Mr. MAYNARD. With leave to report at any time?

Mr. NIBLACK. Yes, sir; I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will accept the gentleman's proposition if it be agreeable to the House.

Mr. POTTER. What is the suggestion?

Mr. MAYNARD. The suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana is that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with leave to report it back at any time with or without amendment.

Mr. POTTER. There are some explanations which I should like to have from the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, but I have no objection to the course now indicated.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is understood that the committee will have leave to report with or without amendment?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; any germane amendment will be in order.

The bill was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with leave to report at any time.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. HOUGHTON, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3279) amendatory of and supplemental to the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and for other purposes.

The bill, which was read, provides in its first section that the bridge constructed by the Union Pacific Railroad Company across the Missouri River between Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, and Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, together with its approaches on both sides of said river, be, and the same is hereby, declared to constitute, and shall be operated as, a part of the continuous line of the Union Pacific Railroad.

The second section requires the said railroad company to make semi-annual reports, signed and verified by the treasurer of said company, setting forth in detail the amount received monthly by said railroad company for tolls and charges for the use of said bridge; the first report to include the tolls and charges received for the six months ending June 30, 1874; said reports to be forwarded to and filed with the Secretary of the Interior within thirty days thereafter.

Mr. COX. I believe that bill was acted on in the last session of Congress and defeated. I believe there are points legislated on in that bill which are matters of litigation.

Mr. CROUNSE. They are all before the courts.

Mr. HOUGHTON. The gentleman is in error. The bill was reported by the committee during last session, but was not acted on.

Mr. SPEER. Is it not true that the correct interpretation of several acts of Congress is now before the courts?

Mr. HOUGHTON. No, sir.

Mr. CROUNSE. It is.

Mr. SPEER. And this is an attempt to construe that legislation?

Mr. CROUNSE. That is the object of the bill; to forestall the action of the courts, to prejudice the rights of States.

Mr. COX. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I believe I have the floor, and therefore that motion is not now in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HOUGHTON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CROUNSE. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to put this bill on its passage at this time?

Mr. HOUGHTON. It is.

Mr. CROUNSE. Will I be entitled to any time to present the adverse view to this bill?

Mr. HOUGHTON. If it is desired to debate this bill, and any time can be fixed, I am willing to agree that the time shall be equally divided between its friends and opponents.

Mr. CROUNSE. Will it be in order to move to lay this bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HOUGHTON] is entitled to the floor for an hour.

Mr. HOUGHTON. As there are several gentlemen who desire to be heard upon this bill, if the House will fix any time when it may be taken up and considered, some day this week, I will agree that the time shall be equally divided between those in favor of the bill and those opposed to it; otherwise I will go on now.

Mr. ORTH. Go on now.

Mr. HOUGHTON. The purpose of this bill is not, as is erroneously supposed by some gentlemen here, to affect any existing litigation. Its purpose is simply to compel the Union Pacific Railroad Company to operate its line of road throughout its entire length as one continuous line, and not make two transfers at the Missouri River, at Omaha.

Mr. CROUNSE. If I may interrupt the gentleman, I would like to know upon what understanding this discussion is proceeding. There was a proposition that the discussion of this bill should be deferred to some future day, when time should be given for its discussion.

The SPEAKER. That proposition was withdrawn by the gentleman. This bill is in the morning hour, and will occupy the morning hour from day to day until disposed of or otherwise ordered by the House.

Mr. CROUNSE. I would ask the gentleman if my side of the question is to have any time assigned to it; and, if so, how much?

Mr. HOUGHTON. I do not know how much time can be assigned to the gentleman; but he will have an opportunity to be heard.

The Union Pacific Railroad Company, in order to complete its connection with eastern roads at Omaha across the Missouri River, availed itself of permission given to it by the act of Congress of 1864 to construct this bridge. The bridge thereby became a part of the Union Pacific Railroad, as much so as any other part of the road constructed by that company. A special act was passed in 1866, authorizing this company to issue bonds for the purpose of raising money to pay for the construction of this bridge. But the authority to build this bridge is conferred by the amendatory act of 1864, incorporating, chartering, and authorizing the construction of that road.

I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the law by which authority was conferred upon this railroad company to construct this bridge.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That, to enable any one of said corporations to make convenient and necessary connection with other roads, it is hereby authorized to establish and maintain the necessary ferries upon and across the Missouri River and other rivers which its road may pass in its course; and authority is hereby given said corporation to construct bridges over said Missouri River and all other rivers for the convenience of said road.

Mr. HOUGHTON. This is the only authority ever given to this railroad company to construct this bridge. Ever since this bridge has been constructed it has been operated by this company as an independent thing, under the name of the "Transfer Company;" so that a double transfer has to be made of all through business between the Pacific and the Atlantic crossing the Missouri River by that route. That business is subject to a separate and independent charge for crossing this river. I believe the charge upon every freight car, loaded or empty, passing over this bridge, is ten dollars; such is my information. An additional charge of fifty cents is imposed upon each passenger crossing the bridge. In addition to this, the passengers are subject to a very great inconvenience and annoyance. They are compelled to change cars at Omaha, to take seats in a transfer car, and then be transported accross the river to the Iowa side, and then to change cars again. Baggage has to be rechecked on one side or the other of the river. People are compelled to stand out of doors upon open platforms, exposed to the inclemency of the weather at all seasons of the year, for the purpose of watching when their baggage is transferred from the car to the platform to have it rechecked.

Mr. CROUNSE. If the gentleman will allow me a moment I will correct him. Since the gentleman obtained his information the baggage has been all transferred to the Omaha side.

Mr. HOUGHTON. It is but a short time since I passed over that route, and my baggage was not transferred in that way.

The opposition to this measure arises, as I understand and believe, out of some arrangement claimed to have been made between the city of Omaha and the Union Pacific Railroad Company, by which certain lands and certain privileges within the limits of the city were granted to that company in consideration of its making Omaha the terminus of its road, which I believe to be in violation of the law of Congress. The act incorporating that company requires it to operate its whole line as a continuous line of road. If a break is to be made at Omaha, the road is not operated as one continuous line. The only pretense made by that company, as I understand, is that this bridge is not a part of the Union Pacific Railroad. I maintain that the bridge is just as much a part of the road as any portion constructed by the company between Ogden and the eastern terminus. It is authorized and constructed under the same law; there never was any other authority for it.

Mr. HALE, of New York. If the gentleman from California [Mr. HOUGHTON] will permit me, I wish to ask who are the nominal owners of this bridge? Is it owned by the Union Pacific Railroad Company or by a separate corporation?

Mr. HOUGHTON. It is owned by the Union Pacific Railroad Company. The bonds which were issued for the construction of the bridge were issued by that company; and all the other property of the company is just as much liable as is this bridge for the payment of those bonds; only the bridge is first subjected to liability for the payment of those bonds before it can be held for any other debts of the company.

Gentlemen here have referred to some litigation which they say is pending and is intended to be affected by this bill. That is an entire misapprehension. This bill is not intended to affect any pending litigation, and in my opinion it cannot have such operation. I understand that there is now pending in the Federal courts of the State of Iowa an action prosecuted by some individual against the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or against this transfer company, (I do not know which,) for damages, or something of that sort.

Mr. CROUNSE. The proceeding is for a mandamus to compel the company to operate the road in the manner this bill contemplates. That proceeding is now before two Iowa judges—Judge Dillon and Judge Love; and it would seem to me that Iowa ought to be content with that.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I am not familiar with the litigation; I speak of it only as I have understood it. I am now informed by a gentleman from Iowa that it is an action for a mandamus to compel the company to operate this road across the river.

Mr. CROUNSE. Exactly, just as this bill contemplates. That question is now before the courts.

Mr. HOUGHTON. But that matter can make no difference here. I understand that there is a controversy between some parties who claim that Omaha is the legal terminus of this road, and other parties who claim that the legal terminus is upon the other side of the river. But I think that matter is entirely independent of this question. By the act of 1864, which authorized the construction of this bridge, authority was conferred upon the President of the United States to fix the eastern terminus of the Union Pacific Railroad at some point on the western boundary of the State of Iowa.

Mr. CROUNSE. That boundary is in the middle of the Missouri River.

Mr. HOUGHTON. The President, in pursuance of the authority conferred upon him by this act of Congress, fixed the terminus of the road on the western boundary of Iowa, opposite a certain section in Nebraska of which I do not remember the number. This was all done before the Union Pacific Railroad Company availed itself of the permission given by the act of 1864 to build this bridge. The railroad company was not required by its original charter, nor by the amendment of 1864, to construct the bridge; but permission was given by the latter law for the company to construct the bridge at its option. I say that when the company availed itself of that permission and built this bridge it added this much to the line of its road. In any event the company so understood it, because as soon as it built the bridge it abandoned that portion of its road which it had built from its present terminus in the city of Omaha to the point on the Missouri River claimed to have been fixed by the President, which is distant some two or three miles from the Union Pacific terminus in Omaha. It received its subsidy bonds for that portion of the road; but after it elected to avail itself of the permission given by this amendment of 1864, and constructed this bridge, it abandoned that portion of the road and took up its track, thereby manifesting an intention on the part of the company itself to fix its terminus at the eastern end of this bridge. And the fact is that from the time this bridge has been built it has been operated by the Union Pacific Railroad, and by no other company. It is true they have operated it under the pretense that it was by an independent organization called a transfer company, but no such organization ever existed in fact—it exists only in name. It is operated by the Union Pacific Railroad itself.

Mr. BIERY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question for information. Is it that independent company which interferes with the operation of this bridge?

Mr. HOUGHTON. No, sir; there is no independent company there at all.

Mr. BIERY. What power does interfere with the operation of the bridge?

Mr. CROUNSE. I can answer the gentleman, if I am allowed.

Mr. BIERY. What power interferes with the free operation of this bridge?

Mr. HOUGHTON. There is no power which interferes with the free operation of the bridge that I am aware of. The Union Pacific Railroad refuses to operate it without a transfer upon the western side of the Missouri River.

Mr. BIERY. I understand the Union Pacific Railroad owns this bridge—that it is their property; why, therefore, do their cars not pass over the bridge without interference?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Simply because they have entered into a contract with the city of Omaha by which they have received a large subsidy from the city of Omaha to retain the terminus there, and by doing so they make passengers change cars on that side of the river. That is the only reason for it.

THE GENERAL CALENDAR.

Mr. DAWES. I move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the general Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour having expired, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] makes a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the general Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to say to the House that it is desirable to take up the general Calendar as early as possible in the session, as there is a good deal of important business upon it, and unless reached before the appropriation bills it will not likely be reached at all. No better time seems to me than now, after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs to make a suggestion to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. He observes upon the general Calendar there are two bills from his own committee which have been made special orders.

Mr. DAWES. I do not propose to ask the attention of the committee to those bills.

The SPEAKER. For that purpose it will be necessary to pass an order of the House to enable the committee to lay them aside if it shall choose to do so.

STAMP DUTIES ON MATCHES AND BANK CHECKS.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 262) to repeal the stamp duty or tax on matches and the bill (H. R. No. 168) to repeal all stamp taxation on bank checks and friction matches may be laid aside by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union when they are reached in their order.

The motion was agreed to.

LAND SOLD FOR DIRECT TAXES IN THE INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the first bill upon the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. A bill (H. R. No. 1191) for the relief of owners and purchasers of land sold for direct taxes in the insurrectionary States.

Mr. DAWES. I do not suppose that bill will be called up for action. A similar bill has already been passed.

The SPEAKER. The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the general Calendar will enable the committee to take up whatever bill it may choose.

THE RELIEF OF SETTLERS IN IOWA, ETC.

Mr. McCRARY. I desire to offer a couple of bills for reference which ought to be acted upon at an early day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the introduction of the bills for reference.

Mr. McCRARY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3827) for the relief of certain settlers on public lands in certain portions of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

BLACK HILLS INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. McCRARY also, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 120) to provide for the extinguishment of the Indian title to the Black Hills reservation in Dakota Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

OVERCHARGE OF DUTIES ON TONNAGE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3828) to provide judicial remedies for overcharge of duties on tonnage and imports; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH J. BROWN, OF GEORGIA.

Mr. STEPHENS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3829) for the relief of Joseph J. Brown, of Augusta, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DUTY ON IMPORTS.

Mr. WOOD, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 121) fixing the rates of duty on imported merchandise; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON OTHER THAN NATIONAL-BANK CIRCULATION.

Mr. HUBBELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3830) to amend section 110 of the act of June 30, 1864, and section 9 of the act of July 13, 1866, imposing taxes on the circulation of other than national banks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask unanimous consent that the committee have leave to report at any time, as it is an important measure.

The SPEAKER. They would have the right to report at any time for reference to the Committee of the Whole.

SACRAMENTO RIVER.

Mr. LUTTRELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3831) to appropriate money to improve the navigation of the Sacramento River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETALUMA CREEK.

Mr. LUTTRELL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3832) to appropriate money to improve the navigation of Petaluma Creek; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FEATHER RIVER.

Mr. LUTTRELL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3833) to appropriate money to improve the navigation of Feather River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3834) to substitute United States notes for the issues of the national banking associations: which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

PURCHASE OF PRODUCTS OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. DAWES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3835) declaring the effect of permits to purchase products of the insurrectionary States, in certain cases, granted by the President during the war of the rebellion; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. DAWES. I have introduced this bill at the request of a gentleman who is absent, and do not commit myself to its merits.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF SETTLERS IN KANSAS.

Mr. PHILLIPS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3836) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in the State of Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PHILLIPS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3837) for the relief of certain pre-emption settlers on the public lands in the State of Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS AGAINST POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3838) for the payment of all accounts for services rendered to the Government in the postal service of the United States previous to 1861; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COUNSEL IN SUITS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BECK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3839) to prohibit Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress from acting as counsel or otherwise in any suit or proceeding against the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BECK. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it should be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I would suggest the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK. It is the same bill which was passed by the House, from the Committee on Ways and Means, twice last session.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to have the bill read. The reading of it will show where it should go.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the title of the bill.

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the bill go to whatever committee will report it first.

Mr. BECK. The Committee on Ways and Means have twice reported that bill, and it was twice passed by the House, but was defeated each time in the Senate. That committee will promptly report it again, I have no doubt, and therefore I think that is the committee to which it should be referred. It is a bill applying principally to revenue cases. I hold in my hand a record showing the importance of it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky whether that bill does not, under the regular organization of committees, properly belong to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK. I think not, because it applies to cases specially pertaining to the revenue.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No; it does not.

Mr. BECK. For example, take this case, the report of which I hold in my hand, the recent case of the New York Central Railroad against the United States—where the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] lately obtained judgment against the United States for over $600,000 for payments made to the internal revenue the other day—and the costs as taxed in the Farragut cases, which the gentleman from Massachusetts knows all about.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the bill belongs to the whole House. It is to correct an existing evil which should be remedied at once by the House, and need not be referred to any committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill may be reported in full.

The bill was read. It provides that no Senator, Representative, or Delegate to Congress shall, after his election or during his continuance in office, act as agent, attorney, proctor, advocate, solicitor, or counsel for any person against whom suits or proceedings other than criminal have been, or are about to be, commenced for violation of the revenue laws, or who has any claim for drawbacks or reclamations for duties, taxes, or excises paid or demanded, or for the United States, or any agent, employé, informer, officer or officers of the revenue or customs service of the United States, in any suit or proceeding relative to the customs used, excises, or taxes; nor shall he receive any compensation, gift, or reward from such persons or officers for any service, advice, counsel, or aid afforded such person or persons, officer or officers, agent, informer, or employé. And any person offending against this provision shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, and imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, at the discretion of the court trying the same, and shall be forever thereafter incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States; and any person who shall pay, or cause to be paid, to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate, or to any person for his use or benefit, directly or indirectly, any sum of money or other thing of value because of such services or advice relative to any of the matters aforesaid, shall have a right at any time to bring suit for the recovery thereof, or its value, in any court of the United States, against such Senator, Representative, or Delegate, or the person or persons who received the same, or may unite all such persons in the same suit.

The SPEAKER. The question is to which committee shall this bill be referred.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] a question for my own information. I am in favor of this bill; but I desire to know if the gentleman has considered the question of the constitutional authority of Congress to impose disqualification to hold office except for crime?

Mr. BECK. I am willing to strike out that part of the bill. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] spoke to me about that last summer, and I told him then I had not considered the question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I observe that the gentleman says this bill provides that somebody may bring suit to get the money back. That may be a very valuable privilege, but it does not provide that he shall recover anything.

Mr. BECK. I suppose if he have the right to bring the suit, he may have the right to recover; the court will take care of that. I am willing to strike out that portion of the bill which disqualifies from holding office.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. With the leave of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] I desire to say simply that it seems to me it would be a very bad precedent to establish to make a disqualification to hold office by congressional enactment.

Mr. BECK. I have agreed to strike out that portion of the bill which reads "and shall be forever thereafter incapable of holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BECK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY VAN CAMPEN.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3840) granting a pension to Henry Van Campen, of Steuben County, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HURLBUT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3887) to fix the date of entry into the military service of Colonel and Brevet Major-General Benjamin H. Grierson, of the United States Army, and to correct his record on the Army Register; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DOMESTIC FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE.

Mr. CLAYTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3888) to make further provision for the arrest, detention, and delivery of domestic fugitives from justice; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SALARY OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SMALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3889) to reduce the salary of the President of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON FRICTION MATCHES.

Mr. SPEAR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3890) repealing the stamp duty or tax on friction matches; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF SUGG FORT.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War be, and they are hereby, directed to inform this House, at as early a day as practicable, if not incompatible with the public interest, what action, if any, has been taken on a claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, for commissary stores and supplies, and if the same has been allowed and paid, when the said claim was presented, when acted on and on what evidence, and what action, if any, has been taken by either since the payment of said claim; and that all the evidence and papers in relation to the said claim be communicated to this House.

ENROLLED BILL SINGED.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2104) to confirm an agreement made with the Shoshone Indians (eastern band) for the purchase of the south part of their reservation in Wyoming Territory.

ANNUAL REPORT OF ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let that be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SENER. I have no objection to that reference.

The letter and accompanying report were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is that the House do resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the general Calendar, with the understanding that the committee shall have the same power to lay aside a special order as they have to lay aside what is not a special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. TYNER in the chair.

LANDS SOLD FOR TAXES IN INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The first business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1191) for the relief of owners and purchasers of land sold for direct taxes in the insurrectionary States.

Mr. POLAND. A bill substantially like this was passed by the House at the last session. I move that this be laid aside.

Mr. GARFIELD. I don't understand precisely the effect of the motion of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. POLAND. What I desire to obtain is that the bill be passed over without any action.

There being no objection, the bill was passed over.

DEPOSITS IN SAVINGS-BANKS.

The next business on the general Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1399) amending the ninth section of the act approved July 13, 1866, concerning deposits in savings-banks.

Mr. KASSON. This is a bill the subject of which was acted upon during the last session of Congress. I move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ESTIMATES, APPROPRIATIONS, AND PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

The next business on the general Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1046) to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes in relation to estimates, appropriations, and public accounts.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that that bill be passed over for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

CURRENCY.

The next business on the general Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 41) for the improvement of the currency and the reduction of the interest on the funded debt of the United States.

Mr. MAYNARD. This bill was introduced by my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] and was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, who instructed me to report it back with an adverse recommendation, and to ask that it be placed on the Calendar. It has been placed there, and is the bill which is known very well by members of the House as the 3.65 convertible bond bill. That involves a question of a great deal of public interest—one that has entered very largely into the discussions of the country during the last few months. It seems to me we may as well take up this bill and consider it at this time as at any other period of the session. We probably have as much leisure now, and our minds are as little preoccupied now as they will be. If that meets the approval of the Committee of the Whole, I trust we may proceed with the consideration of this bill now. It is a very short bill; let it be read.

Mr. KELLEY. Having presented this bill, when it was reached upon the Calendar I rose for the purpose of moving that we now proceed to its consideration. I sincerely hope the Committee of the Whole will so do. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] proposes to take charge of it, I shall have to submit. But parliamentary law is opposed to placing an infant to nurse with those who have an interest in its destruction. And as my friend has committed himself against this measure, and his committee having reported adversely upon it, I think the rule would seem to apply here.

Mr. MAYNARD. In the remarks that I made I did not propose to assume the character, much less the responsibilities, of a wet-nurse to this bill. I am perfectly aware of the maternal attitude of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] and endeavored to state it in the remarks which I made. My object was, inasmuch as my name appears upon the Calendar in connection with this matter, to submit it to the care and management and tender nursing of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who, I have no doubt, will entertain the committee with a very interesting and instructive speech upon the merits and advantages involved in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that no formal motion is necessary to bring this bill before the committee. It is there by reason of having been taken up in its regular order. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania as entitled to the floor.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is—suppose we have the bill read. I am afraid that gentlemen are not aware of its purport.

Mr. MAYNARD. Before the bill is read I think we had better understand a technical point of parliamentary law. Being the member who reported this bill, I understand I would have the right to open and conclude debate upon it. That right, I presume, would be given me, and I propose to transfer it to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not wish to deprive him of any advantage, and if he will allow me nominally to take charge of the bill, I will surrender to him all my time now, and again at the conclusion of the debate.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman is in that only courteous, as I have ever known him during the many years we have been together here. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the amount of United States notes in circulation be limited, except as hereinafter provided, to $400,000,000; and that any holder of said notes presenting any sum not less than fifty dollars, or some multiple thereof, to the Treasury of the United States, or any of the assistant treasurers, shall receive in exchange therefor an equal amount of bonds of the United States, coupon or registered, as may by said holder be desired, bearing interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, which the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to prepare and furnish for that purpose; and that when any person shall demand of the Treasurer of the United States, or any assistant treasurer, redemption of said bonds, it shall be the duty of said Treasurer or assistant treasurer to pay in United States notes the principal of said bond or bonds, with accrued interest, and cancel and forward the bonds thus redeemed to the Treasurer of the United States forthwith, in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be prepared United States notes of the several denominations now in use to the amount of $50,000,000, which shall be held as a reserve or redemption fund for the purpose of securing prompt payment of said bonds when demanded, and the United States notes so held in reserve shall be used only when needed for the payment of said bonds on their presentation, and shall be withdrawn and placed again in reserve out of any United States notes not otherwise appropriated, received by the Treasury Department thereafter; and the whole amount of United States notes received by the Treasury Department in exchange for said bonds bearing 3.65 per cent. interest shall be appropriated and applied by the Secretary of the Treasury, as rapidly as practicable, to the purchase or redemption of any bonds of the United States outstanding at the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That national banks are hereby authorized to hold said bonds bearing 3.65 per cent. interest instead of the reserve of United States notes now required by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Tennessee because it appears from the Calendar that he had charge of the bill. The Chair understands that gentleman to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to advocate the bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I yield my time now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and will claim the right to close the debate, intending to yield that time also to him.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, the coming up of this bill at this time is a surprise to me. I had not thought it possible that it could be reached so early in the session. I admit, however, that it is an agreeable surprise, for no time could be more fitting for the discussion of the questions involved than to-day. The President's message was read to us yesterday, and it contains one short sentence that should be printed in bold letters and bright colors over the door of every dwelling and workshop in the country. No truth could be more pregnant or more instructive to the American people than the one contained in that brief sentence so pertinent to this discussion. It reads thus:

> Debt—debt abroad—is the only element that can, with always a sound currency, enter into our affairs to cause any continued depression in the industries and prosperity of our people.

Why, sir, foreign debt, carrying gold interest, is what is crushing the hearts and the hopes and undermining the morals of the laboring people of our country. It is that indebtedness which is filling our alms-houses with people skilled in many industries and eager to toil for their living. It is that foreign debt, that annual gold indebtedness for interest on the principal, that is stripping the thrifty and industrious laborer of his earnings hoarded through years in savings-banks; that is compelling him to see his humble but mortgaged home pass to the capitalist at a nominal price, because he has not been permitted to earn the little stipend that would enable him to pay his monthly dues to the building association, or his semi-annual installment to the capitalist. It is that foreign debt which is causing a vast tide of emigration to flow from our shores, and repelling hundreds of thousands of immigrants who hoped and expected to find shelter, freedom, and prosperity under our republican institutions.

And, sir, the bill just read by the Clerk is a proposition to abate this foreign indebtedness by authorizing the Government to avail itself of the resources of the American people, and to so locate a large part of the public debt immediately, and all of it ultimately, that when it shall pay its interest it will pay it to those from whom it has drawn the money by hard and heavy taxation.

This is my sole object in proposing the issue of convertible bonds, and I stand not upon the phraseology of my bill. I am ready to accept amendments. What I ask is the inauguration of a system by which the honor of the Government may be vindicated by its acceptance of the currency it issued and which it now repudiates, and that the people may be relieved of the curse of this debt—"debt abroad"—which is the only thing that can interfere with our prosperity.

When the Government issued greenbacks it acted with wisdom enlightened by the experience of history. Thaddeus Stevens, then the great mind of this House, knew the story of French assignats, and knew that they had failed because they had been predicated on the revenues of property to which the government issuing them had no legal tenure, and that when the church reclaimed her property and the returning nobility claimed its, there was no means of redeeming the paper. He knew, too, the story of our continental paper; that it had been issued with no means provided for its redemption or absorption. He knew, sir, (for in 1862 he and I talked over the wise opinions pressed upon the Continental Congress by Benjamin Franklin,) that that great man had urged that Congress not to increase the issues of paper, but to borrow from the people those which had already been made by offering them an interest-bearing bond; and, as I have recently had occasion to write, had Franklin's advice been taken, the story of continental money would not have become, as it now is, a snare and a delusion to many honest, well-meaning, and patriotic people; because the amount issued would have been small, the excess would have flowed back upon the Treasury, the people would have held interest-bearing bonds which in time would have been paid off, and the whole amount of the debt would have been nominal in comparison with the figures presented by the total issue of continental money.

Sir, I say that when we issued Treasury notes, now known as greenbacks, these instructive lessons were present to the minds of those who created that beneficent currency; and they provided that the notes should be convertible into interest-bearing bonds of the Government, that whoever took them and found them in excess of his wants could invest them with the Government and receive compensation therefor. But, sir, evil counsels prevailed. The House determined that those notes should be full legal-tender for all debts, public and private; but the Senate yielded to the evil counsels which to-day seem to control both this and that branch of our national Legislature. It amended the House bill by providing that the interest on the bonds should be paid in gold, and in that instant it in so far repudiated the instrument of exchange, the currency it was authorizing the Government to issue, for it also provided that in order to secure a sufficient supply of gold for the payment of that interest the customs duties should be collected in gold.

Sir, when it became inevitable to him that the country must be lost or the bankers gratified, my venerable colleague in sadness of spirit consented to yield, and the Pandora's box from which all our financial evils have sprung was then created with open lid. A demand for gold was thus created beyond the means of the country to meet. Foreign bankers saw the position in which we had placed ourselves. Speculators at home united with them, and together they aggravated the wide disparity between gold and the legal-tender notes of the Government, which these unfortunate provisions had created. France in her great trouble, taught by her own experience, and having our calamities which resulted from this partial repudiation of our legal-tender notes before her, recently made through the Bank of France an issue of irredeemable legal-tender notes to the amount of hundreds of millions; and yet the difference between gold and paper there has never exceeded 1 per cent.

And why? Why, sir, simply because France, wiser or more honest than we, made her irredeemable bank note a legal tender for all debts, public and private. No "gold ring" could be formed there, no speculation was open to foreign bankers; but the artist, manufacturer, jeweler, or other person who wanted gold for mechanical or scientific uses could buy it with the irredeemable notes of the Bank of France at a depreciation of from ¼ of 1 per cent. to 1 per cent.

It is impossible to estimate the loss we have sustained by this partial repudiation. For some years it was but partial, and we still recognized our greenbacks as money upon which the Government would pay interest. We maintained a system of temporary loans. They bore many names; compound-interest notes, seven-thirties, certificates of indebtedness, &c., but they were all temporary loans, in which the Government took the use of the people's money, agreeing to return it forthwith or upon short notice, and to pay interest for the time it held it.

But, sir, the capitalists of Europe and this country succeeded in persuading Congress and the executive department of the Government that it would not be a fraud to cheat laborers, whether on the farm or in the factory or the mine, by depreciating the currency with which it paid them; that it would not be dishonest to further depreciate the medium for which the farmer sells his grain and the laborer his toil, and induced Congress to repeal all provisions under which our legal-tenders could be invested in the funded debt of the Government, and which gave strength, character, and value to them. And the act of 1870 was vigorously and eloquently marshaled by the then chairman of the Banking Committee, the gentleman now a member from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] which required the payment and cancellation of the poor $54,000,000 of three per cents in which the greenback might still be temporarily invested.

How stands your greenback now? Repudiated by the Government. It will not receive it for customs. It will not accept it at par for interest-bearing loans. Yet it makes labor take it in compensation for its toil and the farmer for the produce of his acres. Is that honest? Are bankers more numerous than laborers or farmers? Can they not of their abounding wealth provide themselves with the comforts of life, while honest laborers are compelled to seek refuge in the almshouse or commit petty crime to secure the shelter of the jail? These are the legitimate fruits of repudiation by Congress of the currency itself had created.

I speak for the American people, and I ask the Government to be honest to its own people before it is generous to foreign bankers and bondholders.

Now, sir, in so far as we refuse to receive the greenback for interest-bearing investments, we, as I have said, repudiate it, and we increase that load of debt—debt abroad—which the President pronounces almost the only source of embarrassment from which we can suffer. Our country is drained of gold. We owe more as interest annually than we can obtain, and therefore we have to pay the deficiency in gold-bearing bonds, and thus aggravate the evil. We must pause in this career, or a wronged and oppressed people may refuse to bear the burden becoming so grievous.

Why, sir, may we not give the American people an opportunity to loan money to the Government? I do not ask you to compel anybody to loan the Government a dollar. All I plead for, gentlemen, is that you permit the American people to lend to the Government that which the Government forces them to take as money; while by repudiating it and refusing to receive it, as it does, it depreciates its value. The way to enhance its value is to increase its uses.

What does the bill propose? This; that any citizen or corporation having money lying idle, for which no present use exists, may lend it to the Government at the rate of 3.65 per cent., recalling it as he would do from a savings-bank or individual to whom it had been loaned on call when the time comes for more advantageous use. What good would that do? you say. Why, sir, in the first place, it would remove the brand of repudiation from our legal-tenders, and it would give the Government immediately—and when I say immediately I mean within, say, six months from the time when the first bond should be issued—about five hundred million dollars at that low rate of interest, payable to our own people within our own limits, with which to redeem gold-bearing bonds now held by foreigners. It would relieve us of that amount of that debt abroad which so curses us. It would give increased value to the greenback, and thereby diminish the disparity between it and gold. It would diminish the demand for gold, and thereby again decrease the disparity between gold and the greenback.

And, sir, more and better than this, it would quicken every industry in the country. How so? Why, sir, our currency no longer circulates; it has ceased to perform the function of currency; it is hoarded as capital. More than sixty millions of it lie dead in the Treasury. What is the office of currency? It is to run, to circulate, to pass from hand to hand in effecting exchanges of property and values. Why does it not run, why does it not circulate? Because capitalists know that with the cry of contraction and the threatened repeal of the legal-tender clause the production of the country must still further contract. They know that with the Government insisting on contraction and capitalists hoarding the currency as capital, the prices of all property must depreciate and vast amounts of it exchange hands by forced sales.

They know, sir, that the time has already come when the loss of interest will be more than compensated by the purchase of mills, factories, forges, furnaces, mines, farms, and homes at one-third their real value at sheriffs' or marshals' sales. They are permitting their capital to lie in the form of currency to use it when they have so cursed and crushed the productive powers of the country that they can again make 100 or more per cent. on their investments as they did when they bought our bonds with greenbacks, which their counsels had depreciated by inducing Congress to consent to their partial repudiation. This bill would bring those $60,000,000 of currency into circulation. How? If those who have deposited it entertain the views I express? Why, sir, there are all over the country balances lying in the hands of insurance companies and other corporations, unproductive or producing small rates, and incurring the risks incident to deposit with banks or bankers. Those sums would flow into the Treasury in exchange for a temporary loan. Business men with their energies paralyzed, who are unwilling to produce goods to sell on a constantly declining market, would give activity to the currency in their possession by putting it into three-sixty-fives as an absolutely safe depository.

The bill makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to invest funds so received as rapidly as practicable in gold-bearing bonds, so that the money would not only flow to the Treasury from these sources, but it would flow out in the purchase of gold-bearing bonds. It would circulate; confidence would be restored; the people would feel that at last the Government recognized its own currency, and would no longer oppress and wrong them by striving to contract its volume. And when these many mickles had made their muckle in the Treasury, the greedy holders of those $60,000,000 would find that they had been circumvented, that property was rising not only in price but in value, and would give the Government the right to use that money, of which it is now the mere depositary, by putting it into these convertible bonds.

I will not answer objections in advance; I shall wait to hear what they may be, trusting to the courtesy which never forsakes him of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] to give me, as he has said he will, part of the last hour of the debate. In concluding, therefore, this impromptu speech, on a very well-considered subject, I take leave to say that if it shall be the sense of the committee to strike out that clause which provides for $50,000,000 additional of currency to be held as a redemption fund, and to say that the Secretary of the Treasury shall hold a certain percentage of the money deposited for the three-sixty-fives as a redemption fund, I shall make no objection to it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I observe that the bill fixes the limit at $400,000,000, which was the amount first fixed in the bill of last year. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, so that it cannot be an objection to the bill in any man's mind, that it is expansion if we fix the limit in the bill at $382,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY. I thank the gentleman very much for bringing that point to my attention, for I have before me a copy of the bill, with the substitution at the point where this modification is suggested of $382,000,000, the amount of currency now fixed, for $400,000,000, and an addition to the second section, which makes it the duty of the Secretary to buy with the proceeds of these bonds gold-bearing bonds, a clause giving him the option to purchase gold with which to redeem said bonds; my idea being that if the bonds should be run up to artificial prices, the Secretary could then buy gold and call overdue bonds; the object of the bill being to relieve the country of what our President says is its greatest curse, debt—debt abroad, which is held by people who do not love us or our institutions.

If any gentleman desires to speak, and I have time, I shall have no objection to yielding it to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. KELLEY. If nobody desires to speak, I propose to amend the bill in accordance with the suggestions which I have made. I send to the desk these amendments, and ask the Clerk to read them.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2 of the bill, on line 18, after the word "and," insert these words: "of such assistant treasurer to;" so that it will read:

And of such assistant treasurer to forward the bonds thus redeemed to the Treasurer of the United States forthwith, in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe.

At the end of the bill add the following: "for the purchase of gold with which to redeem said bonds."

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] yield the floor absolutely?

Mr. KELLEY. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended at this early hour of the session, if at all, to occupy the attention of the House. It may be, except upon incidental business, the only time that I may ever claim the attention of the House.

For myself this question as a political one has passed away from all interest. Eight years ago I announced substantially the proposition contained in this bill as what I believed to be the only safety to the currency of the country. I saw that the greenback which, when it was made legal tender, was made convertible into United States 6 per cent. bonds, had, by the action of Congress, inspired by the capitalists of both hemispheres, been repudiated and set aside by having that privilege taken away, and that it had no value except as a legal tender for certain debts of the Government and for the debts of the people. And I saw that there was nothing of value that could be predicated upon it, and I made the suggestion, now embodied in this bill, that there should be a bond of the Government authorized and prepared, which should allow the greenback to be funded in that which should bear an interest which should give it value; and I chose 3.65 as the rate of interest for two reasons: First, as I supposed that this bond would pass from hand to hand in the transactions of life largely, that there might be a convenient rate of interest in which to make the account—a mill a day for ten dollars, half a cent for fifty dollars, one cent for one hundred dollars, so that all could be reckoned without trouble and inconvenience.

But I had a higher and more controlling motive than that. I looked abroad over the world, and I saw that the gold dollar of the world was invested, on the average, at about 3 per cent. Take the whole gold investments in Government securities of the world, and they do not yield over 3 per cent.; they would not average even that were it not for our large 6 per cent. gold loans. That being so, I said, let us make the greenback dollar of the United States a little better than the gold dollar of the world; that is, it shall be competent for investment at any hour at the rate of 3.65 interest, or a little better than the average gold dollar of the world. And that will bring up the greenback equal to the gold dollar of the world without shock to the business or prosperity of the country.

I elaborated this idea in a speech to the House. Because of this simple proposition to bring up the value and utilize the greenback I was instantly attacked as a repudiator. No man ever answered the argument. It was made on this floor nearly six years ago, in February, 1869, and no man has ever answered the argument—nay, no man has ever attempted to answer the argument, and no man has attempted to show that this proposition is not feasible, and will not accomplish all that is claimed for it. The reply has always been calling hard names or insisting that nothing should be done which should save the prosperity of the country, only that all values should be forced down by contraction until the creditors, both of the people and the Government, could be paid in gold, dollar for dollar, for that which they had loaned in greenbacks, sometimes at 50 per cent. discount from gold.

How stands the fact? You have a legal-tender dollar with which the whole business of this people is done; but you make no provision for its redemption now or hereafter. You require every man to take it in pay for all his possessions he is obliged to sell. You pay it as an equivalent for the blood and limbs of your soldiers; with it you compensate their widows and orphans for the lives of husbands and fathers; and yet you provide no means by which to give it a standard value, even by offering to pay interest upon it.

Now, the proposition is simply to allow the people of the United States to go to their Government and say, "We have taken your money; we desire that you will at least pay us interest on it until you redeem it in actual value." The answer has been made, "Your scheme will not be effective, because no man will take the 3.65 bonds; because there are other and higher rates of interest for money in legal-tenders which can be obtained." I therefore said, in order to make it desirable for the people to take these bonds, they should be convertible into money and the money reconvertible into bonds at the pleasure of the holders. They should have this quality; so that, when men desire no longer to hold the bonds, they should have back their money. If they think they can make better use of the money than to obtain 3.65 interest for it, they should have the opportunity. But, when the money of the Government which they hold will not yield them 3.65 interest, they should have the opportunity to pay back the money and take the bonds. And with the money which the Government received for its 3.65 bonds it could either buy gold or redeem our bonds now out at 6 per cent. interest which we have pledged ourselves to redeem in gold, unwisely and unjustly, as I think and have always thought—a proposition which I almost alone contested on this floor; a decision unjust to the people and unwise in the Government. But it now being the contract of the United States, that contract must be kept in solemn faith, however unwise and however unjust. We have made it; we are bound by it. Others have acted upon it; and I never desire to go back one jot or one tittle from any obligation, public or private.

But this is not the only thing in which the 3.65 bond, if adopted, will be of advantage to the country. What is all business suffering from to-day? What is it that shuts up every mill in Massachusetts, or makes it run only on partial time? Why is it that 60,000 men in that State who desire labor to-day cannot get it; and 90,000 men in the city of New York, as it is said? In Pennsylvania there are hundreds of thousands thrown out of employment. Why is it? Why is all business enterprise crippled?

It is not for want of money. O, no; there is not a member on this floor who cannot go into New York and with Government bonds obtain at 3 per cent. on call as many millions as he chooses to make a deposit of collateral for. But if he goes there and asks for a loan, as a business loan, on six months' time, he cannot borrow a dollar at less than 7, 8, 9, or 10 per cent. a year interest. You cannot borrow money on time for any interest at which any business can be carried on. And why? Because it is understood that the Congress of the United States and the Executive of the United States are determined to reduce the currency of the country until we get to specie payments. Specie payments! There never were specie payments; there never will be specie payments. Specie value we shall get to, and all the sooner if you give specie value to your greenback.

This contraction of the currency reduces the value of all business enterprises until they are not safe security for investments or loans.

What is the objection to contraction? If all the property of this country would go down equally and together, I would hold up both my hands to contract it until we got to specie value, if you please. But what is the fact? Statisticians tell us, with more or less of accuracy, (and I am not here to quarrel whether it is accurate or not—it is accurate enough for all my purposes,) that there is $16,000,000,000 of private property in this country. Be it so. A little more or a little less makes no difference. I think that is an underestimate; but such is the estimate of the statisticians.

Now, no man denies that one-quarter of all that property is in invested debt; $2,300,000,000 is debt of the Government; and then we have various other sorts of invested debt. Now, what I mean by "invested debt" is that capital which is, in the cant language of the day, "salted down"—that which is loaned for purposes of investment, not for purposes of use in business. When I speak of "invested capital," I want to be distinctly understood as meaning that capital which is lent at interest as an investment, and not for business purposes. When I speak of capitalists, I am referring to capitalists of that kind. A business man who is using all his capital in productive enterprises of one sort or another I do not hold to be a capitalist. Generally he has out as much indebtedness as he can pay; he may be a man of property, but he is not a capitalist, because he is using in business purposes all the money that he owns or may be able to borrow. When I speak of capital, I speak of invested debt or money in hand.

Now, one-quarter of all the property of this country is in invested debt—bonds and mortgages, securities of various descriptions. Of this there can be no doubt. Now, then, the difficulty is that we are striving to bring down the property of this country to a specie valuation; and already we have brought down real estate in New York 33 per cent.; in Massachusetts at least 25 per cent.; and the case is the same all over the country except in the granaries of the farmers of the West. How is it in Chicago? That city, after the fire had swept over it and left it desolate, was largely rebuilt upon money obtained on mortgage; and those mortgages are now coming home. The property upon which such securities rest has therefore already been brought down something like 30 per cent.; but invested debt never comes down—never, never—not one dollar. We are bringing down 30 per cent. the value of the active productive property of this country—for what purpose? For the purpose of getting at "specie payment." What does "specie payment" mean? The payment of this invested debt the other quarter in a currency worth 10 or 12 per cent. more than the money in which it was contracted, and in some cases 40 per cent. more if the debt was contracted when gold was at a high premium. You are thus bringing down the value of three-fourths of the property of this country to raise the other quarter—the invested capital, the property of the men who live on usury—10 per cent. higher. Is there anybody who can deny this? Have I not stated the fact exactly as it exists? I am not here to quarrel with men about their opinions upon finance; but I ask them to look at this stubborn fact which no man can deny or doubt.

What is the consequence? The consequence is that we are eaten up by interest. No sane man can believe that an honest, steady, well-founded business can be carried on by any man who pays more than 6 per cent. for the use of the money with which it is done. I am not here to say that you should pass laws against taking usurious interest. By no means. I speak, I trust, with reverence; but when the Lord thundered from Mount Sinai to his chosen people an interdict against usury, he succeeded so poorly with his usury law that "Jew" and "usurer" have come to be synonyms. I am not here to ask for laws against usury. I expect that men will make the most they can out of their money. What I am endeavoring to impress upon the House is that there should not be such a condition of law, such an administration of its finances by Government, as to give facility for this usury. Why, sir, if men can lend their money for 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 15 per cent. interest, it is because of the high rate of interest paid by the Government. It is axiomatic in finance (if there is any such thing as an axiom in finance) that upon Government securities money can always be borrowed at the lowest rate of interest when the Government is at peace and when everybody has confidence in its ability to pay its obligations. Now, of this $4,000,000,000 of invested debt the Government is a borrower for $2,300,000,000, or more than one-half; and it borrows it at never less than 5 per cent. and from that to 6 per cent. The Government, which offers the best security, pays these rates. Then, when you come to the next best security, which is perhaps on town, city, and county bonds, it is necessary to pay 6 and 7 per cent. When you get to the next best security, say railroad bonds, 7 or 8 per cent. interest is required; and when you come to borrow for business purposes, because of the risks in business paper, the business man must pay 8 or 9 per cent. in Massachusetts; and going from the money-centers southward and westward the rate reaches 10, 12, 15, and 20 per cent.

Now, I want the Government, for its immense loan, to come into the market as a borrower at a lower rate of interest, and then the rate upon the next best class of securities will range lower, and so on till the rate of interest on all forms of indebtedness comes down. That is why I want 3.65 per cent. interest bonds issued by the Government and offered as an investment to the people. Let the Government go into the market as a borrower at that rate, and the general rate of interest will come down. You cannot get it down by simple legislation against taking usury. That is impossible, because men loan their money at what they can get for it on the best security they can get; and upon this axiom of finance, low rate of interest with good security and high rate of interest with poor security; and the business investment is the lowest security.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally arose, and a message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. BABCOCK, his Private Secretary.

CURRENCY.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see how this method of investment—the 3.65 bond—will affect another financial problem. Run your minds back, those of you who are old enough, and tell me what precipitated the great financial crash and panic of 1837. Was it not the failure of the Philadelphia Trust Company? What started the great panic of 1857? The failure of the Ohio Life and Trust Company. What induced the great failures and panic of September, 1873? Not the failure of Jay Cooke & Co. Every business man had discounted their failure six months before. They saw that the North Pacific Railroad could not go through; that it was only a question of time; and that nobody believed in the enterprise going through on the basis it then had, however desirable it should do so, unless, perhaps, the too confiding readers of religious newspapers, who read the advertisements and editorials indorsing the Northern Railroad bonds, and who thought that those statements were as true as the other parts of what they read in their papers. But when the Union Trust Company of New York failed every man was frightened, and every cent of money was tightly gripped and held as money alone is held. Where, then, was your greenback at that hour, this filthy rag; this broken promise to pay; this dishonored note, that sometimes is sneered at in this House? The people clutched it and pocketed it and held to it as the only financial sheet-anchor. Banks held on to it. If these sneers and epithets thrown at the greenback are true, why did not the banks pay out just these filthy rags which people had paid into them? When the people called for them, instead of that they gave us certified checks that we had money in the banks, but too precious to be paid out. There was no want of confidence in the value of the people's money. It was the doubt in the minds of the bankers whether they would ever get the worth of them back if they let them go.

Why in each of those years, 1837, 1857, 1873, did these trust companies fail? Because, by the very nature of their business, they are borrowers on call; and therefore they must always fail. They borrow money at 4 per cent. on call, and they must let it out at a higher rate of interest in order to make money on it. To do this they must loan it on time; and whenever a call is made the money cannot be got except by calling in their own loans and distressing their own customers; and as time loans cannot be called in fast enough, then they fail, and all confidence is lost. Panics, failures, and distress follow.

For a like reason, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, every man in the eastern part of the country is doing business constantly upon the top of a volcano. He does not know any day but he may be ruined without any imprudence or possibility of hinderance on his part. For example, we have in the State of Massachusetts two hundred millions to-day of capital thus held in our savings-banks subject to call, every dollar of it; and if the servant-girls of Massachusetts should call for their wages every business of the State of Massachusetts would be entirely disordered. And why? Not because the banks were not sound, but because, being a call loan to the banks, they could not realize on their investments soon enough to meet the demand, and therefore a panic and financial distress would come.

Now, then, who would not rather have a bond at 3.65 per cent., on which he could get his money from the Government, than to have the trust companies' notes for money deposited on call at 4 per cent.? That is only saying, who would not rather lend his money to the Government at 35 per cent. less than to an individual? Every financial transaction shows that.

Mr. MERRIAM. Will the gentleman pardon me just one moment?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do you propose that the thousand of millions of dollars held to-day in the savings-banks of the country shall be called in to be invested in 3.65 per cents, breaking up business in Massachusetts and bringing chaos all over the country?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will answer that question. I do not propose that the thousand millions in the savings-banks shall be called in and put into 3.65 per cents; that result must be regulated by the wishes of the owners of the money; but I desire that the negro of the South may at least have an opportunity to invest his money in 3.65 per cents rather than in freedman's banks where he does not get back 3.65 per cent. of his principal.

I give the fullest notice of this desire of mine anywhere and everywhere. I want the people of this country to have, as is given to its people by the government of Great Britain, a perfectly safe place in which to put their money. Perfect safety is to be had and is only compatible with a low rate of interest. That is what I want; and then, if people put their money in unsafe investments for a high interest, it is their fault and not mine. But if I do not provide them with a safe place to put their money, but leave them to the tender mercies of speculators to take it from them, that is my fault, not theirs. Behold the exact difference between my opponents and myself. I want it precisely understood. I am here as a legislator. I do not think that more than one thousand million will come out because our savings-banks are in so far speculative machines and they divide 6 and 7 per cent., which they ought not to do. Such rates of interest are not consistent with safety. That is the difficulty, and therefore I want this change made. It would and should be gradual. But when men choose to put their money in 3.65 bonds and have it safe at all times and in all panics I want them to have the privilege. And what is the objection to it? The Government saves the interest. Is that objectionable? Let your deficit of ten to twenty millions at the end of this year, which will surely come, answer. Besides, my proposition will keep the interest at home which we now pay abroad. The terrible effects of sending abroad the vast sums we pay for interest are just now being felt. We owe abroad national, state, city, railroad, and other debts, on which we have one hundred and fifty millions of interest every year to pay abroad in gold. Where is that immense sum yearly coming from? Not from the earth by gold-producing, because we produce but sixty odd millions from the earth in all our mines. It has to be paid in some other form. Most of it heretofore has been paid by selling more bonds, thus increasing the cost. But now that resource is stopped, and that is among the reasons why the whole wheels of business are stopped.

Sir, on this point let us learn a little from history. Let me call your attention to one illustration; I do not know but I have done so more than once before, but I fear it fell on unwilling ears, like seed sown on stony ground. Look at Ireland, which half a century ago was prosperous as no other land on the earth was prosperous; full of manufactories, full of productions, and—which is the greatest evidence of prosperity—producing people in a greater degree than any other country on the earth. She had then eight million people, happy and prosperous, and living at home in comparative comfort. But in an evil day it became fashionable, her government being removed from her soil, for all the owners of her land to live abroad. Thus came to be what is known as Irish absenteeism. What is that? Why it means that landlords took the rents of their property in Ireland and spent it all abroad, nothing coming back in return to the soil. The effect of Irish absenteeism has been that in a single generation that country was depopulated from eight million people to four, after going through starvation, such as will be in New York this winter, and in Pennsylvania this winter, if not in Massachusetts—after going through starvation in 1848, until we had to send the frigate Macedonian with bread to feed her starving people. Thus was Ireland divested in a single generation of four million of her people, while most of the estates of her land-owners passed through bankruptcy in the "encumbered estates court," as it is called. What did this great mischief? All writers on political economy, even the most aurophobic of all writers up of gold, agree that absenteeism was the cause. As a result of absenteeism there was in all collected from that country and spent abroad not more than two and a half million pounds sterling, annually, or a little over twelve and a half million dollars. And this comparatively small sum did all this horrible work—starvation, death, and depopulation.

We have our landlords in the shape of the bondholders abroad to whom we must pay $150,000,000 interest annually. The amount paid by Ireland at first was only $1.50 per man of her population. The amount in our case is $150,000,000, being $3.50 per man. I think with our resources we can stand it without the terrible ruin that came on Ireland. But we cannot stand it with every mill idle, every ship tied up at the wharf, every furnace closed, and every source of profit cut off, and the costs of transportation in such a condition that it takes four bushels of corn to get one from Minnesota to the sea-board; for a bushel of corn which is worth twenty cents there is worth $1.05 when I feed it to my horse on the shores of the Atlantic. In this condition of things we cannot even produce enough to pay the drain. Now, as a mode of relief we simply ask what? Not to expand the currency, not to extend the currency, not to inflate the currency, not to repudiate any obligation, but that the Government shall say to all men, "Here is our money which we have provided for the currency of the country; for any of it you do not want for use we will give you 3.65 per cent. interest, and when you can do anything better with it you shall have it again for that purpose." And let any man tell me what there is of danger, of shock to the business of the country, under this system.

I observed that many men representing national banks on this floor voted against this proposition when it was up before. I agree that when in operation it will cut into the deposits of national banks—I do not mean those paper deposits of book-keeping which are the proceeds of discounts made to customers, but actual deposits—I agree that it will cut in some degree into them; but I observe that my friend from Pennsylvania has made provision for compensation by allowing these 3.65 bonds to be kept in the vaults of the national banks as their reserves, for they are just as good as the greenbacks, and so much better, because they bear interest.

While that provision was being read a gentleman said to me here "What advantage will it be to the Government to pay interest on the reserves of the banks?" Pardon me; in order to do that the banks will have to pay the greenbacks into the Treasury equal in amount with the bonds they hold as reserves, and with those greenbacks the Government could buy gold, or purchase the bonds now out at 6 per cent. interest and save the difference of interest, and be so much the gainer from the transaction. This canceling the bonds at higher rates of interest would bring down the rate of interest all over the country, as I have before shown.

It is the fullest conviction of the truth, the utility, the statesmanship of these financial propositions, and the prosperity of all industrial pursuits which will come to the country if they become laws that has impelled me to their advocacy steadily, unwaveringly, unflinchingly. I know these ideas are not understood, and are therefore not popular, in my section of the country. I am aware that I stood alone of all New England in voting for this proposition when it was last before the House. I was told that if I did vote for it I never should come back here. I did not much doubt that; but I thought in my mind if this relief is not given to the industries of the country I shall not stay at home alone. Nor shall I.

This distress has by our action been brought upon the country. The republican party is held responsible for it; and we are so. Why? We have become a party under the control of the invested capitalist, the bondholder, and the monopolist. When the republican party started it attracted to it the true men of the country, because it was started to bring up labor, and it commenced at the lowest stratum, the slave, and raised him to be a citizen. War was forced upon us, and the necessities of the Government, which the republican party administered, to have money, brought to the party, of necessity, the capitalists of the country. And at last, when the war was over, we became a party at the head of which was the capitalist, and at the tail of which was the negro, with not much affiliation between head and tail, let me say to you. [Laughter on the democratic side.] No occasion for you to laugh, for the war left the democratic party in the same condition. The old whig party leaders, the capitalists of that party who would not go into the republican party, to begin with, because they would not consent to the elevation of the laboring man, finding nowhere else to go, went over and became the leaders of the democratic party. So your party has the old whig bondholders and the old Bourbons of the whig party for the head, and the Irishman for the tail, and there is very little affiliation between head and tail there. And so both parties find themselves in this abnormal condition: No community of idea or action on financial questions.

The responsibility of action comes upon the republican party, as we are in power. We have for the last time an opportunity to relieve this country of its distresses. We have for the last time an opportunity to recover the confidence of the people, and to show that the prosperity of the industries of the people are the objects of your care. If we fail now, we fail forever. A party once inaugurated remains through a generation, and that means forever for all of us here present.

I have now given you succinctly, not elaborately at all, my views. The best evidence that I can afford of their sincerity, of the deep conviction with which they are imprinted upon my mind, is that I have ventured to hold them when they are unpopular and where they are unpopular. And I ventured to do it to my injury in the view of those who think political life is all that there is in this world; to my gain, perhaps, in the minds of those who think that anywhere else is preferable to being in politics. I certainly have this gain, that hereafter I can defend or prosecute the United States in course of my professional labors as I like, which is a boon that no member of Congress can enjoy, taken away in part by the envy of those whom nobody will employ on either side.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to yield to me for the purpose of offering a substitute for the second section of this bill as amended. I will also inform the committee that I will ask the House to order the bill with the pending amendments to be printed, so that every gentleman may have it on his desk tomorrow.

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall invest 75 per cent. of United States notes received in exchange for said convertible bonds, as rapidly as may be practicable, in the purchase or redemption of any bonds of the United States outstanding at the date of the passage of this act, or in the purchase of gold with which to redeem said bonds.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not propose at this time to enter into a general debate on this bill, but only to say that we are now plunging into the midst of the discussion of a bill of which I suppose there are not ten printed copies in this Hall. I have failed to procure a copy at all, and have been able to see only the official copy at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. KELLEY. It is no fault of the author of the bill that it cannot be found. It is upon your Calendar as House bill No. 41 and also House bill No. 539. And I have announced my purpose to ask the House, when we shall go out of committee, (inasmuch as the Committee of the Whole cannot do it,) to order the bill to be printed, so that it may be on every member's desk in the morning.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is for that reason that I am unwilling that the debate shall continue until the House could see in print the propositions submitted for its consideration. I will, however, in this connection say just enough to protest against the doctrines which have just been advocated in support of this measure.

I will do but little more than to state my own opinion. I give to every other gentleman what I demand for myself—the utmost credit for sincerity of conviction. I assume, therefore, that those who advocate this measure believe it to be for the good of the country. I believe, on the contrary, that this measure is fraught with measureless evil to every great and good interest of the people of the United States; evil not to the Government alone, but to the Government, to the capitalists, and most of all to the laboring interests of the country. For the last ten years I have given as much of my time (with whatever ability I could command) to the study of this question as to any other before the American people; and I believe it clearly demonstrable that were we now to enter upon the path pointed out in this bill and advocated by the two gentlemen [Mr. KELLEY, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts] who have just addressed the House, that path would lead us by a rapid grade downward to the most measureless disaster that has ever befallen the business and the prosperity of the American people.

I do not now propose to give my reasons for this opinion; but I will call attention to one or two indications of the broad differences between the line of ideas which I hold and those held by the gentlemen who have spoken. For example, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] says truly that a man can borrow millions on millions in New York to-day at a very low rate of interest if he wants to borrow it on call, but if he offers commercial paper, and desires money for six, eight, ten, or twelve months, he cannot get it except at a large rate of interest. But the gentleman's statement of the reason why money cannot be readily borrowed for such periods is to me most amazing. He says the reason is that men are afraid that the President and Congress will take measures to resume specie payments.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not remember to have said that.

Mr. GARFIELD. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir; I said that Congress was going on with the contraction of the value of property. I said we never would "resume specie payments."

Mr. GARFIELD. In other words, capitalists who have abundance of money in their hands will not lend it for ten or twelve months ahead, for fear the legislation of Congress will make that money better at the time it is to be paid back! Here is a reversal of all the ordinary motives on which men act in money matters. Now precisely the reverse is the fear of the money-lender. He declines to lend money out of his hands for a series of months because just such measures as this threaten to depreciate the value of his money, so that when it comes back to him it is likely to be worth far less than when he parted with it. If that had been the reason given by the gentleman, I could have understood its force.

This measure is perfectly adopted to the work of destroying the confidence of leading capitalists and business men, and leading them to hold their money back from investment for fear of spoliation and loss.

Again, the gentleman says that in his State and in all the States of the Union the business of the country slumbers on a volcano, because, for example, $200,000,000 are invested in the savings-banks of Massachusetts on call, and should the servant-girls of that State all at once make a demand for their deposits now in the savings-banks, the business of that State would instantly collapse. Now, as I understand the nature of this bill, its effect will be to put the vast financial interests of the Government in just the position which the gentleman pictures as the condition of affairs in Massachusetts; so that most of the great obligations which this Government owes shall be obligations on call; so that there may be a rush, not of servant-girls alone, but of speculators all over the land, to demand either more greenbacks for their bonds or more bonds for their greenbacks. Of course, for all the great volume of money that our capitaljsts hold to-day and are willing to lend out, as the gentleman says, for 3 per cent. on call, they would ask the Government to give them 3.65 per cent. during such dull times as they might not use it more profitably.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to ask him, whether the Government would be injured by receiving it at 3.65 per cent. interest in paper and redeeming with it 6 per cent. gold bonds?

Mr. GARFIELD. With the prospect of being called on the next week to use more than all it had received in meeting the demand to pay out the currency again! It is a proposition to this effect: That if there be a lull in the business of the country, so that a hundred millions of currency may be lying idle at any time, the Treasury of the United States shall take that money and give the owner interest on it. But the moment the owner finds it valuable to speculate he comes back to the Government and says: "Give me the money now. I have not needed it while you had it, and I asked you to keep it for me and pay me interest on it, but now I can speculate a little with it at a higher rate, and therefore I ask you to give it back to me." That is the proposition.

Mr. KELLEY. Why do not the owners of the sixty millions which lie dead in your Treasury offer it? Would the fact that they could earn more than 3.65 per cent. interest make them more eager to offer it? They stand as a perpetual repudiation of that argument.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman pursues the policy of demonetizing gold and making it a commodity, I do not wonder the people who have the commodity should be willing that the Treasury should take care of it for them. But let gold again become money, the money of the Constitution, and he will find the owners of that sixty millions will not let it lie idle.

Mr. KELLEY. It is not sixty millions of gold, but of greenbacks.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will excuse me, I have but a word more to say. Mr. Chairman, we have been and still are passing through a great financial revolution in this country—a revolution which began when the war broke out and has not yet ended. We passed from the level of peace up to the perilous and stormy heights of war, and as a dire necessity—not as a matter of choice, but as an imperative and dreadful necessity of war—we issued some $350,000,000 of paper, as a forced loan, with the avowed purpose on the part of all thoughtful statesmen of that time to take up that issue at the earliest possible moment, and restore the Government to the standard of real money—to the standard of the Constitution. We went ballooning, and in those days of unparalleled inflation, in accordance with the immutable laws of trade, we found that all business was easy. Externally, at least, there was an appearance of prosperity. But such prosperity must always be paid for. The return to solid values is always hard. We have been coming down through great stress and strain. Distress, panic, and hard times have marked our pathway in returning toward solid values.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] says there has been 33 per cent. of shrinkage of values in New York and 25 in Massachusetts, and great shrinkage everywhere.

Now, when we are almost down to the solid ground of honest values, the proposition of these gentlemen is that we shall cut loose forever—I use the word in the sense in which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] used it—we shall cut loose forever from the old traditional standard of value, and go floating, ballooning, flying, with no hope of return again forevermore. Holding the views I do, it would be base in me not to protest to the extent of my power against any scheme which would plunge the country again into the chaos and darkness in which we have so long been wandering in regard to our finances.

If there ever was a time when American statesmanship needed courage and self-denial, that self-denial which shall reduce, reduce, REDUCE expenditures, reject all schemes of expansion, spurn all measures that tend to push us further away from solid values and honest industries, that time is now.

In my judgment this country owes a debt of gratitude to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of the Treasury for their utterances yesterday on this subject. I believe they will receive the thanks of the thoughtful people of this country without distinction of party. In the midst of pressure, contention, and divided counsels, they have spoken calmly and wisely, and in striking contrast with the talk to which we have just listened. Let us not mistake effects for causes. I am amazed at gentlemen who say that the cause of our financial disaster is a lack of currency, and that more currency will remedy the evil. On the contrary, it is clear to me that one of the prime causes of our disaster has been the unsettled, unsteady, fickle, and uncertain value of the money which our people use, and the remedy for this evil is to return to the solid ground. Let us determine, once for all, that by no device of paper credit, by no tricks of the printing-press, by no empty symbol of value that has no value behind it, can prosperity be wooed back to our land.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I rose simply to express the hope that we may have this bill printed, that the committee may rise, and we may take full time to consider this measure; or, what will be better, that we waste no more time in discussing it, but that all our efforts be expended in an opposite direction. I yield the floor to my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. DAWES took the floor.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to go on to-night with his remarks I am quite content he should do so, and will propose, after he is through, that the committee rise, and we postpone this discussion to another day.

Mr. DAWES. I did not rise, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of engaging in this debate. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has yielded the floor, and I suppose I have it in my own right.

I propose to ask the committee to rise, and renew this debate on an early day. It was upon my motion that the House went into committee, not for the special purpose of precipitating this debate upon the currency, but for the purpose of addressing ourselves to the current business of the House. But I do not know, sir, that I regret that we have come at once upon the subject which rises above all others in importance, and presses itself for a solution more than any other upon the consideration of this Congress in this its last session. I shall myself, so far as I can, endeavor to urge upon the House the consideration of this question, until they announce to the country some settled policy upon it. I desire, therefore, to ask the committee to rise, and that we be permitted on the morrow, if it be convenient, to renew this debate, not for the purpose of indulging in general platitudes or enunciations of principle, but for the solution of this one question. The Government of the United States has $382,000,000 of its promises afloat in the land. No other nation has the like; and this nation in no other part of its history was ever in this situation. The difficulties in business, the difficulties that beset the employment of labor and capital, arise solely from the depreciation of these $382,000,000 of the promises of the Government. They are below par; and that measure, and that measure alone, will bring relief to this country that will make them on a par with the money of the civilized world. We need not address ourselves to any other collateral issue or discuss any other elemental principle. The question is, What policy is it that will make these promises equal to the money of the world? They are the promises of the Government, and it is the Government that has depreciated its own promises. It is incumbent upon the representatives of the Government here to provide that the Government shall make up to those they have forced to take its depreciated paper the difference between it and gold. No other method will be tolerated by the civilized world that will bring relief to the distress of labor, to the stagnation of capital, to the disturbance of values, from which we now suffer.

I do not desire at present to occupy the attention of the House one moment longer, but, holding the floor, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his motion for a moment. I desire to address the committee for only one minute.

Mr. DAWES. I would be more disposed to yield to the gentleman if I had finished my remarks.

Mr. COX. I thought the gentleman had finished.

Mr. DAWES. I hold the floor for the purpose of finishing my remarks.

Mr. COX. The gentleman will allow me to say what will not interrupt his speech at all. I rose for the purpose of deprecating this discussion. I speak what I believe to be the opinion of the solid men, the merchants and others of New York City as well as of other places, when I say that this discussion is entirely inconsequential, and that it will produce bad effects; and I for one am not to be held responsible for bringing it on. You cannot pass this law this session. You may pass it in this House, but you know that you cannot pass it in the Senate, and you know that the President will veto it if you pass it.

Mr. KELLEY. I rise to a question of order. We are not to be overawed by threats either of what the Senate will do or of what the President will do.

Mr. COX. This is the dying groan of a dying party.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. DAWES that the committee rise, it was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TYNER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the general Calendar, had come to no decision on any bill contained therein.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask consent that the bill last under the consideration of the Committee of the Whole be printed as amended.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report, dated the 8th instant, with accompanying papers, from the Secretary of State, in compliance with the requirements of section 203 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, December 8, 1874.

The SPEAKER. The report relates to the fees of consuls and diplomatic officers, and will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONTESTED ELECTION—BELL VS. SNYDER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House additional testimony in the case of Bell vs. Snyder, third district of Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BECK: The petition of James Turner, Washington Bell, John Warnock, and other colored depositors in the branch of the Freedmen's Bank at Lexington, Kentucky, for relief in such form as is equitable for losses sustained by them, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, resolutions of the North Carolina Legislature, asking compensation for destruction of court-house by Federal troops in Davidson County, North Carolina, in 1865, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILBER: Papers relating to claim of E. B. Barnett, postmaster at Norwich, Chenango County, New York, for relief, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 9, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

Hon. JOHN B. GORDON, from the State of Georgia, and Hon. MORGAN C. HAMILTON, from the State of Texas, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will lay before the Senate a letter of the Treasurer of the United States, communicating, in obedience to law, copies of his accounts for the third and fourth quarters of the year 1872, and the first and second quarters of the year 1873. These papers are voluminous, and unless desired they will not be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the order to print those Treasury accounts will not be made until the Committee on Printing recommends it. It is of no earthly account to print these documents; but if some Senator desires to have them printed, a motion to print may be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The papers will lie upon the table for the present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SCOTT presented the memorial of the type-founders of the United States, signed by type-founders resident in Philadelphia, Boston, San Francisco, Chicago, and a number of other cities, remonstrating against the ratification of the Canadian reciprocity treaty so far as it relates to printing types and materials; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SCOTT. I present the memorial of the Texas and Pacific Railway Company, and the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, praying Congress to aid those companies in the construction of their roads. After stating that the building of these highways has been arrested by the financial embarrassment now existing in the country, they proceed to give numerous reasons why aid should be extended to provide a complete and southern system of roads to the Pacific. I will not detain the Senate by enumerating these reasons, but, in compliance with the rule requiring a brief summary of a petition to be given, I will content myself with saying that, in order to complete this system in the least number of miles required to cover the territory to which we should have access, they propose that the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company should deflect its line southwestwardly from Vinita, its present terminus, and that the Texas and Pacific Railway Company should construct its line so that a connection can be made with the road of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company at some convenient point on or east of the one hundred and fourth meridian, to be agreed upon as best for the interest of the companies and the Government, thus saving the construction of about fifteen hundred miles of road, and restoring to the United States about thirty million acres of land heretofore granted to aid in such construction. To accomplish this purpose they suggest that it may be done by the Government—using the words of the memorial—"guaranteeing the interest on 5 per cent. gold bonds of the companies, as follows: That for each section of ten or more miles of continuous road constructed and equipped by either company, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, for and in the name of the United States, guarantee the interest at the rate of 5 per centum per annum in gold—but not the principal—on bonds to be issued by such company, for road constructed and equipped in the open or plain country, say for one-half of the line authorized, at the rate of $30,000 per mile; and for the remaining road constructed in the rough or mountainous country at the rate of $40,000 per mile; being an average of $35,000 per mile on the whole line each company is authorized to construct; an additional amount of $5,000 per mile of such bonds to be issued by each company and deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury until after the completion of the road each company is respectively authorized to build, and then expended in the purchase of such additional equipment or other permanent improvements as the officers of the companies shall certify under oath the increasing business of their roads requires."

This memorial has been placed in my hands by a citizen of Pennsylvania, the president of the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and as such the representative of many other citizens of that State, as well as of other States interested in these improvements. It is accompanied by a bill, the provisions of which I have not had time to examine, but I am informed that it is designed to give effect to the suggestions of the petition. I will offer that bill when it shall be in order, holding myself free to approve or reject its provisions, as I may find upon examination that they deserve to be approved or rejected. I move that the memorial lie on the table to be referred to the Committee on Railroads, when appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will take that direction.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of Julius Pickering, of Auburn, New York, praying for an extension of his patent for an improved method of attaching straps to boot-legs; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I present the petition of merchants, millers, shippers of coal, flour, and other products, and citizens interested in the commerce of the port of Georgetown, District of Columbia, asking for the passage of the bill which is annexed; "that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, required to remove the obstructions from the channel in the draw through the railroad-bridge used by said company, across the Potomac River, from Washington City to the State of Virginia; and that said company be, and they are hereby, required to cause the channel through said draw to be unobstructed to navigation for a width at least of sixty-six feet." This petition is very numerously signed, and I ask that it lie on the table with a view to its reference to the proper committee when the committees are appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the memorial of the National Association of Lumbermen, remonstrating against the ratification of the treaty between the United States and Canada, known as the "reciprocity treaty;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of H. H. Reed and other citizens of Smith's County, Kansas, praying permission to leave their homesteads for the period of one year, without forfeiting their titles thereto, by reason of the ravages of grasshoppers; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of Horace Brown, of Milo, Piscataquis County, Maine, praying to be granted a pension on account of services rendered in the war of 1812; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. STEVENSON presented the petition of Blanton Duncan, as trustee, &c., praying compensation for the use and occupancy by United States troops of a dwelling-house and other property in Kentucky, during the late war, belonging to his wife and children; which was ordered to lie on the table.

COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. ANTHONY. I beg leave to interrupt the proceedings at this point to move that the Senate proceed to the election of standing committees, in order that the bills may be referred immediately.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the rule which requires the chairmen of committees to be elected by ballot.

There being no objection, the rule was dispensed with.

Mr. ANTHONY. I now offer a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the following be the standing committees of the Senate during the present session:

On the Library—Messrs. Howe, (chairman,) Allison, and Edmunds.

On Engrossed Bills—Messrs. Bayard, (chairman,) Lewis, and Cooper.

On Enrolled Bills—Messrs. Clayton, (chairman,) Pease, and Kelly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the resolution proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that there be added to the standing committees a committee on revision of the rules, to consist of three members.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Asking unanimous consent to dispense with the rule which requires the chairman to be elected by ballot, if there be no objection, I nominate Mr. FERRY of Michigan, Mr. HAMLIN, and Mr. MERRIMON as the Committee on Revision of the Rules.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the rule is suspended. The question is on the motion to appoint the gentlemen named upon the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board and the Select Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River be continued during the present session.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Asking unanimous consent to dispense with the rule which requires the chairmen to be elected by ballot, I nominate the following persons for those committees.

There being no objection, the rule was dispensed with, and the list was read, as follows:

SELECT COMMITTEES.

On Transportation Routes to the Sea-board—Messrs. Windom, (chairman,) Sherman, Conkling, West, Conover, Mitchell, Norwood, Davis, and Johnston.

On the Levees of the Mississippi River—Messrs. Alcorn, (chairman,) Clayton, Schurz, Cooper, and Harvey.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. RAMSEY, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Miss Rebecca S. Wright be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING. I am requested to move an order authorizing C. F. Johnson, of Mobile, Alabama, to withdraw his papers touching a tobacco claim. I find there has been an adverse report in this case, and the order therefore should be that copies be left if the originals are withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made if there be no objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LEWIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 985) to provide that all pensions on account of death wounds received or disease contracted in the service of the United States since March 4, 1861, which have been granted, or which shall hereafter be granted, on application filed previous to January 1, 1875, shall commence from the date of death or discharge, and for the payment of the arrears of pensions; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 986) explanatory of section 25 of the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights;" which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 987) to reduce and fix the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 988) to authorize the Secretary of War to ascertain the expenses incurred by the State of Kansas in resisting the Indian invasions of 1874; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCOTT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 989) amendatory of, and supplementary to, an act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1871, and an act supplementary thereto, approved May 2, 1872; and an act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific Ocean, approved July 27, 1866; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 990) providing for the entry of certain lands in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 991) to provide for the selection of grand and petit jurors in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOUTWELL (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 992) for the relief of Isaac H. Tower; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 993) for the relief of Luther Hall; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 994) for the relief of James R. Porter; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 995) for the construction of a military wagon-road from Sidney, Nebraska, to the post at the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REFERENCES OF BILLS, ETC.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the various bills and petitions, and also the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and other reports, be referred to the appropriate committees by general order.

The motion was agreed to.

Under this general order of reference, bills heretofore introduced were taken from the table and referred as indicated:

A bill (S. No. 964) to provide for the revision of the laws for the collection of customs duties—to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. No. 965) for the relief of certain settlers upon the public lands in the State of Kansas—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. No. 984) to regulate the lien of judgments in the courts of the United States on real estate—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WASHINGTON MARKET COMPANY.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That Senate report No. 449, Forty-third Congress, first session, and Senate bill No. 937, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report what action shall be taken thereon.

As this merely involves a question of law, it is very proper it should be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at twelve o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 9, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The following additional members appeared: JAMES S. SMART, PHILIP S. CROOK, and ELI PERRY, of New York; JOHN J. DAVIS, of West Virginia; WILLIAM A. SMITH, of North Carolina; FREDERICK G. BROMBERG, of Alabama, and LIONEL A. SHELDON, of Louisiana.

CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Mr. WOOD. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution calling for executive information. I send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to forthwith obtain and transmit to this House a report from the collector of customs at the port of New York, setting forth distinctly whether, on any article entered at that port since June 22, 1874, a higher or lower rate of duty has been levied than was levied or was chargeable under the instructions of the Treasury Department on a like article, if imported into the same port on the 1st day of December, 1873; and if a higher or lower rate has thus been imposed, then to specifically enumerate in his report each article which has been the subject thereof, according to its commercial designation, and declare the rate which the instructions of the Treasury Department required to be in force on said 1st day of December and the different rate on a like article since the said 22d day of June; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be also directed, in case the collector of New York shall report that the rates have been increased or diminished on any article, to accompany the said report by a statement as to each article, showing whether the said change was caused by any new matter in the Revised Statutes of June 22, 1874, not contained in previous laws; and, if so, point out precisely such change, or alteration, of previous laws, citing statutes and sections; and if the said increase or diminution was not required by any such new matter in the Revised Statutes, then to explain by what authority the increase or diminution of duty was made, giving in respect to each and every article the whole text of the letter of instructions or order the Treasury Department imposing the rate in force on the said 1st day of December, and of the correspondence, instructions, or circular by which that rate was changed after the said 22d day of June.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would inquire of the gentleman why he does not direct his resolution to the Secretary of the Treasury, and call upon him for the facts, and not for what the collector of the port of New York may have said about it? I would like to have the resolution so modified, and then I should think it ought to pass. I think there is some misapprehension about this subject, and the public should be fully informed upon it.

Mr. WOOD. The port of New York is referred to by the resolution for the purpose of obtaining the information at the earliest possible moment. I will, however, accept the modification suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and call upon the Secretary of the Treasury for the information.

Mr. KELLOGG. I suggest that this resolution be first referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and let them examine and report to the House whether the information is necessary. Last session the services of two or three hundred clerks in the Department were almost constantly required to answer such resolutions as this; and I then made up my mind that I would not consent to such calls unless recommended by some competent committee.

Mr. WOOD. If the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] objects to the adoption of the resolution, I will consent to its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think it should first be examined by that committee.

Mr. WOOD. Let it be referred, then.

No objection being made, the resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. POLAND. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the Congressional Printer be directed to bind one hundred copies of the Revised Statutes of the United States without the index; forty copies for the use of the Senate and sixty copies for the use of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Why without the index, the most valuable part of the book?

Mr. POLAND. The Revised Statutes are all prepared and printed except the index, which is not yet completed, and will not be for some time. It is indispensable, however, that we have some copies for use in the two Houses.

Mr. GARFIELD. I thought you were excluding the index as something you did not want.

Mr. POLAND. O, no; it is not yet completed.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I think the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] had better not press that resolution this morning. I understand that the volume of Revised Statutes is found to be so full of defects that it must be re-examined from beginning to end, and almost altogether revised. I do not think we had better go to the expense of printing any such thing until it is further revised.

Mr. POLAND. It is all printed now; and for the purpose of determining whether it be as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] says, I think we had better have a few copies to examine and find out.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I think one copy will answer. The gentleman from Vermont is the only gentleman I think that wants it or desires it.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Vermont how copies of these Revised Statutes can be obtained. I have had letters from lawyers in the country inquiring of me whether they can subscribe for these books and obtain them at the cost of press-work and printing, as they can other documents. I would like to have the gentleman state to us how that is, so that the lawyers and others in the country may know how they can be supplied.

Mr. POLAND. The law that we passed for the publication of the Statutes provided that they should be sold, when ready for distribution, at the cost of printing and binding; and they are to be sold at that cost to the profession and everybody else who chooses to purchase them.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Will the gentleman state about how much that cost will be?

Mr. POLAND. I do not know; I cannot tell.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is there any other method of obtaining them except by applying to the Government Printing Office?

Mr. POLAND. This matter is all left by law with the Secretary of State, who is to take such measures as he deems proper in order to make these volumes accessible to the whole people.

Mr. MAYNARD. Have any measures been taken to place copies of these Revised Statutes where they can be referred to by the various courts?

Mr. POLAND. I suppose that could not be done until the volumes are fully prepared and printed. They are now, I understand, all prepared and printed with the exception of the index, which is not yet complete. The object of my resolution is to supply the two Houses of Congress with a few copies at once, so that we may have them to use, even without an index. It is indispensable that we should have them.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Should not the resolution be modified, so as to provide that the copies furnished under it shall include the index so far as completed?

Mr. POLAND. Of course that will be done.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. GARFIELD. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour now begins at twenty minutes past twelve o'clock, and the House resumes the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, a bill (H. R. No. 3279) amendatory of and supplemental to the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and for other purposes. The gentleman from California [Mr. HOUGHTON] is entitled to one-half hour.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, since the adjournment of the House yesterday I am informed that telegrams have been received, stating that the proceeding in the United States court for the district of Iowa, to procure a mandamus against the Union Pacific Railroad Company, has been argued and submitted. I understand that the question to be passed upon in that case is whether this road is now operated in accordance with existing laws. If the court should decide that the road is so operated, then there will be no necessity for the legislation proposed in this bill; but if the court should decide that the road is not operated in accordance with existing laws, then the legislation here proposed will be proper. I therefore move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the second Tuesday of February next, after the morning hour.

Mr. GARFIELD. I shall object to any order that may interfere with the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. That question will be for the majority of the House to determine.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will except appropriation bills from the proposed order I shall not object.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I suppose that most of the appropriation bills will be disposed of by the time named in my motion; and when the question now pending judicially has been decided, as it will be in all probability before that time, this bill can be disposed of, perhaps, in an hour at the most.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman does not ask to have the bill made a special order I do not object.

Mr. HOUGHTON. We desire to have it made a special order for that day.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to postpone the further consideration of this bill until the second Tuesday in February, after the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUGHTON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER continued the call of committees for some time, no reports being presented; when

Mr. DAWES said: I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the President's annual message, for the reference of the various subjects embraced therein.

The SPEAKER, having put the question on the motion, declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. DAWES. I will state why I make this motion. It is because it is apparent that none of the regular committees are prepared to report.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman is mistaken about that. Some of the regular committees are prepared to report.

Mr. DAWES. I understood that committees were being run through and losing their places, because they do not happen to be prepared.

Mr. CONGER. Some of us are anxious that the committees not ready to report shall be "run through," so as to reach those that are ready.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the gentleman now. I think, however, that——

Mr. BRADLEY. I desire to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there are committees that were not permitted to report during the last session, because they were not called, and the several members—some of them, at least—have been waiting patiently for an opportunity to report. I hope the call will be allowed to proceed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must correct the gentleman. There is no committee that was not called during the last session.

Mr. DAWES. I will state just why I make the motion; then, of course, the House will determine the matter for itself. There are several committees next to be called that do not happen to be ready. This call may be the only opportunity they will have to report at this short session; hence they are unwilling to lose their place. It does not seem quite fair to them to take them thus unawares.

The question being put on the motion of Mr. DAWES, there were—ayes 111, noes 23.

Mr. CONGER. I wanted to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES;] but as the Speaker announced the motion to be lost, I did not press my right to the floor. If, however, there is to be a further division, I would like to make a reply to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say this, that although all of the committees may not be prepared now to submit reports, yet if we hear those which are prepared we may be enabled to go through with the call of the committees this morning, and can again commence it the next time the call of committees is in order. There are committees who waited during the last part of the last session to be called who were not reached, and if we go along during this session waiting for committees who are dilatory or not ready to report, we will not have opportunity for some of the committees lower down on the list to be called at all. I think we should take advantage of the present opportunity to hear reports and consider such business as is ready for consideration now. I hope the House will go on with the call in the morning hour. I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. A division has been already had, but the gentleman can call for tellers.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. HOSKINS in the chair) on the President's annual message.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress at the present session, together with the accompanying documents, as relates to finance and taxation, to the receipts into the Treasury, to deficiencies in the revenue, to the public debt and public credit, the revision of the tariff and internal-revenue laws, to retiring and funding United States notes, and to the ways and means of supporting and meeting the liabilities of the Government, be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the necessary appropriation for carrying on the Government in its several departments, to deficiencies in appropriations for the Post-Office Department, and to appropriations for mail-steamship service between the United States and other countries, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to banks and banking, to the currency, and resumption of specie payments, be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the encouragement of American steamship lines, to the revival of American ship-building, and to commerce and navigation, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the public domain be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the Post-Office Department, and to land and ocean mail service, be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to an increase of the judicial districts of the Government and to a corresponding increase of judges of the Supreme Court, to courts and the judiciary, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the revision of the laws of the United States be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents and the accompanying correspondence as relates to foreign affairs, to treaties with foreign governments, and to fraudulent naturalization, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the Army of the United States be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the Navy of the United States be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to agriculture, and the Department of Agriculture, be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relate to the management of Indian affairs be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the Pacific Railroads be referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to claims against the Government, not including claims growing out of any war in which the United States has been engaged, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to manufactures be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to private land claims be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to mines and mining be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to coinage, weights, and measures be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to public buildings and grounds be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the expenditures on the public buildings be referred to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the Territories of the United States be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to pensions and to the Pension Bureau be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to revolutionary pensions and to pensioners of the war of 1812 be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims and War of 1812.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to patents and the Patent Office be referred to the Committee on Patents.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to civil-service reform be referred to the Select Committee on the Reorganization of the Civil Service of the United States.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to railways and canals, and all questions growing out of the subject of "cheap transportation," be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to claims growing out of any war in which the United States has been engaged be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the proposed centennial celebration be referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial Celebration and the proposed National Census of 1875.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the condition of affairs in Arkansas, be referred to the select committee to inquire into the condition of affairs in the State of Arkansas.

Resolved, That so much of said message and documents as relates to the condition of the Southern States and to the enforcement of the provisions of the Constitution and the laws therein be referred to a special committee, to consist of seven members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker.

Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the Department of Justice be referred to the Committee on the Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the claims of aliens be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. DAWES. I move the adoption of those resolutions.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. DAWES. I move the committee rise and report the resolutions to the House.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOSKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the President's annual message, and had directed him to report to the House certain resolutions.

Mr. DAWES. I call for the previous question on the adoption of the resolutions.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolutions were adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESIGNATION OF MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication:

The Clerk read as follows:

BUTLER, PENNSYLVANIA, December 1, 1874.

DEAR SIR: At our late election, on the 3d ultimo, I was elected a law judge for the seventeenth judicial district of Pennsylvania for a term of ten years, to commence on the first Monday of January, A. D. 1875. I have, in consequence, tendered my resignation as a member of the Forty-third Congress of the United States from the twenty-third district of Pennsylvania, to take effect on the 1st of January, 1875. The governor of Pennsylvania, to whom my resignation was tendered, has accepted the same, and has caused writs to be issued authorizing an election to be held on the 22d instant to fill the vacancy.

Very respectfully,

E. MCJUNKIN.

Hon. J. G. BLAINE,
Speaker House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. The Chair received during the recess the resignation of Hon. ROBERT B. ELLIOTT, a Representative from South Carolina, whose place has been filled and his successor sworn in. He also received the resignation of Hon. STEWART L. WOODFORD, of New York, whose place has also been filled and his successor sworn in.

COLUMBIA HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN AND LYING-IN ASYLUM.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to an appropriation for the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, Washington, District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MONTANA INDIAN WAR CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the payment of the Montana Indian war claims of 1867; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. SEIBERT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the claim of George W. Seibert, contractor for grading streets and sidewalks in front of the United States arsenal grounds in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

GEORGE WRIGHT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the case of George Wright, for remuneration for the use of his patent linchpin; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

PROTECTION OF BANKS OF COLORADO RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the protection of the banks of the Colorado River at Yuma Depot from the action of the current; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BOISE BLANC MILITARY RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the military reservation on Boise Blanc, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with the act of September 2, 1789, his adjusted quarterly accounts of the general receipts and expenditures of the United States for the third and fourth quarters of 1872 and the first and second quarters of 1873, being for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that that be printed.

The letter and accompanying statements were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD BOOKER.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to introduce and have put upon its passage a bill removing the political disabilities of Edward Booker, of Henry County, Virginia.

The SPEAKER. A petition accompanies this bill from the person for whose benefit it is asked.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3891) was received, read three times, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.

Mr. NIBLACK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3892) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to persons disabled in the military or naval service of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CORRECTION OF DATES OF COMMISSIONS.

Mr. NESMITH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3893) to correct the dates of commission of certain officers of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LOUISIANA JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. MOREY. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 88, and that it be placed back on the Speaker's table. On the last night of the session a motion was made that this bill be referred to the Judiciary Committee, to which I objected, and the bill was ordered to be laid on the Speaker's table. It appears on the Journal that it was referred to the Judiciary Committee. That was a mistake. I would state that my only object is that we may have more speedy action on the bill. A bill exactly similar to this one has already been reported from the House Judiciary Committee, and is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the bill?

Mr. MOREY. It is the bill to divide Louisiana into two judicial districts.

Mr. RANDALL. What does the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD say?

Mr. MOREY. That it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Then it corresponds with the Journal. I submit you cannot change it now.

Mr. MOREY. This is similar to the bill which was reported unanimously from the Committee on the Judiciary; and as we cannot go back and correct the Journal, I have asked consent to submit the motion which I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the request of the gentleman from Louisiana. The bill from the Senate was on the Speaker's table, and, in the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table at the close of the session, the Journal shows and the RECORD shows that this bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee. The gentleman says that he objected to that reference. It was at a time when unanimous consent was required for such a disposition of the bill. The Chair has no recollection in regard to it. The Journal shows that the bill was referred. The gentleman now asks that the bill should be placed precisely where it was, and where, according to his statement, it should be if his objection had been heard. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. If the bill was not referred, and the Journal is wrong, the bill should be restored to its place. Otherwise——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that, going through the bills upon the Speaker's table by unanimous consent, if there had been any objection to the reference of any particular bill, it would have remained where it was upon the table. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOREY] will not gain a single point by having his bill back upon the Speaker's table, for it is a bill against which a point of order would lie, requiring it to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as it creates a new office.

Mr. MOREY. Does that objection lie against a Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. Against a Senate bill as well as against a House bill. The bill is in just as good a position now as it would be if put back upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. MOREY. Then I withdraw my request.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING IN SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3894) appropriating $100,000 for the site and construction of a post-office building in the city of Sacramento, California; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PROTECTION OF FOREIGNERS.

Mr. PAGE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3895) to protect persons of foreign birth against forcible constraint or involuntary servitude; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LAND TITLES, ETC., IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BUCKNER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3896) granting legal titles to all New Madrid locations in the State of Missouri for which patents have not heretofore been issued; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUCKNER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3897) authorizing the archives of the several land offices in the State of Missouri to be delivered to said State whenever said offices shall be closed and discontinued; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

RAVAGES BY GRASSHOPPERS.

Mr. CROUNSE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce and have passed a little bill against which, I apprehend, there will be no objection. It is a bill for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in the State of Nebraska.

The bill, which was read, provides that it shall be lawful for homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands in the State of Nebraska, whose crops were destroyed or seriously injured by grasshoppers in the year 1874, to leave and be absent from said lands until May 1, 1875, under such regulations as to proof of the same as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe; and that during such absence no adverse rights shall attach to said lands, but such settlers shall be allowed to resume and perfect their settlement as though no absence had been enjoyed or allowed.

Mr. CLYMER. While I may not object to the bill, I think it should be first considered by the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. CROUNSE. It is the same bill that was passed at the last session.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. How could we pass at the last session a bill in relation to ravages by grasshoppers in 1874?

Mr. CROUNSE. In regard to the State of Minnesota the year before.

Mr. KASSON. Also the State of Iowa.

Mr. CLYMER. Let it go to the Committee on the Public Lands with leave to report it back at any time. I promise the gentleman it shall be done very promptly if so referred.

Mr. CROUNSE. Very well; I will not object.

No objection being made the bill (H. R. No. 3898) was accordingly received, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCRARY. I desire to make a request with reference to the matter just passed upon by the House. I ask that the Committee on the Public Lands have leave to report any bill upon that subject; if they see fit, one more general in its scope, which was introduced by me yesterday, and which applies to the entire region devastated by grasshoppers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the leave already granted by the House to report at any time having been given in reference to a particular bill, an amendment would not be in order to add another locality.

Mr. McCRARY. I will ask that the committee have leave to report bills in relation to other localities similarly situated.

No objection was made, and leave was accordingly granted.

MILEAGE OF OFFICERS.

Mr. CESSNA, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3899) explanatory of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1874; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

A. K. EATON AND J. D. JENKINS.

Mr. PRATT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3900) for the relief of Ariel K. Eaton and James D. Jenkins, of Mitchell County, Iowa; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL H. STEVENS.

Mr. ORR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3901) to confirm the title of Samuel H. Stevens to certain lands in Iowa; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

FERDINAND MONTI.

Mr. AVERILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3902) for the relief of Ferdinand Monti; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MONITOR AND MERRIMAC.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3903) for the relief of Rear-Admiral John L. Worden, and the officers and crew of the United States steamer Monitor, who participated in the action with the rebel iron-clad Merrimac, on the 9th day of March, 1862; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I move that this bill be printed, and, with the accompanying memorial, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] so as to refer the bill to the Committee on War Claims. It is in the nature of a claim.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which all such matters have heretofore gone.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that reference will not be made. This is clearly in the nature of a claim.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It is not in the nature of a claim, because it is not claimed that anything is due. It is purely a matter of grace whether anything shall be allowed. The Naval Committee, it seems to me, is the appropriate committee to consider the case.

Mr. RANDALL. These men are not entitled to prize-money under existing law.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. They are not entitled to anything whatever under existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. Then the case should go as a claim to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I ask that the title of the bill be read again.

The Clerk again read the title of the bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman wants to discuss this question, I shall ask the same privilege.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. No, I do not wish to discuss the question. I only want to remark that such matters have always gone to the Naval Committee. I am not a member of that committee; but it seems to me that this case ought to go there.

Mr. RANDALL. All I say is that this is in the nature of a claim; that great favoritism has already been shown to the Navy, as distinguished from the Army, in connection with prize-money; and I want the case to go where it should go legitimately under the rules.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I think the gentleman himself must see that this is not a claim.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman state what committee had jurisdiction of the similar case relating to the Kearsarge?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KASSON. This is just such a case as that, and I think it ought to go to the same committee.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Precisely. This is purely a question whether Congress shall give a gratuity.

Mr. RANDALL. They do not claim that this vessel was captured.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let me suggest to my friend from Maine that the Committee on War Claims, in view of the powers given to it, would have been the appropriate committee to consider the case of the Kearsarge.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The province of the Committee on War Claims, as I understand, is to consider subject-matters in which there is a claim put forward for services rendered in connection with the war or for property taken or lost. Now, here is a subject entirely aside from that, presenting a question whether Congress will, in its grace, give something outright to these men.

Mr. RANDALL. Then it has not really the merit of a claim, because the proposition is for a gratuity. That is a still stronger reason why it should go to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. What has that committee to do with gratuities?

Mr. RANDALL. Why, sir, if it is proposed to give money away upon an application in the nature of a claim, whether it be an absolute claim or not, the matter comes within the purview of the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. This is a case growing out of a great and significant naval exploit; and all such things have gone to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I ask for a vote.

Mr. RANDALL. I warn the House in reference to this matter. The same proceeding was had as to the Farragut money.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. RANDALL as to the motion of Mr. HALE, of Maine, there were—ayes 58, noes 69; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL and Mr. HALE, of Maine, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 84.

So the amendment of Mr. RANDALL was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. HALE, of Maine, to refer the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, it was agreed to.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF THE DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. WHEELER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the commissioners of the District of Columbia one thousand copies of the report of said commissioners and the accompanying documents, in addition to the number provided by law.

BOARD OF AUDIT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. In pursuance of leave granted yesterday, I now report back from the Committee on Appropriations the joint resolution (H. R. No. 199) to continue the board of audit to examine and audit the unfunded or floating debt of the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that the board of audit constituted by section 6 of the act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, be continued until otherwise provided by law, with all the powers and duties specified in said section, and with compensation to the members of the board at a rate proportioned, according to time, to that granted in said act, and payable as therein provided; and the time for presenting claims is hereby extended for the period of thirty days from this date; and persons having sustained damages to real estate, but failed to present the same to the board of public works, may present the same for audit and allowance within the time above limited, as specified in the seventh class of claims mentioned in said sixth section; provided, that when the title to claims evidenced by certificates of the auditor of the board of public works is involved in suits now pending in any court of competent jurisdiction, such court shall not be ousted of jurisdiction in respect of such question of title; and after the board of audit shall have ascertained the amount, if any, due upon any such claim, the certificates of said board of audit shall be issued and be convertible in favor only of the person finally adjudged in such suit to be entitled thereto, and when said party may by law have execution of such judgment or decree.

The SPEAKER. The pending amendment is that moved by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] to add to the end of the joint resolution the following:

Provided, That interest on such unaudited accounts be reckoned to the date of presentation.

Mr. BECK. I wish to offer an amendment, which I ask at least may be read.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I also desire to move an amendment.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I wish to say the committee whose organ I am at present in this matter does not propose to open it to discussion or amendment as affecting the work done by these commissioners. It came before us incidentally in relation to continuing salaries; for as no salaries will be continued, because the law under which they were created has expired in its operation, the commissioners have requested us to put in a resolution simply continuing the duties of the board of audit. And that is what has been attempted in the pending joint resolution. Under these circumstances I do not feel like opening the question to a broad discussion of what these commissioners have done or what they have reported, because that is not involved here. As the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] was moved yesterday in such manner that it can be voted on, of course I cannot prevent that vote being taken; but I do not want to consent to any further amendment if I can help it.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman allow the amendment I desire to offer to be read?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 4 of the printed record the words "otherwise provided by law," and insert the following: "February 1, 1875, on or before which date a full report of the action of the board shall be laid before Congress."

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I should like to have an amendment read.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let it be read.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I wish to move the following, to come in as a second section to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Said board of audit shall proceed forthwith to examine and audit the accounts of the treasurer and auditor of the late board of public works according to the provisions of the said act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1874, as required by said act, and shall specifically report whether the accounts of said treasurer were so kept from day to day as to show his payments of currency or bonds; to whom paid and upon what authority; whether or not the moneys and other assets which were received by or were under the control of said treasurer have been properly accounted for by said treasurer, and what, if any, of such moneys or other assets have been paid out or disposed of by said treasurer without auditor's warrants or certificates therefor; what, if any, payments were made without evidence that the same were made for or on account of public improvements in the District of Columbia made by the said board of public works; what, if any, payments were made upon illegal or irregular warrants, accounts, or vouchers; what, if any, amounts remain in the hands of said treasurer; and to the end aforesaid, and to enable said board of audit to complete the duties assigned thereto in said act, said board shall have all the powers and perform all the duties in said act set forth, and shall make report of their proceedings herein and pursuant to said act, together with all oral testimony taken by them, to Congress at the present session thereof.

Mr. MAYNARD. There should be added the words "or any other matter or thing which may be deemed proper and desirable."

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky if this amendment of the gentleman from Indiana should pass he should extend his time, say fifteen days, because this adds to the labor very much, and it might be impossible to furnish this thing so early.

Mr. BECK. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that all I want is a report shall be made to this Congress, and if the work is not then completed, to enable it to renew these powers; but let us know in time what has been done, so as to act in the premises.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. If the gentleman will move his amendment so as to make it the 15th, instead of the 1st of February, I will admit the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BECK. I have no objection, so we can get a hearing.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Did the gentleman from Kentucky notice the terms of the amendment I have offered?

Mr. BECK. I could not hear it distinctly in the midst of the confusion.

The SPEAKER. There is too much confusion in the Hall. The House will come to order.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. The amendment I have submitted requires the board to report to this Congress. I wish the Clerk to read its concluding paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable said board of audit to complete the duties assigned thereto in said act, said board shall have all the powers and perform all the duties in said act set forth, and shall make report of their proceedings herein and pursuant to said act, together with all oral testimony taken by them, to Congress, at the present session thereof.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether in requiring these commissioners to report to Congress whatever oral testimony they have taken he does not ask them to do what they cannot do? They may have had oral testimony in cases settled a month or three months ago which they have not preserved, and which it would be impossible for them to report.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I will modify the amendment by adding after the words "oral testimony" the words "hereafter taken."

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let those words be inserted.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I have not the floor for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] to admit the amendments of the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do, if they are made harmonious.

Mr. BECK. I will modify the amendment I have offered by changing the date from the 1st to the 15th of February.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Will the gentleman from Maine yield to me to offer an amendment or two?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I think, as a matter of convenience, the amendments of the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Indiana, as modified, should in the first place be adopted.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection to these several amendments which are pending, they will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to the amendment offered yesterday by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

The SPEAKER. That will be considered as still pending.

There being no objection, the amendments of Mr. BECK, and Mr. WILSON of Indiana, as modified, were agreed to.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] still pending?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] was understood to have liberty to offer his amendment, and it was considered as pending. It cannot be disposed of without a vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that it may be again reported. It is in conflict with the well-established rules of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts had been rejected informally; but there must be a vote upon it to appear on the record.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, as follows:

Add to the end of the joint resolution the following:

Provided, That interest on such unaudited accounts be reckoned to the date of presentation.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I ask the Clerk to read a letter from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, who is one of the members of the board of audit. It is very brief.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, December 9, 1874.

DEAR SIR: The amendment offered by General BUTLER to the joint resolution to continue the board of audit ought not to pass in the form offered. On certain claims the board of audit allowed interest to August 1, 1874. General BUTLER's amendment is to allow interest to the date of presentation, and will allow tardy claimants an advantage over the diligent, and an advantage over those whose claims have been audited. Interest on the 3.65 bonds commenced August 1.

Sincerely yours,

R. W. TAYLER.

Hon. EUGENE HALE.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire in connection with this subject to state a few facts to the House.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania have the floor? I have not yielded it.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood that the Speaker had recognized me. I will be very brief, not occupying, I think, more than five or six minutes.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will yield that time to the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to show that the allegations as to the debt of this District made by the President of the United States in his message sent to Congress on Monday are gross errors, and I will show this from the very papers which the President himself ought to have had in his possession when he was making up his message.

The accounts agree as to the items of the bonded debt, making a total of $8,883,940.43, and they further agree as to the amount of the 3.65 bonds issued under the law passed at the last session, namely $2,088,168.73. They further agree as to the certificates of the board of audit, amounting to $4,770,558.45. These sums aggregate $15,742,667.61. The President goes on to make a credit against the funded debt, which had he known the truth and the facts he could not have made. He claims as a credit "less special improvement assessments (chargeable to private property) in excess of any demand against such assessments" of $1,614,054.37. Now, I maintain that not one dollar of that amount has as yet been collected, and that, when it shall be collected, it is pledged to the liquidation of a further indebtedness of the District entirely omitted by the President of the United States in his statement, but not omitted by the board of audit, to wit, the 8 per cent. certificates, of which those issued amount to $1,522,400. That money, if it is ever collected, is pledged in honor and by law to go to the payment of that debt of 8 per cent. certificates.

Furthermore, the President of the United States claims that the sum of $3,147,787.48 is not of the character of a funded debt. The board of audit distinctly deny that allegation, and say that this is in fact a part of the funded debt of the District, and no man familiar with accounts can fail to see that it is in fact a part of the funded debt. Adding that, we have a debt of $20,412,855.09. The board of audit claim a credit against this of about $460,000, not rightfully, as I consider; but when we refer to the report of the engineer of this District what do we find? We find that under class 4, which the board of audit state as part of the indebtedness, there is an item of $1,500,000; and Lieutenant Hoxie, the engineer of the District, estimates what will hereafter be required, and what, in truth, is a part of the actual debt of this District, that is, the sum of $1,700,000. Therefore, assuming the correctness of the very figures of this report, the aggregate debt of this District—and I stand ready to prove it to any man who is familiar with accounts—is $22,112,855.

There are plausible credits, I admit. But admitting all the credits claimed, whether by the President of the United States or by anybody else connected with the board of audit or the commissioners, the actual debt of this District remains over $20,000,000. And that is twice the amount that the people who had this management of the affairs of this District had the right to incur under the very letter of the law.

I am in favor of everything that will probe this matter to the bottom. We have not yet got to the bottom of the affairs of this District. In closing I invite, whether from the President or any officer of any Department, the very closest scrutiny of my figures in this respect, having not the least fear but what I will be found to be right, for I have taken them from the very figures presented to us in their own reports.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] to yield to me for two or three minutes.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will yield to the gentleman for a few minutes.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I cannot think of going into this matter of the District accounts at this time. I think this discussion is inopportune and premature. I have not the official documents.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to give my contradiction of the statement of the President of the United States that the debt of the District is only $14,000,000.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Undoubtedly the whole attack is upon the President of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not care who it is upon.

Mr. CHIPMAN. As it has been throughout the whole controversy. The District of Columbia is nothing; you have trampled it under your feet; we have no longer a government of the people. The President of the United States stands by the capital of the United States, and hence the attack upon him.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is usually fair in his arguments. But in this case he does not treat the House with his usual candor. The President does not state that the sum of $1,614,054.37 is an actual credit at this moment. He only suggests in his message that those special assessments are collectible, and that when collected they will go to the credit of our account.

Mr. RANDALL. Does he not deduct it from the debt?

Mr. CHIPMAN. He deducts it, but he places it openly before Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. Does he not misstate the facts?

Mr. CHIPMAN. He does not. That item is simply in the nature of bills receivable. Under the law the District of Columbia became responsible for the payment of all the improvements made. In order to recover the other side of the account an assessment was made under the law against private property, and this is one of the items of credit offsetting so much of the debit side.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right here?

Mr. CHIPMAN. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. It is whether the 8 per cent. certificates issued, to the extent of $1,522,400 by the District government, have not been realized by that government and the money spent?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I would answer the gentlemen if I had the papers before me. But to answer him without examination might lead me into error, as the gentleman probably is.

Mr. RANDALL. I have them.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I only rose to point out the error of the gentleman's argument. The District of Columbia has certain bills receivable—credits in the nature of bills receivable—not collected. But we claim that in reckoning our debt we have the right to consider those bills receivable for what they are worth. If collected, they will reduce our debt so much; if not collected, then the gentleman is right. Whether the President has included these 8 per cents or not I cannot say without examination. Certainly he could never have intentionally omitted what is known to the world as having been at one time in the nature of a bonded debt. This is a matter of public record, and there can be no dispute about the facts. I only suggest the error of the gentleman in not allowing us this credit when collected.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I am right, whether they are collected or not.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I did not interrupt the gentleman, and I protest against his going into this subject now. The truth is, these special assessments were levied against the private property in front of which the improvements are made. The gentleman will not deny that that property is ample to pay those assessments. The gentleman knows that under the ordinary rules of law they are preferred debts against the property; that even a mortgage must give way to an assessment for improvements for the public good. Hence, as a matter of fact, this is an item in our account for which we should receive credit.

I protest against the gentleman making an attack upon anybody on account of the District of Columbia, until that portion of the President's message has been referred to the appropriate committee and an examination made, so as to determine whether the President is right or wrong. Do not let any gentleman take the floor prematurely and attack any officer connected with the affairs of the District, and particularly the President, who is simply stating what comes to him in an official form from the officers of the District government.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not attacking the President of the United States; I am reviewing his figures, and I say again——

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I must resume the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say a word.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I cannot yield further.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the House will allow me to say a word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] declines to yield further.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask leave to say a word.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has had his say.

Mr. RANDALL. And I want another.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I cannot agree to have this discussion prolonged indefinitely. I said, in beginning, that I could not agree that all the discussion that would naturally come up about the action of the commissioners and their reports should come up on this proposition, which is simply to continue the board of audit, and to which, I understand, nobody objects.

Now, in reference to this assumed contradiction that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has raised here in his eagerness to make an issue with the President of the United States as to the District of Columbia, the sentiments of the message I gave attention to when read in the House and have examined somewhat since. The President claims to present from the documents furnished to him a statement of the financial condition of the District. Now, for one, I am free to say that upon that subject I was agreeably disappointed. I say freely that the debt of the District, upon any figures, so far as I have seen them, is not so large as I for one had feared at the time we adjourned it would be. I have felt it a subject of congratulation that, after all the suspicion and reproach that have been cast upon the late District government, (in some of which I shared,) this showing is so much better than had been expected. I have no doubt, though I do not undertake to speak for the President, that he has had the same feeling.

Now, what does he say in his message accounting for the largest item of difference so loudly heralded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania? The President sums up the indebtedness of the District as follows:

Bonded debt issued prior to July 1, 1874	$8,883,940 43
3.65 bonds, act of Congress June 20, 1874	2,088,168 73
	15,742,667 61

From this he deducts certain claims by way of offset—bonds owned by the city, and special-improvement assessments. He deducts these, as he clearly had a right to do. This leaves a debt of nearly $14,000,000. He goes on then to say:

In addition to this—

I am quoting the President's language, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not quote.

Mr. RANDALL. I had it right before me, and I stated its substance correctly.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The President says:

In addition to this there are claims preferred against the government of the District amounting in the estimated aggregate reported by the board of audit to $3,147,787.48, of which the greater part will probably be rejected.

These claims do not come within the class already presented and considered by the board of audit, certified to by them, and therefore ranking as proven claims, but they are of that shadowy form and nature that claims commonly are; and they justify the remark of the President following what I have just read:

This sum can with no more propriety be included in the debt account of the District government than can the thousands of claims against the General Government be included as a portion of the national debt.

There is the statement; and I leave it to the House whether the President has been guilty of lack of candor. He presented the financial condition of the District as shown by the documents or reports coming to his hands, as it was proper he should do, the subject-matter being one of national interest. After giving the figures of the bonded debt and outstanding certificates of indebtedness, and the offsets which he claims should be allowed—bonds owned by the District and the special improvement assessments—he makes the statement I have read in reference to this large amount of unaudited claims, between three and four million dollars.

I appeal to the candor of the House whether upon this there is anything that should excite the mad haste of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to make an issue with the President of the United States, and clamor here that he has been guilty of making a false exhibit because the gentleman can take a certain set of columns and figure out a certain result while he suppresses the explanations of the presidential message.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when I introduced this little bill, designed simply to continue the board of audit, I did not intend that there should be even as much discussion as there has been. I cannot consent that it go further. The gentleman has had his say; he has occupied the time that he asked, and reply has been made to him. If the House does not want to pass this bill continuing this board of audit, with the amendments I have admitted, that of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] who was chairman of the special committee having this subject in charge, amended by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] who certainly can be allowed to represent the feeling of the other side on this subject, then the House may reject it and the whole matter may stop here and now. But I cannot consent that this measure, which it is important should go through at once, shall be any further delayed.

Mr. RANDALL. I join issue of fact with the gentleman.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I call the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. I affirm that the President has omitted from his statement of the District debt any allusion to the $1,522,000 of 8 per cent. certificates, while he has claimed and deducted as a credit the amount of the special assessments, which are by law dedicated to the payment of those 8 per cent. certificates.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I insist on the call for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. Furthermore, I claim that the officers of the government of this District have negotiated that million and a half of 8 per cent. certificates and have spent the money.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is out of order.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I call the previous question.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I had desired to offer some amendments.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I cannot yield for further amendments.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] allow me to send an amendment to the desk?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have just refused to allow an amendment to be offered by my friend on the right, [Mr. CHIPMAN.]

Mr. COX. Let my amendment be read; perhaps the gentleman will accept it. I will state that it provides for the employment of two accountants. Surely they are needed.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. There is already authority for the employment of accountants.

Mr. COX. But my amendment names two persons—Mr. Godman, of Ohio, and Mr. William Warren, of New York.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am satisfied that there is now authority to employ all the accountants that may be needed. If I had not already declined to yield for further amendments, I would not decline now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose it is understood the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] is rejected.

The SPEAKER. It actually has not been voted on.

The amendment of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] as modified by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT OF IOWA.

Mr. McCRARY, by unanimous consent, presented a letter from James M. Love, judge of the district court of the United States, district of Iowa, in relation to a bill to confer circuit court powers on said court; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

STENOGRAPHER FOR HOUSE COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. When Mr. Francis H. Smith, stenographer for the committees of the House, resigned, the duty of naming his successor devolved upon the Chair, and he now appoints Mr. Andrew Devine, to date from the beginning of the present session.

Mr. SPEER moved that the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 43.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly (at five minutes to two o'clock p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 10, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

Hon. GEORGE GOLDTHWAITE, from the State of Alabama, Hon. OLIVER P. MORTON, from the State of Indiana, and Hon. THOMAS M. NORWOOD, from the State of Georgia, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 3822) making an appropriation to enable the Postmaster-General to carry into effect the law requiring the prepayment of postage on newspapers, approved June 25, 1874;

A bill (H. R. No. 3825) to amend the national-bank act, and fixing the compensation of national-bank examiners;

A bill (H. R. No. 3839) to prohibit Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress from acting as counsel or otherwise in suits or proceedings against the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 3891) relieving the political disabilities of Edward Booker, of Henry County, Virginia; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 199) to continue the board of audit to examine and audit the unfunded or floating debt of the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution to bind one hundred copies of the Revised Statutes of the United States without the index; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message further announced that the House requested the Senate to return to it the bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 2104) to confirm an agreement made with the Shoshone Indians (eastern band) for the purchase of the south part of their reservation in Wyoming Territory; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of the Houston, Trinity and Tyler Railroad Company, of Texas, praying compensation for railroad iron taken by the military authorities for the use of the United States at Galveston in 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WASHBURN presented a petition of John L. Shorey, publisher of the Nursery, praying a reduction of the rates of postage on periodicals; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CAMERON presented two petitions, largely signed by American seamen and others engaged in commerce, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the marine-hospital service; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PATTERSON presented the memorial of Alexander Henderson, praying for the balance due him as consul at Londonderry, Ireland; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move that the petition of Penelope L. Heald, on which an adverse report was made, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions, and in support thereof I submit for the same reference the affidavit of John L. Borden in support of the application.

The motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BOREMAN, it was Ordered, That E. Boyd Pendleton have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate on leaving copies of the same.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SCOTT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 996) for the relief of the Allegheny Valley Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAGER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 997) for the adjudication of title to lands claimed by José Apis and Pablo Apis, in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 998) supplemental to an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of the expenses incurred by the Territories of Oregon and Washington in the suppression of Indian hostilities therein in 1855 and 1856," approved March 2, 1861; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 999) providing for holding the terms of the United States district court for the southern division of Iowa at Burlington, in said division; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1000) amending the concluding proviso to section 3262 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WASHBURN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1001) to amend the fourteenth section of the act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, approved September 24, 1789; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That the bill (H. R. No. 2680) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Dulaney, with the accompanying papers, be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

NOTICES OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WRIGHT. On the first day of the session, I gave notice that on this morning I should call up the bill (H. R. No. 3621) to abolish the western district of Arkansas, and for other purposes. In view of the operation of the twenty-first joint rule of the two Houses, I suppose I cannot well insist upon the hearing of that bill this morning; but I now give notice that I shall on Tuesday of next week, if I can get the floor, immediately on the expiration of the morning hour, ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration.

And while I have the floor, Mr. President, I desire to say also that on the 10th of March, 1874, there was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill (S. 587) declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific Railroad acts approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, and for other purposes. That bill has been upon the Calendar from that time to this; and on Friday of next week, if I can get the floor, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration. In this connection, allow me to say also that there is a report from the Committee on the Judiciary on the subject, and I trust Senators will examine it, as its perusal will probably abbreviate the discussion very much, if discussion shall follow.

REVISED STATUTES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring,) That the Congressional Printer be directed to bind one hundred copies of the Revised Statutes of the United States without the index; forty copies for the use of the Senate, and sixty copies for the use of the House.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 3839) to prohibit Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress from acting as counsel, or otherwise, in suits or proceedings against the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3891) relieving the political disabilities of Edward Booker, of Henry County, Virginia.

The bill (H. R. No. 3825) to amend the national-bank act, and fixing the compensation of national-bank examiners was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 199) to continue the board of audit to examine and audit the unfunded or floating debt of the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 3822) making an appropriation to enable the Postmaster-General to carry into effect the law requiring the prepayment of postage on newspapers, approved June 25, 1874, was read twice by its title.

Mr. WEST. The ordinary course with that bill would be to refer it to the Committee on Appropriations; but the necessity for its immediate passage induces me, upon consultation with the chairman of that committee, to ask the consideration of the Senate to it at the present time. I accordingly make the motion that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senate will not at the beginning of the session set an example which is very mischievous; and it is a thing very rarely done in the Senate to pass bills from the other House without a reference. It will take but a moment to refer it, and it had better be done.

Mr. WEST. I will say, in reply to what the Senator from Ohio states, that unless this bill is passed immediately there will be a cessation of the circulation of the entire press of the United States on the 1st of January, because there will be no means of weighing the mails, according to the statute we passed at the last session. I think if the Senator understood what the bill was he would not object.

Mr. SHERMAN. The committee can report the bill to-day or to-morrow. If it be reported to-day by the committee, there will be no objection; but we ought to have the examination of the appropriate committee.

Mr. WEST. One objection carries it over, and I must consider that an objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

THE STEAMBOAT LAW.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return to it from the Senate of the bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes; and the Secretary was directed to return the bill to the House of Representatives in compliance with its request.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of State, in compliance with the requirements of section 208 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, being a statement of such fees as have been collected, accounted for, and reported by the consular and diplomatic officers of the United States during the years ending December 31, 1873, and June 30, 1874, together with the rates or tariffs of fees and a full list of consular officers in office on the 20th of December, 1873; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in answer to a Senate resolution of February, 1873, information in relation to the condition of the records and documents of Mexico relating to the land now embraced in the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico; also to their place of custody and deposit, and to the method of procuring authentic transcripts of such records and documents; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask leave to make a report. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution of the House of Representatives to print one hundred copies of the Revised Statutes without the index, have instructed me to report back the same with an amendment, and ask for its present consideration.

It is well known, to the legal gentlemen here at least, that the publication of the Revised Statutes is delayed by the time required to prepare the index, and it is not probable that the index will be complete—such an index as we must have—under a month. Meantime it is constantly necessary to refer to the laws. A very few copies have been already printed—I think but fifty—and there is a table of contents to the book, made up from the headings of the chapters, but no index. The committee have enlarged the number from one hundred to one hundred and fifty. The amendments are noted on the manuscript resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only purpose of this is for thirty days?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir; but thirty days sometimes means sixty. It is thought the index will be ready in thirty days.

Mr. SHERMAN. Even if it were sixty, it is manifest the House resolution has provided for binding enough for all practical purposes—forty for the Senate, sixty for the House. I was about to say that as this is all labor wasted after thirty or sixty days, after the index is prepared, it seems to me the smaller number would be better.

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee have enlarged the number at the suggestion of some legal Senators, rather than according to their own judgment.

Mr. SHERMAN. If those Senators say it is important, very well.

Mr. ANTHONY. We think there ought to be one copy for each committee-room of the Senate and each committee-room of the House, and then there ought to be half a dozen copies here and half a dozen in the House for constant reference, and then I suppose it is very desirable that some of the Executive Departments or Bureaus should have additional copies.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be read, and the resolution.

The Secretary read the House resolution, and also the amendments reported by the Committee on Printing.

The Committee on Printing propose to amend the resolution by striking out in line two "one hundred" and inserting "one hundred and fifty;" in line five, striking out "forty" and inserting "sixty;" and in line six, striking out "sixty" and inserting "ninety;" so as to make the resolution read:

That the Congressional Printer be directed to bind one hundred and fifty copies of the Revised Statutes of the United States without the index; sixty copies for the use of the Senate, and ninety copies for the use of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say, in answer to the Senator from Ohio, that I am advised it will be some considerable time before the perfected volume, with the index, will be ready. The gentlemen engaged upon it are now busy with the index. The index, of course, when printed with the volume, will be a permanent index, and cannot be changed. The Senator from Ohio is perfectly aware how essential it is that for so vast a book the index should be absolutely accurate and very copious, with cross-references and all that sort of thing.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Rhode Island said it would be ready in thirty days. If it extends over the session, I could see the necessity for a greater number.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will be more than thirty days, I have no doubt, and it ought to be so long that the gentlemen engaged upon it will not feel themselves hurried into leaving the index in the least degree insufficient or imperfect, because once printed it cannot well be changed. It is to stand for forty years, as we hope. Therefore, it appeared to me that it would be much wiser to put them under a little less pressure and to get on ourselves with the letter-press and the table of contents, which is prepared, for the time being. Every committee needs one copy; we need half a dozen here in the Chamber; the other House needs them; the Departments need them. It is almost impossible to find one of these books now; and as the expense is the mere cost of the paper practically, it is only a trifle.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was concurred in.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire, Mr. President, to obtain the consent of the Senate at the present time to fix a day for considering the bill reported from the joint select committee to frame a government for the District of Columbia. That bill is a pretty long bill, and will require some little time in its reading; but I hope that it will commend itself to the Senate in its general provisions, so that when they are considered the details will not be found to be very embarrassing. But if it is to be considered, as there is undoubtedly public demand that some bill of the kind should be considered at an early day, it must be done, I take it, in the first days of this session; and it seems to me that within the next few days will be the opportune time for the consideration of that bill. I ask the Senate, therefore, that a day next week may be agreed upon for the consideration of that bill; and as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has some proposition for Monday next, I would name Tuesday of next week. I move that the bill be assigned for consideration on Tuesday next.

Mr. WRIGHT. I trust the Senator from Maine will not insist on that. I have given notice that I intend to call up a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary on Tuesday. Will not Wednesday suit him as well?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would not antagonize this bill against pressing business from other committees.

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion that I propose to make on Monday will take about two minutes; it is merely to appoint a committee of conference. So I will withdraw any claim for Monday.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator from Iowa desires to go on with his bill in advance of this, suppose he takes Monday for his bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. That would be well enough but for the fact that the Committee on the Judiciary meets on Monday, and a question germane to the bill that I propose to call up we desire to consider before it is taken up.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Well, sir, I want to go on with this bill. With a sort of understanding that the Senate will give their attention to it, I do not care whether it be set down for Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. WRIGHT. Suppose the Senator from Maine fixes Monday for his bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will take that day if that be the pleasure of the Senate, with a view of having it read on Monday at least, and then will give way to the Senator from Iowa in regard to his bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that Monday next be specially assigned for the consideration of the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION REGENTS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 11) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; and it was read twice, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than members of Congress, shall be filled by the appointment of George Bancroft, of the city of Washington, in place of William T. Sherman, resigned.

The joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will say only, that there is an existing vacancy, as stated in that joint resolution, occasioned by the resignation of General Sherman, who has moved from this city. The law requires that that regent shall be from the city. Mr. Bancroft, the eminent historian, has come here to reside. All three of the Board of Regents on the part of this body think it is eminently fitting that he should be designated by Congress to fill that existing vacancy.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. BOREMAN, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

NEWSPAPER POSTAGE LAW.

Mr. WEST. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back House bill No. 3822, making an appropriation to enable the Postmaster-General to carry into effect the law requiring the prepayment of postage on newspapers, approved June 25, 1874, with an amendment, and to ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that for information the amendment proposed by the committee may be read. I dare say I shall have no objection to the bill being considered to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read, and also the bill.

The bill was read. It appropriates the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase of scales for the use of the Post-Office Department.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was to insert at the end of the bill the following words:

Proposals for furnishing said scales shall be invited by seven days' public notice, given by the Postmaster-General, and the contract shall be awarded to the lowest and best responsible bidder, the contractor to be allowed a reasonable time, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, to deliver the articles contracted for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole by unanimous consent.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at one o'clock and six minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 10, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. COBURN. I rise to move a correction of the Journal. The reference of the communication of the Secretary of War in relation to the claim of George W. Seibert, contractor for grading streets and sidewalks in front of the United States arsenal grounds in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana, instead of to the Committee on Claims, should be to the Committee on Appropriations. I move that correction of the Journal.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The Journal, as amended, was approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. STOWELL. Mr. Speaker, on the 30th of October, three or four days before the election, my political opponent, Mr. Charles H. Porter, made a number of charges against me, which were published in the Petersburgh Index and Appeal of the 31st.

The SPEAKER. Yesterday was marked by a great deal of confusion in the Hall during the transaction of business, and the Chair hopes it will not be continued.

Mr. STOWELL. The Petersburgh Index and Appeal the next day contained a synopsis of these remarks, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Porter then came to Stowell.

He said: Stowell stood here on the 7th of October to vilify me, but, coward-like, he dared not give me a chance to reply. He has been notified that this meeting would be held by an advertisement; that charges would be preferred against him; and if he has failed to be present, it is his own fault.

I wish here to make a statement which I believe, but which I do not know of my own knowledge to be true, though I have it from a source which is entitled to entire trust. About one year ago Stowell sold the naval cadetship of this district for $1,000. The circumstances were these: A step-son of Dr. Beaty, named Schoolcraft, living a short distance from Richmond, went to Charlotte County, and boarded with a man named McGeorge about thirty or forty days, and was appointed to the Naval Academy from the fourth district. This was in violation of the law of Congress on the subject, and would subject him to expulsion from that body; while Whittemore's case showed well enough what course would be pursued when a cadetship had been sold.

I make these statements boldly; and if Mr. Stowell feels himself aggrieved, he can find his remedy before the courts by a suit for slander, and let the evidence show what the truth really is. Stowell has sold himself, and he will sell you all.

Mr. STOWELL. I had no opportunity before the election to deny that statement; but the result of the election shows the opinion of the people of my district of Mr. Porter's statements, he receiving but 38 votes in all, and I over 15,000. On the 3d of November I denied the charges in the following letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

BURKEVILLE, VIRGINIA, November 3, 1874.

DEAR SIR: Your issue of the 31st contains an account of a meeting held in Petersburgh on Friday night, at which Mr. Charles H. Porter charges me with selling the naval cadetship for $1,000, and with having sold my vote in favor of the refunding cotton tax, and also upon the Credit Mobilier and other questions. These statements I denounce, singly and collectively, as infamous lies.

I was canvassing in a distant part of the district, and did not learn of the article until too late to deny it in your paper before the day of election; so that the vile slander has been and is now being circulated broadcast over the district without any contradiction, and the malicious purpose for which it was issued has been successfully carried out.

What effect it will have upon the republican voters who are casting their ballots while I write this I cannot say. Before they read this the votes will have been cast and counted and the returns made, so that the result cannot now be changed. Those who vote for me will do it upon their faith in my innocence; and I am quite sure the majority of the republicans will judge it to be what it is, an infamous falsehood, circulated upon the eve of an election for the express purpose of defeating myself. Yet I deem it due to such of my friends as have stood by me to-day, while this shadow was resting upon me, as well as a vindication of myself, to denounce every one of the statements made by Mr. Porter as outrageous falsehoods, even though the 7,000 majority, which every intelligent republican and conservative will acknowledge was mine three days ago, may now be changed into a minority that will be my defeat.

I propose to bring this whole question before the proper tribunal at the earliest practicable day; and, if I am not completely vindicated to the satisfaction of all the people, then I shall resign the place with which a kind constituency has honored me for the last four years.

Very respectfully,

W. H. H. STOWELL.

To the EDITOR DAILY INDEX AND APPEAL.

Mr. STOWELL. Since that time copies of the original charges, as published in the papers, have been sent to prominent newspapers in the North and South, but my denial has never gone with those charges. I will ask that the following may be read to show the fact I state to be true.

The Clerk read as follows:

The copy of the Dispatch containing the Graham and Brady correspondence, and a copy of the Farmville Mercury containing Mr. Chambliss's letter to W. H. H. Stowell, member of Congress, have been sent to the New York Times for publication in that great national journal.

Mr. STOWELL. In view of all these facts, as a matter of justice to myself, to the people who elected me, and to the members of this House, I ask that there shall be an investigation of this subject by the proper committee of this House, and that that committee shall have full power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. FRYE. I move that this subject be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs for investigation, as that seems to be the proper committee; and that for the purpose of this investigation they shall have power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to amend by adding with leave to report at any time, so there may be an early investigation of these charges.

Mr. MAYNARD. As this is a personal matter, affecting a member of this House, it seems to me the committee would have that privilege under the rules. As it relates to the conduct of a member of this House, it is privileged in its very nature..

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes there will be no objection to it.

Mr. STOWELL. I have no objection to it. I am anxious for an early and complete investigation of these charges.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. BECK. I desire to offer a resolution which I send to the desk. I have been requested to do so by the commissioners themselves.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas, under the seventh section of the act entitled "An act amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, the trustees of said corporation deemed it advisable to close up its business, and for that purpose selected three persons as commissioners, whose selection was approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and whereas it is advisable to know what progress said commissioners have made in their duties: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to obtain from said commissioners and to furnish to this House, at as early a day as practicable, a report of the present condition of said company, setting forth what progress they have made toward closing up its affairs.

Mr. BECK. The commissioners desire to have this resolution adopted.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not know that I have any special objection to make to this resolution. It is proper, however, to say that the matter has been before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and that they have already presented a request to the commissioners for a report in order that it might be presented to the House.

Mr. BECK. The object can be accomplished by this resolution.

Mr. MAYNARD. I only thought it proper to state that fact.

The preamble and resolution were adopted.

WINONA AND SAINT PETER RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3904) to carry into effect the provisions of an act of Congress approved January 15, 1873, entitled "An act for the extension of time to the Winona and Saint Peter Railroad Company for the completion of its road;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3905) directing the commissioners in charge of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company to declare an immediate dividend, and to institute suit against the trustees, officers, and agents of said company, with a view of holding them personally liable to the depositors for the deposits made in said company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. FORT. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That one-third of the reports of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the years 1872 and 1873, printed upon the appropriation of $50,000 by the act of June 21, 1873, be delivered to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, and that two-thirds of the said reports be delivered to the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, for distribution among the people by Senators and Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman submit this resolution for action or for reference?

Mr. FORT. For action.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it will be reported again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. SPEER. The date should be 23d of June, 1874.

Mr. DONNAN. The printing of the report of 1874 has not been ordered.

Mr. SPEER. The action referred to in the resolution was taken in 1874, not 1873.

Mr. FORT. The Clerk will please correct the date, so as to make it 1874.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. FORT. I also send to the desk a preamble and resolution relating to the same subject; which I offer for reference.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the annual reports of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the years 1872 and 1873 have not been printed for the use of Congress, because of a misconstruction of the act of 23d June, 1874: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the Congressional Printer be, and he is hereby, instructed to print for the use of the Senate fifty thousand copies of the reports of the Commissioner of Agriculture for each of the years 1872 and 1873, and for the use of the House of Representatives one hundred and eighty thousand copies of the said reports for each of the said years for distribution among their constituents.

Mr. FORT. This is a resolution which the Commissioner of Agriculture has sent to me to offer, and I offer it in his behalf. He has also sent a letter accompanying the resolution, which, if the House has no objection, may be read. If the reading is not desired, it may be referred to the committee with the resolution.

Mr. MAYNARD. Before any action is taken on the resolution, I would suggest that the word "misconstruction" might imply, whether intended or not, a censure on somebody, which I presume it is not intended to make. I would suggest the substitution of the word "misapprehension."

Mr. KILLINGER. I should like to have the letter read, that it may go upon the record.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is merely for reference, not for action.

There being no objection, the resolution and accompanying letter were referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following amendment to the rules; which was referred to the Committee on the Rules, and ordered to be printed:

It shall be in order to move as an amendment on any appropriation bill to which it shall be germane an amendment abolishing any office or public employment, or an amendment reducing the salary or compensation of such office or public employment.

SOUTHERN IOWA DISTRICT COURT.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3906) providing for holding the terms of the United States district court for the southern division of Iowa at Burlington, in said division; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CONSULAR CERTIFICATES.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3907) repealing section 3 of the act making appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government, and for other purposes, approved February 22, 1873; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I desire that the bill may be now put upon its passage.

The bill, which was read, repeals section 3 of the act making appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes, approved February 22, 1873.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I ask that the section which the bill proposes to repeal be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That no consular officer of the United States shall hereafter grant a certificate for goods, wares, or merchandise shipped from countries adjacent to the United States which have passed a consulate after purchase for shipment.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. This bill has been agreed to unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. KASSON. What is the object of it?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. In the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill passed in 1873 was the provision which has just been read at the Clerk's desk—

That no consular officer of the United States shall hereafter grant a certificate for goods, wares, or merchandise shipped from countries adjacent to the United States which have passed a consulate after purchase for shipment.

The object of the provision at the time of its adoption was, as I understand it, to compel the purchases made of goods or animals in Canada for shipment to the United States to be entered at the first consulate which they might reach.

The bill was passed undoubtedly for the purpose of increasing consular fees at interior consulates in Canada, and at the instance of those consuls, especially at the instance of the consul at Toronto. It has proved in practice very inconvenient to persons shipping goods from Canada, especially persons going into Canada to purchase animals to bring into the United States, as it might require them to enter for certificate any animals they might purchase at the first consulate they might reach. And as they might buy some at one place and others at another, they might be obliged to obtain half a dozen certificates for what was really one purchase.

This matter was brought to the attention of the Committee on Foreign Affairs by a petition signed largely by shipping merchants of Buffalo; and the attention of the committee was also called to it further by the gentleman who represented the Buffalo district [Mr. BASS] as a matter of great inconvenience to shippers, and as resulting in no advantage to the Government. The committee were unable to see how the Government could possibly derive any advantage, although the provision might give some little local advantage to consuls. Therefore they have recommended the repeal of that provision.

Mr. KASSON. The point to which I wished to call attention was how this repeal would affect the security for collection.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It does not affect it in the slightest degree.

Mr. KASSON. What provision will take the place of that repealed?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The old law allows shippers to enter their goods at any consulate. In the cases to which I have called attention, if this provision was repealed, shippers would enter their goods at the frontier and would enter them all at one consulate.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to add to what has been said this, which is within my own knowledge, that many persons importing articles from Canada have been compelled to wait at the frontier until they could send back to the consulate at Toronto, or at London, or at other places in Canada, and in some cases take back the articles purchased for a distance of from fifty to two hundred miles and have them certified to by the consul without any possible benefit to any one except to increase the fees of the interior consuls. The present law works very injuriously, and I hope it may be repealed.

Mr. MERRIAM. I would say that the object of the consul at Toronto in asking this provision to be passed was this, it was supposed that the consul nearest the point where the purchases were made would be a better judge of the value of the property purchased in that vicinity. It was not for the purpose of increasing his own fees. I see no objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. CONGER. I know that was the plausible reason given.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I suppose there is no further objection to the bill, and I call for a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JUDICIAL COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3908) to repeal the second section of an act entitled "An act to amend an act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, approved September 24, 1789," approved February 5, 1857; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3909) prescribing the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in certain cases therein named; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

OCEAN MAILS.

Mr. DUELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3910) to authorize the Postmaster-General to contract with the agents of the American line of mail steamships for the carrying of the mails of the United States from New York to the republics of Venezuela, Colombia, and Hayti, and the islands of Jamaica, Trinidad, and Martinique; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SWANN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3911) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made a special order for the 23d of December after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. ARCHER. I ask that all points of order upon the bill be reserved.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. McDOUGALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3912) to reduce and fix the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN JERSEY CITY.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3913) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public building for a post-office and other offices of the United States at Jersey City, New Jersey;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

HARVEY LULL.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3914) to enable Harvey Lull, of Hoboken, New Jersey, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for a self-locking shutter-hinge; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

SAINT LOUIS BRIDGE.

Mr. NEGLEY. I desire to report back from the Committee on Commerce House bill No. 3550, amendatory of an act approved March 3, 1873, entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri." In order to enable the Committee on Commerce to avail themselves of the suggestion contained in a recent report of the Engineer Department, I ask the House to allow the consideration of this bill to go over until next Monday after the morning hour, instead of being considered under the regular call of the committees to-day.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. To be disposed of on that day?

The SPEAKER. Not to go over from that day.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

SUFFERERS FROM THE OVERFLOW OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the issue of supplies under the act of April 23, 1874, to sufferers from the overflow on the Lower Mississippi and on the Tombigbee, Warrior, and Alabama Rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Comptroller of the Currency transmitting, in compliance with the national-bank act, his twelfth annual report; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

FORT KEARNEY MILITARY RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the Fort Kearney military reservation, in Nebraska; whichwas referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF THOMAS STEWART.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the claim of Thomas Stewart for compensation for damages in the washing away of his farm, alleged to have been caused by the act of the United States authorities in changing the channel of the Mississippi River at Bordeaux Chute; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

FURNITURE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting, in compliance with the act of July 15, 1870, an account of property belonging to the United States in his possession at this date; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BURLINGTON AND MISSOURI RIVER RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in answer to a resolution of the House of June 18, 1874, in relation to the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad, in Nebraska; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS.

Mr. BRIGHT. By direction of the Committee on Private Land Claims, I ask to submit for immediate action the following resolution:

Whereas there are numerous claimants to the Hot Springs tract of land in the State of Arkansas, and Congress by the act of June 11, 1870, authorized these claimants within two years to bring suit in the Court of Claims to have their respective rights adjudicated; and whereas all the claimants except the heirs of Don Juan Filhiol have filed their claims in said court within the time prescribed by statute, and there is now a bill pending before this House on the Private Calendar allowing the Filhiol heirs the further time of thirty days to bring their suits in the Court of Claims; and whereas the Court of Claims now in session will probably reach and determine said cause before the pending bill for the relief of the Filhiol heirs can be reached in its regular order: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, That the Court of Claims be requested to suspend all action in said cause during the present session of Congress unless House bill No. 608 for the relief of said Filhiol heirs shall be acted on at an earlier date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this resolution? If not, it will be considered as adopted.

Mr. POTTER. I thought the application was to have the resolution taken up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. So it is; but as no one appeared desirous to debate it the Chair was about to put the question. If the gentleman desires to speak upon it the Chair will hear him.

Several MEMBERS. The resolution is all right.

Mr. POTTER. I do not think it is all right, though I have no objection to its being taken up for consideration.

Mr. BRIGHT. The resolution cannot unjustly affect the interests either of the Government or any private party.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York propose to debate the resolution?

Mr. POTTER. Yes, sir; but, in the first place, I hope the gentleman in charge of it will be good enough to explain it. It so happens that I was a member of the Committee on Private Land Claims when the act to which reference is made in the resolution was passed. It was passed after a great deal of consideration, and was regarded as a very wise measure for obtaining a judicial determination in respect of property which had for so many years remained unimproved. Now, I should be glad to know why a bill in contravention of that act should be passed. If a satisfactory reason be given, I shall not make any further objection.

Mr. BRIGHT. In answer to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER,] I will ask the reading of the report of the Committee on Private Land Claims upon this subject at the last session, which will answer fully the interrogatory of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

The descendants of Don Juan Filhiol claim title to a tract of land known as the Hot Springs tract, situated in the State of Arkansas. Their memorial shows that there are missing links of title, or at least such a cloud upon the title that they are induced to ask Congress either to confirm their title or to allow them thirty days to bring their suit in the Court of Claims to establish it.

A former act of Congress, June 11, 1870, gave these parties two years within which to bring their suit. They failed to bring it within the time; hence their application for the further extension of time.

In support of their claim they say that their ancestor, Don Juan Filhiol, was an officer in the Spanish army in the war between Spain and England, and acted as the commandant of the post of Ouchita, in the province of Louisiana, then belonging to Spain; that, as a recompense for this and other military services, sundry grants of land were made to him, among the number the Hot Springs tract, by Don Estovan Miro, then Spanish governor-general of the province of Louisiana, and who was authorized to make such grants; that the grant to the Hot Springs tract bears date 12th December, 1787, but the original grant is not produced before the committee. The reason given for its non-production will be alluded to in another connection.

The memorial further states that Don Juan Filhiol sold said Hot Springs tract to his son-in-law, Narcisso Bourjeat, by deed dated November 25, 1803, and a copy of such deed is exhibited. That said Bourjeat resold said land to Don Juan Filhiol, by deed bearing date July 17, 1806, and a copy of such deed is produced.

It is further stated that Don Joan Filhiol was married in 1782; had three children; that his wife died before he died, and that he died in the year 1821, about eighty-one years of age; and that memorialists are his lineal descendants.

They further state that Grammont Filhiol, son of Don Juan Filhiol, has from time to time, for the past fifty years, employed different agents and attorneys to prosecute their claim, but that they had either neglected to do so, or they, by collusion with others, endeavored to secure the land for themselves.

The deed from Don Juan Filhiol refers to a grant from Don Estovan Miro as the basis of the claim of Don Juan Filhiol. This recital, however, would only be evidence as between parties and privies to the deed, and would not be evidence to establish the existence of the original grant as against strangers and adverse claimants.

The original grant remains unaccounted for, except by a probability that is raised by circumstantial statements that it was burned at the time the old Saint Louis Hotel was burned in New Orleans in 1840, or that it was sent to the governor-general of Cuba, or was sent to the home government of Madrid.

The memorialists have filed with the committee a paper purporting to be a copy of a copy of a grant answering the description of what they allege was the original. There is also a copy of a certificate and figurative plan accompanying the supposed copy of the grant, made by Don Carlos Trudeau, surveyor-general of Louisiana under the government of Miro and Carondelet.

The evidence of Lozare shows that Don Juan Filhiol, during his life, claimed the land. Other evidence shows that he leased the springs to one Dr. Stephen P. Wilson about the year 1819; but there is no evidence before the committee to show that Don Juan Filhiol, or any one claiming under him, ever had the actual possession of the land.

By the report of the Hon. Thomas Ewing, the Secretary of the Interior, June 24, 1850, (Senate Executive Document No. 70, Thirty-first Congress, 1849-'50, volume 14,) it appears that the Interior Department had the whole subject of the Hot Springs before it, and to which reference is made for the detailed history.

We, however, may allude to the leading facts presented in the report:

One Francis Langlois claimed title to the "Hot Springs" by virtue of a New Madrid location certificate dated November 26, 1818, pursuant to the act of Congress, February 17, 1815, for the relief of the citizens of New Madrid County, Missouri Territory, who suffered by the earthquake.

S. Hammond and Elias Rector applied to the surveyor of public lands for the State of Illinois and Territory of Missouri for an entry or donation of land to include the Hot Springs on the 27th January, 1819.

The widow and children of John Perceval filed in the office of the Interior Department in 1838, or some year prior thereto, a caveat to suspend the issuance of a patent to any other claimants, and setting up a claim for themselves under the pre-emption act of 1814, and showing by proof that John Perceval had possession of land as early perhaps as 1814, and held the possession to the time of his death; and that his widow and children, by themselves or tenants, had held the possession up to the filing of their caveat.

About the year 1841 Ludovicus Belding and William and Mary Davis set up a claim to the land.

On the 1st of March, 1841, Congress passed "An act to perfect the titles to the lands south of the Arkansas River, held under New Madrid locations and pre-emption rights under act of 1814."

These lands had not been subject to location and pre-emption prior to 24th August, 1818, the date of the Quapaw treaty, which extinguished the Indian title.

On the 26th April, 1850, Hon. S. Borland, as agent of Grammont Filhiol, set up a claim of title to the Hot Springs, based upon the Spanish grant before alluded to, and applied to the Department for time to prepare and present the claim. This was the first time the claim was brought legally to the notice of the Government.

On the 20th April, 1832, Congress passed an act reserving the Salt and Hot Springs from entry or location, or for any appropriation whatever.

The Department of the Interior was much embarrassed in the disposition of these conflicting claims. The opinion of the Attorney-General was invoked. He decided in favor of the Langlois claim on the 29th of April, 1850, but it does not appear that the Filhiol claim was prepared for his action at the time. But before the patent could issue caveats were filed and suspended the issuance; and no patent has issued from the Government since that time.

It does not appear that any steps were taken for the settlement of these claims from the year 1850 to 1870. In 1870 Congress passed the act authorizing the different claimants to have their titles adjudicated in the United States Court of Claims, and allowing them two years to bring suits.

On the 26th day of May, 1824, (4 United States Statutes, page 52, section 1,) Congress authorized claimants to lands in Missouri, under any French or Spanish grant, concession, warrant, or order of survey, legally made, granted, or issued before the 10th March, 1804, and which was protected or secured by the treaty between the United States and France on 3d April, 1803, might petition the district court of Missouri and have such claims established.

By the fourteenth section of this act the same provision was applied to similar claimants in the Territory of Arkansas, and was to continue in force until 1830.

This act was revived by section 1, act of June 17, 1844, (5 United States Statutes, 676,) and continued in force five years from date of its passage.

The Supreme Court of the United States held these acts only conferred jurisdiction on the courts to hear and determine upon imperfect grants. (9 Howard, 127; 11 Howard, 609.)

It is contended that the Filhiol grant, assuming the existence of such grant did not fall within the jurisdiction of the court, as it was not an "imperfect grant," but a perfect grant, which had been lost, mislaid, or suppressed. The jurisdiction of the court being limited by statute, it perhaps would not have stretched the jurisdiction far enough to have set up and established the existence of the missing grant, so as to give effect to it. The whole train of decisions on kindred questions shows that the courts of the United States have confined themselves quite rigidly to the authority conferred by act of Congress.

On the 23d June, 1860, Congress passed an act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Louisiana, Florida, and Missouri, but by a singular omission did not include Arkansas. This act authorized the courts to determine the cases according to equity and justice.

In 1801 Spain, by the treaty of Saint Ildefonso, ceded the territory of Louisiana to France. By treaty of April 30, 1803, France ceded Louisiana to the United States, the United States claiming the river Perdido as the eastern boundary, while the Spaniards claimed the Mississippi as the western boundary, and held possession to the Mississippi, except the island of New Orleans, until 1810, when the United States took possession by force.

Spain continued to make grants and concession of lands to persons within the disputed territory until 1810, but both Congress and the courts declared all such grants made after the treaty of Saint Ildefonso, in 1801, actually void. These parties claimed also that the United States were bound to perfect any incomplete titles, according to the stipulations of the treaty of cession of the Floridas by Spain, February 22, 1819. But Congress and the courts, in like manner, held that this treaty did not embrace the disputed lands.

After Congress and the courts had been worried more than half a century with these claims, and the mind of Congress being affected with the idea that many of these claims rested upon a well-grounded equity, by the act of June 23, 1860, enlarged the jurisdiction of the courts to cases of equity as well as law.

Parties came in under this act, and had their claims adjudged valid which had been previously adjudged void.

The case of the United States vs. Lynd (11 Wallace, 632) embodies the history of the congressional and judicial proceedings in these cases.

This committee has been unable to perceive any reason why Congress did not extend the provisions of the act of 1860 to private land claims in the State of Arkansas. To remedy the omission, however, Congress passed the act of 1870, which opened the doors of the Court of Claims to claimants from Arkansas; and within the two years allowed by the act the claimants have all commenced their proceedings except the Filhiol heirs.

The committee might indulge in some criticisms on the want of due diligence on the part of the Filhiol heirs; but the want of diligence is more apparent than actual.

From necessity their appearance in court must be by attorney. They were timely in the employment of such attorney; but their attorney, as charged by them, was delinquent. Whether this delinquency of the attorney was from accident or design we do not think ought to be visited upon the claimants as a forfeiture of their rights, whatever they may be.

There have been great embarrassments from the want of proper tribunals to determine the various perplexing questions growing out of private land claims. The claimants could not be held responsible for the defects of these tribunals. Ancestors have spent their lives pursuing their claims through land offices, through cabinet offices, through Congress, and through the inferior and appellate courts, without success, and have left their descendants to renew the contest under the disadvantage of loss or weakening of evidence from lapse of time.

After the purchase of the Floridas, in 1819, and the extinction of all the asserted claim of Spain to any part of the territory between the Perdido and Mississippi Rivers, and the extinction of Indian titles, Congress has manifested a liberal disposition by the passage of different remedial acts, (even extending to cases previously adjudicated, as in the Lynch case, 11 Wallace.)

Your committee, keeping in the line of this liberal policy, feel warranted in recommending the passage of the bill. They do so the more readily as the contest is still pending in the Court of Claims, where the rights of all parties may be finally settled by the judgment of the court.

Mr. MAYNARD. How does this get before the House?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. By unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] asked unanimous consent to introduce the resolution.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not wish to be ungracious to my colleague, but this involves title to some very important property which ought to have been settled a long while ago. I will interpose objection until I can look into it, and if I become satisfied it is proper, then I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is not a question of the merits of this controversy.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it not too late to make objection?

The SPEAKER. Some of the members of the House did not hear the resolution when read.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit whether it is not too late to object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was coming to that point, whether it was too late or not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The resolution has been introduced and under consideration, and the report of the committee has been read.

The SPEAKER. The resolution was read, and it was stated that after the reading of the resolution objection would be in order. The Chair often warns gentlemen that unanimous consents are always to be watched in order they may not be taken unaware. The resolution will be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BRIGHT. I would like to make a word of explanation, simply giving a summary of the object of the resolution.

Mr. MAYNARD. I reserve my point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the point of order?

Mr. MAYNARD. I say that I reserve all points of order.
The SPEAKER. What points of order?
Mr. MAYNARD. The power to withhold my consent.
The SPEAKER. It is too late to withhold consent, the resolution having been considered. The gentleman asked consent and no one objected. The Chair had really pronounced the resolution to be passed when the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] interposed objection and desired to debate it. Then the report of the committee was read.

Mr. POTTER. The application which the Chair announced was to introduce the resolution for consideration. I did not object to its being introduced for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is now before the House for consideration.

Mr. BRIGHT. A word of explanation. If the House will give me attention for a moment I think I can so explain the object of the resolution that there shall be no objection to its passage. There are numerous claimants to what is called the Hot Springs tract of land in the State of Arkansas. By the act of June 11, 1870, Congress authorized these different claimants to submit their respective claims to the Court of Claims for final adjudication. During the two years of the limitation authorized all of the claimants filed their claims except the heirs of Don Juan Filhiol. The reason given for their delinquency or apparent want of diligence was their counsel failed to represent their interest faithfully, as they should have done. Hence they were excluded by the limitation of the statute. In order to obviate the disadvantage to which they were put, they made application to this body to give them by bill the space of thirty days within which they should make their application. That bill is now pending. The suit of the other claimants is now pending in the Court of Claims, and the information is now the court will speedily reach those claims; that they will be heard and determined, in all probability, before the action of the House upon the pending bill on the Private Calendar.

The resolution is simply one of request that the court would stay its proceedings until the action of Congress upon the bill now pending before it, so as to give those parties an opportunity of being heard. It does not propose to determine the merits of any one of these claimants; by no means to countenance either one of them; but simply to give them opportunity to lay them all at the feet of this Court of Claims for settlement and adjudication, so they shall all be finally determined, and Congress cease to be worried, as it has been for the last half a century, on this subject, and there shall be quietude in relation to this disputed property. If it belongs to the Government, let it be so decided; if it belongs to either of the claimants, let it be so decided, and we will have an end of it; and then Congress will be relieved from the worry to which my honorable friend from New York [Mr. POTTER] was subjected some years ago as a member of the Committee on Private Land Claims. Therefore, as it can work no injury to the Government and can work no injury to the parties, I ask for the passage of the resolution, hoping the House will adopt it as an act of justice to these parties.

Mr. POTTER. I have the highest respect for my distinguished friend from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT;] but I cannot see in this resolution an act of justice to anybody, and least of all to the United States. The Hot Springs of Arkansas is an extremely valuable tract of land, the title to which so far remains in the United States; nor have the officers of the Government ever yet been satisfied that any person was entitled to claim them. Year after year, for thirty years or more, claimants have been before the Congress of the United States, asking some patent or some other action of Congress which would establish a right under which they might get from the Government a title to or concession of these lands. The claims of these parties have been various and contradictory, and have been the subject also of litigations which, so far as they have resulted in anything, have resulted, I understand, in determining that no existing claimant had a good title to these springs against the Government. After years of such applications before Congress there was passed in 1870 a bill reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims, of which I was then a member, authorizing the United States to bring the action now pending, for the purpose of settling its title and that of all claimants to this valuable reservation, and authorizing every person who asserted a title to appear within two years and assert his rights. Now, these Filhiol heirs, who claim their title under a grant from Spain, failed within the two years to make any appearance, and then they caused to be introduced into this Congress a bill, I presume, either for the purpose of enabling them to have a determination of their rights in the Court of Claims or perhaps—its scope has not, I believe, been stated—to have the lands granted them. And when Congress comes to consider that bill, if satisfied that these parties have any rights, they can pass upon them and allow them what is their due. But in the meantime, when other parties have made claims in respect of these lands, when the case has been heard in open court and witnesses examined and documents produced, and the cause has been submitted to the Court of Claims——

Mr. BUCKNER. It has not yet been argued.

Mr. POTTER. Then what necessity is there for a resolution to prevent that court from passing on this case, which it has not yet reached, and which it cannot, therefore, I presume, possibly decide before the next Congress meets?

Mr. BRIGHT. The cause is fixed to be heard on Monday next, according to my information.

Mr. POTTER. What, then, prevents the Filhiol heirs from applying to the court to be allowed to set up their claims and being heard when their case comes up? But here is a resolution which furnishes no excuse for the delay of these claimants, and which asks us to prevent the court from deciding, not upon the rights of these parties, but upon the rights of other parties who have appeared before the court. It seems to me that the rights of these persons will not be prejudiced beyond relief by Congress, if they be entitled to relief, by any decision the court can make on the case as it now stands. And if by any means their rights shall be prejudiced, it is open to Congress, when the bill for their relief is brought up, to give them any relief which justice may require. But it has been my experience, not only, as the Speaker has just suggested to the House, that "unanimous consent" is a most dangerous form of action by the House, and one which requires constant watching, but, as I have further found, that these resolutions, which come to the House with innocent faces, apparently asking nothing that should be denied, but referring to some other action to be taken at some other time, are too often like the Trojan horse, which, while fair without, yet carried armed men and dangerous enemies within. For my part I have done my duty when I called the attention of the House to this resolution affecting this valuable property, and which was just about being passed without a single objection. From my general knowledge of the subject I am not inclined to interfere with the action of Congress taken years ago, remitting this subject to the courts; and at all events I am unwilling to interfere with it, as proposed by this resolution, without further explanations and reasons for the action desired than have yet been given.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER,] who seems to have entered into a discussion of the merits of the question. The object of this resolution is not to reach the merits of the controversy; it is simply to ask a favor of the Court of Claims, that it shall suspend its action until there shall be definite action upon the part of Congress in relation to the merits of the controversy. It is unnecessary for me to criticise the parliamentary rule of the House in relation to the giving unanimous consent to the passage of a resolution. It is immaterial whether it is sometimes a Trojan horse whose bowels are filled with the elements of destruction. It is presumed, however, that we have intelligent Representatives of the people who will judge of the propriety of every measure which is submitted to them.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the rule is entirely proper to guard against outrage and injustice and surprises that may take place even in the judicial forums of the country, and when astute men may be plying their efforts around the Capitol of the United States, when there are far distant parties who cannot be heard here except by representatives, and whose rights are to be stricken down and slaughtered at the instance of those more diligent parties, and who are here to take an undue advantage of them. I do not see the propriety of interposing objection in relation to the relief that is sought at the hands of Congress.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will my colleague [Mr. BRIGHT] tell us whether these parties have been in possession of the property?

Mr. BRIGHT. If my colleague [Mr. MAYNARD] had listened to the reading of the report he would have learned that they were in the constructive possession of the property, perhaps, during the years 1822, 1823, and 1824.

Mr. MAYNARD. I mean at the present time.

Mr. BRIGHT. My information is that they have not been in possession since that time.

Mr. MAYNARD. That is my information. If they have not been in possession, of course they have brought no suit, and their claim has lain dormant.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am much obliged to my colleague for the suggestion he has made. It enables me to give an explanation of the apparent delinquency of these parties. There is a long history concerning the adjudication of these different claims. Perhaps as early as 1821 the Government began to provide jurisdiction for the settlement of these claims, extending the time from time to time up to 1860. As stated in the report of the committee, the Government authorized the claimants to lands in Florida, in Louisiana, and in Missouri to file their claims before the courts established; but by a singular omission Arkansas was not included. Hence you find that the Government was to blame, not the parties, for their apparent delinquency in not filing their claims in these courts. As soon as the Government by the act of 1870 provided the jurisdiction where their claim could be heard, they attempted to avail themselves of the license of the Government, and employed counsel for the purpose of prosecuting their claims in this court, but through the negligence of their counsel they failed to have their case brought before the court. That is the history of the matter, as I understand it.

Recurring now to the merit of the resolution; if these parties are excluded from the benefit of this act, they certainly will not be concluded by the judgment of the court. As a matter of course a renewed application will be made to Congress, and we will continue to roll the slow stone of Sisyphus in relation to these private land claims until another generation perhaps will be subjected to the toil, as their predecessors have already been, of taking up these cases for themselves. The great objects in view are these: First to have equal justice done to all parties; in the second place to have all parties included; and in the third place to have Congress relieved of the worry and annoyance of these applications.

Mr. MAYNARD. My colleague will allow me to suggest that there are other interests involved as well as the interests of these parties. As I understand it, there are persons in possession of this property. While the United States asserts a title thereto they, of course, are unwilling to improve the property, so as to make it such as is required of a great central resort of that kind, while there is a litigation with the Government pending. Their case is now nearly ready to be heard. It would be an act of great injustice to them to postpone their controversy still further, it may be indefinitely, and to leave this embarrassment resting over them many years for the benefit of parties who, to say the least of it, have not shown any remarkable diligence.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me a single word?

Mr. BRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Does not the law of 1870 provide that the case shall go to the Supreme Court in any event; that is, that the Attorney-General may bring suit; and if the decision of the Court of Claims is against the Government, there shall be an appeal? As I understand this resolution, you desire now only to hold the case open until the 4th of March, the end of this Congress. The appeal will have to go over until the next October term of the Supreme Court. If so, will any delay take place?

Mr. BRIGHT. I think not; I think no delay can possibly take place. The right of appeal is provided for by the act of 1870.

Mr. MAYNARD. If these parties should intervene in the litigation, of course the case would have to be prepared de novo in reference to their claim, and it might be years before the case would be heard upon their claim, and probably it would go over beyond the next term of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BRIGHT. In regard to the question of diligence, such questions being hypothetical and contingent, it is very difficult to determine them. I would state, however, that ample time would be allowed to these parties to have their case prepared and submitted to the adjudication of the court within time to take it to the next term of the Supreme Court. So much for the question of delay, as suggested by my colleague. While there may be an apparent inconvenience to parties, the higher object of justice to be obtained to all parties ought to be paramount. It is the very object of a court of justice to dispense equal, ample, full justice to all parties; and it is to the interest of Congress to have these cases finally determined. So far as the Government is concerned, if the property belongs to the Government, let the Government turn them all out of court.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. If this was a simple proposition to refer this particular case of these particular heirs to the Court of Claims for adjudication, there would be very little objection to it. But it is manifest that there is a further purpose—I do not mean on the part of the committee, but on the part of those who are pressing the claim. It seems that the title to all these lands was intended to be settled by the law which passed Congress at some former session, remitting these claims to the Court of Claims, and giving them a certain time within which to present their claims. I have not yet heard any reason which seems to me in the smallest degree satisfactory why these heirs have not availed themselves of that law; why they have not already presented their case. I can see a reason why possibly their proofs may not have been all ready; but why they have not presented their case does not seem to me apparent.

But waiving that point—supposing that matter to be satisfactorily explained—I can see another reason, which seems to me to be an obvious one, why this bill should now be urged on the part of some persons who are pressing it from the outside. The Court of Claims, as I understand, has heard substantially the proofs upon which the title of the claimants to that land is likely to rest and upon which it is to be decided. It would not be a surprising thing, Mr. Speaker, if those parties had learned enough on the progress of the case to anticipate unfavorable action of the court upon their cause, and that they are therefore ready to delay by any device whatever the final judgment, which they anticipate will be adverse.

Now, I do not understand that this resolution proposes to submit the bill that is now before Congress in behalf of these Filhiol heirs to the Court of Claims; but it proposes to allow that bill to be pressed here in Congress for a final decision. If a decision can be obtained in Congress in favor of these heirs, I can see why all these other claimants would be exceedingly glad to have the judgment of the court (which they doubtless anticipate will be adverse) postponed. I can see no good reason why such a resolution as this should be introduced here except for the purpose of staving off a decision of the Court of Claims upon a case which has already been presented to it and in which the decision may probably be adverse, in order to have another forum, the Congress of the United States, pass upon that very question.

As was stated by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER,] these claims have been pressed upon the attention of Congress for years; and we supposed that we had finally disposed of them by sending them all to the Court of Claims. A part of them went there; this particular claim did not go there; it now comes here; and Congress is not only asked to decide this claim, but the parties have also the presumption to ask that the question which has already been submitted to that court shall not pass to a final decision until Congress has acted upon the merits of this claim. It seems to me that this is not a wise measure of public policy. If it were deemed necessary, in order to save the rights of these parties, to send them as individuals to the Court of Claims, that proposition might be less objectionable; but certainly there should be no postponement of the decision, because if that decision should be reached during the present session it might, and probably would, enlighten Congress as to the merits of this very claim.

Mr. BRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. MOREY.]

Mr. MOREY. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a great deal of misapprehension in the House as to the character of the legislation that has been proposed in connection with this measure. There is a bill now pending which, after very full examination, was reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims, extending for thirty days the time in which to file in the Court of Claims any claim to the Hot Springs, Arkansas. In 1870 an act was passed allowing two years in which such claims should be filed. Those two years have expired. The bill which has been reported and is now on the Calendar gives thirty days additional. The claim referred to in the resolution is the only claim that is to be filed, as I understand. There will be no delay in the final adjudication of the question. It is merely proposed to allow this claim, which is believed to be a just claim, to be passed upon by the court in connection with the other cases.

Now, I would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] that it would be less objectionable to the House if he would so change his motion as to ask unanimous consent to the fixing of an early day—some day next week—for which this bill reported from the committee, giving thirty days in which to file additional claims, shall be made a special order. I think this would be preferable to this resolution, in the form of a request addressed to the Court of Claims, which is objectionable in the minds of some members. Why should we not make this bill a special order for some day next week, so that we may pass upon the merits of the question as to allowing this claim to go into court?

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand that the case will be taken up in the Court of Claims on Monday next. Therefore, unless a postponement can be obtained by such a resolution as I have submitted, the object sought will not be accomplished.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would suggest that to-morrow is private-bill day, and when we go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar we shall probably reach this very bill and can then act upon and dispose of it. This will supersede any necessity for further action.

Mr. BRIGHT. If to-morrow shall be set aside for the consideration of the pending bill, I have no objection to withdrawing the resolution; or the resolution might be passed at the present time and to-morrow set for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPEER. I should object to that.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would suggest that this resolution, if it comes from the committee, be recommitted; or, if it does not, that it be referred, and that it be printed, with liberty on the part of the committee to report at any time. This will overcome the objections in the minds of some members. The report which has been read will go into the RECORD, together with the debate we have had to-day. I suppose there can be no feeling in the House on the subject, except that some gentlemen are evidently not satisfied as to the merits of the question. I am free to say that I am not.

Mr. BRIGHT. The object is to postpone the action of the court until the bill can be acted on. If that could be accomplished by setting a day certain for action on the bill, I should have no objection.

Mr. MAYNARD. I was about to suggest if it be committed to the Committee on Private Land Claims, with liberty to report it back at any time from that committee, the action of that committee would have great persuasive force with the House, and the resolution and the other papers being printed, together with the debate we have had, would probably satisfy the difficulties which have arisen in the minds of many gentlemen. I make this suggestion, and if it prevails I shall move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the general Calendar, to continue the currency discussion.

Mr. BRIGHT. Does my colleague make that suggestion?

Mr. MAYNARD. I will make the motion that the matter be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, that the bill and accompanying documents be printed, and that committee have the right to report the same back at any time.

Mr. HYNES. I object.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I also object.

Mr. SPEER. There is a bill already on the Calendar.

Mr. HYNES. There is already a bill of record, all that was thought necessary by the committee, which is now on the Private Calendar, standing nearly at the head of the Calendar; so that as soon as we go into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar we can reach it, and sufficiently soon to pass upon it.

Mr. MOREY. I will make a suggestion, with the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee, that this be committed to the Committee of the Whole House to be considered, and when we go into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar that it shall be the first thing to be considered.

Mr. SPEER. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is on ordering this joint resolution to be read a third time.

Mr. MOREY. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his objections to my motion, if it be acceptable to the gentleman from Tennessee, that this be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, to be considered in connection with the bill to which the resolution relates.

Mr. KILLINGER. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have the floor, and do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let the resolution go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, to be considered in connection with the bill on the same subject which is now upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have no objection to that.

There being no further objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. GARFIELD moved that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 99.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. LOUGHRIDGE were appointed.

Mr. CROOKE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GARFIELD. As this is going to consume time, and some gentlemen wish to speak to-day on the currency question, I will withdraw my motion for the present.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCDONALD, its Chief Clerk, notified the House that that body had passed the concurrent resolution of the House that the Congressional Printer be directed to print one hundred copies of the Revised Statutes of the United States without the index, forty copies for the use of the Senate and sixty for the use of the House, with amendments, in which its concurrence was requested.

It further stated that it had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3822) making an appropriation to enable the Postmaster-General to carry into effect the law requiring the prepayment of postage on newspapers, approved June 25, 1874, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

It further stated it had passed without amendment a bill (H. R. No. 3748) to reimburse the city of Boston for certain expenses incurred in the improvement of Chelsea street, formerly Charlestown, in connection with the United States navy-yard.

It further informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 468) authorizing the coinage of a twenty-cent piece of silver at the Mint of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 867) to correct a clerical error in the act granting the right of way over the public lands to the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company, approved June 28, 1872; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 11) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

THE GENERAL CALENDAR.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up for consideration the general Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. TYNER in the chair.

CURRENCY.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the unfinished business on the general Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 41) for the improvement of the currency and the reduction of the funded debt of the United States, on which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me to offer an amendment which I desire to have printed?

Mr. DAWES. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to suggest to the gentleman from Vermont that the Committee of the Whole have no power to order printing.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Then I simply offer the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 1 the following:

And the United States notes commonly known as greenbacks shall not be a legal tender in payment of debts contracted after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1875.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, the fact that this bill stands at the head of the general Calendar, blocking all other business upon it, would of itself be sufficient reason for some final disposition of it; but, beyond that, it pertains to a matter about which, however much we may differ as to the proper remedy, all agree that there is a pressing demand on all hands for legislation. Those who are in favor of this bill and of the policy of expansion which is sure to follow from it, as well as those who are opposed to the bill and to that policy, all alike agree that the present condition of things is fraught with evil of an alarming character, demanding the attention of the people's Representatives on whom that people have waited patiently for action till patience itself is well-nigh exhausted.

The President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury call your attention to this condition of things, and press upon us immediate action; the President putting it before all other matters in his message. The two gentlemen who contend upon this floor for the honor of the fathership of this measure vie with each other in calling attention to the necessity of action. We are told, on the one hand, by the Executive, that there is labor enough and capital enough in the country; that labor is knocking at the door of capital and anxious for employment; that capital, for some reason or other, closes its vaults and holds more fast than ever its grip upon the money of the country. We are told by our distinguished friends who have advocated this measure that the people are crying out for employment; that twenty-five or thirty thousand, more or less, in my own State, and twice that number in Pennsylvania, are to-day without employment; that the banker and the capitalist are clutching the money and holding it back from active operation in business.

So, Mr. Chairman, you see that those who look upon this measure from opposite sides agree that the evil and the mischief to be remedied are the same. It comes, then, to the question whether the measure before the House will remedy the evil. There is no lack of earnestness in the demand for the remedy. There is great diversity of opinion as to what will prove a remedy. Those who pursue the line of policy indicated by the bill declare that the evil lies in the policy favored by those who oppose it; and with equal earnestness they are met by the other side with the argument that it is the very condition of things you propose to aggravate and perpetuate that has brought about the calamities all of us deplore. It would be quite well for us to answer the question why it is that labor is out of employment and that capital is not willing to trust itself in the hands of the laborer. My colleague, in attempting to answer this question, says that while you can borrow money enough on Wall street or in any other money market on call at 2 or 3 per cent., when it is attempted to borrow it for investment in active business for any length of time you must pay 6 or 8 per cent. The fact is substantially as stated by my colleague. The reason he gives why the capitalist will not loan his money at the same rate on investment that he will upon call is, as he says, because he is afraid that the Executive and Congress will contract the currency.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And thereby reduce values.

Mr. DAWES. I want to ask my colleague if a large part of his argument was not this, that his objection to contracting the currency was the advantage it gave the creditor over the debtor?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, rose.

Mr. DAWES. Do not disturb me just now.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. DAWES. I understand my colleague's argument to be of two parts: First, that the man with money to lend would not lend it on time because he was afraid that Congress and the Executive would contract the currency, and which would thereby increase the value of the money with which he was to be paid.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no.

Mr. DAWES. And the other part of his argument was that about one-third, more or less, of all the property of the country was in investments, and that you compelled the debtor, by increasing the value of his money, to pay the creditor in an increased value of currency greater than the value of it when he borrowed the money; and therefore it was unjust to the debtor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman now allow me to state exactly what my position was?

Mr. DAWES. I would rather not at present.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. You do not want to misstate my proposition?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But that is not my proposition.

Mr. DAWES. My colleague has withheld from the RECORD the remarks he made the other day——

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I was away, and could not put them in.

Mr. DAWES. I am aware of that. It was not from any design, I know. Meanwhile I will go through with my answer to his argument as I understand it and find it in all the papers. Then, perhaps, I will answer it as he now seeks to present it. Now, if it be true that the reason the capitalist will not consent to loan his money on time is because he is afraid of a contraction of the currency, it will be because the currency when contracted will not be worth so much to him as it was when the loan was made.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no; not at all.

Mr. DAWES. If it is worth more to him when he is paid, then of course he would rather lend on time. But if what we who believe in a solid specie basis claim is really true, that what the capitalist is afraid of is not that you will contract the currency but that you will expand it, and by expansion make it less valuable, then of course the fear of expansion—not contraction—is the cause of the increased rate.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He is afraid he will not get his pay at all.

Mr. DAWES. Two cannot talk on this subject at the same time, and I will ask the Chair to arrange who shall speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will not interfere with the gentleman [Mr. DAWES] any more. I only want to protest that he is misstating my argument. Having done that, he may misstate it as much as he likes.

Mr. DAWES. I did not intentionally misstate it. I state it as I heard it and as he is reported in all the papers.

Now, I insist upon it that there can be no question that the reason why you are obliged to pay more for money on time than on call is because of the apprehension that Congress is going to inflate the currency, not to contract it. And it is because the capitalist knows that an inflated currency is not worth as much as a contracted currency; that it will not purchase as much; that its purchasing power is less. And if he is to be paid nine months or a year hence in a currency whose purchasing power is less, he must have a greater rate of interest. If he is to be paid in a currency whose purchasing power is greater, he will take a less rate of interest. And the test is the rate of interest in the market to-day. And the answer to what I understood to be my colleague's argument is in that very fact. It is all summed up in these words: We have a currency over the value of which Congress has control, and no mortal can tell what that value will be nine months or a year hence. Now, my colleague says something else to-day, or says that he intended the other day to state it somehow differently.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no.

Mr. DAWES. Different from what I understood it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Not differently at all.

Mr. DAWES. Perhaps not different from what he said, but from what I understood him. He either stated that to be the reason, or he stated the opposite to be the reason.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No.

Mr. DAWES. Because there is no other horn to that dilemma. It must be either from contraction or inflation.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me; I can explain in three words, if you will allow me.

Mr. DAWES. I would rather you would not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I know you would.

Mr. DAWES. My colleague is reported in all the papers to have said this:

> But if he wants money as a business loan, he cannot borrow it on commercial paper at less than 7, 8, 9, or 10 per cent. Why? Because it is understood that Congress and the Executive are determined to contract the currency until specie payment is reached.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is true.

Mr. DAWES. There is one alternative. My colleague will not deny that he stated, what everybody claims to be the truth, that money raised on commercial paper on time commands a greater rate of interest than money on call. Now, it is for one of two reasons: It is either because the man who lends the money expects it to be paid back to him in a depreciated currency, or in an appreciated currency, one or the other.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No; he may not expect to get his pay at all; that is the trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No; he does not yield to him.

Mr. DAWES. If that be the reason, that he may not get it at all, that is a risk that every man runs who loans money on time under any circumstances whatever. No legislation, either in this bill or in any other, could take away that element of risk in the lending of money. It is a risk as much under the one alternative as under another. The proposition of my colleague and of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in the bill before the committee, is to make that which was a war measure of the Government—the introduction of Government promises to pay without provision for their immediate payment—a permanent part of the currency of the country in time of peace. I said when on the floor before that it was a departure from all the former policy of the Government of the United States.

It is a question whether there is any power under the Constitution of the United States, except that power which rises above almost every other—the power of self-preservation in time of war—that authorizes the Government at all to issue this kind of paper. So little did the framers of the Constitution dream of the exercise of such a power under any circumstances, that they did not provide in terms for its exercise even for the purpose of saving the life of the Government in the perils of war. And the Supreme Court of the United States has indicated in its late opinions and judgments grave doubts whether there exists at all in the Government any such power except to meet the exigencies of war. That the power was exercised from the most patriotic motives all admit. All now admit that it was an absolute necessity at the time. The history of the creation of those promises of the Government is that they came out of the groans and the burdens of the life-struggle of the nation, and are not the healthy development and growth of the country in its normal condition. It were a marvel that out of such a state of things, and to meet such a terrible exigency, there came, as by chance, a peace policy setting at naught all the laws of finance by which the civilized world has till now been governed.

I hold in my hand the autograph letter of the then Secretary of the Treasury, the late Chief Justice of the United States, in which he returned to the Committee on Ways and Means the first bill that was introduced into the House of Representatives creating these legal-tender notes. In that letter is set forth the necessity for their creation; the struggle in his own mind to come to the conclusion that in that state of things there was power in the Government to make them a legal tender—a conclusion which he afterward, as Chief Justice, reversed; and his anxiety to meet the issue with a corresponding power to fund them in a 6 per cent. gold-bearing bond to keep them at a level with specie and to secure their immediate retirement as soon as the necessities of the Government should permit. And I hold also a subsequent letter to that committee in which, when in order to float in the darkest hours of the war the ten-forty bonds the Government made the fatal mistake of abandoning the idea of funding these notes in a 6 per cent. gold-bearing bond, he records his anxiety and distress, in view of the necessity pressing upon him, to resort as a substitute for this funding process to that other alternative of contraction, which brings with it so much distress and consequent opposition. I do not feel quite at liberty to put these letters upon the record without permission. I allude to them because they do but give expression to the entire sentiment of those in every branch of this Government who created these notes.

War, with its necessities and burdens, being passed, the country looked to us for a policy that would cause these notes to pass away also, and the abnormal condition of things created thereby to fade with the memories of the war. They have looked in vain. Indeed, until within a short time it has been the announced policy to let things alone, and allow the country to grow up to the expanded condition of the currency, and so relieve itself of this abnormal, this strange condition of things. But I am here to rejoice with my friend from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that at last an unmistakable voice comes to our aid from high authority, demanding an affirmative and an aggressive policy toward these Treasury notes. I rejoice that our hands are being strengthened in the effort (if we have courage to make it) to bring this country back to the laws of trade; those laws which no sophistry of argument, or misapprehension of facts, or misconstruction of circumstances, however specious, can put to naught. But the effort is now, by the bill before the House, to perpetuate this condition of things, and make it the permanent policy of the land.

One of the advantages which, as I understood my colleague when he spoke and as I find him reported, he expects will flow from legalizing and perpetuating this condition of things through the present bill is that it will save the Government interest. Upon this point I would ask the attention of the House for a moment, for I believe the reverse to be true. He proposes by means of this bill to make the Government a depository, a grand national savings-bank, to keep the surplus greenbacks of individuals who are tired of carrying them; the Government giving the individual a bond in place of the greenbacks. As the bond is a bond payable on call, the greenbacks must be in the Treasury to meet the call. The bond bears 3.65 per cent. interest. The greenback lies idle in the Treasury. Now, this proceeding undoubtedly saves somebody interest; and the only mistake my colleague made was in overlooking the fact that it saves the interest to the holder of the bond, while the Government pays that interest for the privilege of keeping in its vaults greenbacks for the individual. The Government is to be made the safe depository for the individual under circumstances that forbid investment; and then the Government is to pay the depositor 3.65 per cent. interest for the privilege of holding his money for him. That is another error of fact brought to the support of this proposition.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] proposes in his amendment to the bill another anomaly. He proposes that the moment any holder of greenbacks deposits them in the Treasury and takes a Government bond for them bearing interest at 3.65 per cent., the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon take 75 per cent. of that deposit and purchase with it a portion of the outstanding debt of the country. Then there will be left in the Treasury 25 per cent. only of the greenbacks. The owner of the bond may come the next day and demand the whole of his greenbacks, though three-fourths of them have gone beyond reach. Yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania at the same time proposes to limit the Government to the present issue of $382,000,000 of greenbacks, so that it will not be enabled to issue another dollar to meet three-fourths of the call which the depositor makes upon him. Under his proposition the Government may be required to pay back the whole of the deposit of greenbacks, while it has only one-fourth of those greenbacks to pay it with. For illustration: I may take $1,000 of greenbacks and deposit them in the Treasury, and then the Secretary of the Treasury is required by this law to take $750 of those greenbacks and invest them in the outstanding debt of the nation. To-morrow I go back to the Secretary and demand my $1,000 of greenbacks in exchange for the bond that I purchased with them; but the Secretary says, "I have only $250 of the amount; what shall I do?" That is not my difficulty; that is a difficulty of this proposition.

Another advantage which the gentleman from Pennsylvania says this process of his has over all others is that it will appreciate the value of the greenback. Let us look at that. He makes greenbacks exchangeable for a currency-bond bearing 3.65 per cent. interest.

Then the greenback and the bond will each be worth as much as the other. If the bond brings a certain price, the greenback will bring the same price; for they are exchangeable one for the other. Now, a 5 per cent. thirty-year bond is worth in the markets of the world somewhere about par to-day, and it is payable in gold. A 3.65 gold-bearing bond, having thirty years to run, would be worth just about eighty-four dollars on the hundred. If it is payable in greenbacks, as proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it will be worth just so much less as greenbacks are worth less than gold to-day—10 per cent., or nearly that.

The greenback is 10 per cent. below par to-day, and if you make it exchangeable for the 3.65 bonds, which are worth only eighty-four, you sink it in a moment to eighty-four, and it cannot be otherwise.

Mr. KELLEY. Let me ask the gentleman a question right here?

Mr. DAWES. Not now.

Mr. KELLEY. The bonds can never become commercially put upon the market while redeemable at par at the Treasury.

Mr. DAWES. Five-twenties are redeemable at par at the Treasury, and yet they are put upon the market. As suggested by my friend here, what mystery is there in a bond that bears 3.65 per cent. interest from any other bond? Then, if it sinks the greenback to 84 in gold and to only 75 when payable in currency, as provided here, you see at once you inflate the values just in that proportion. You render it necessary to have so many more greenbacks to do the same amount of business as there is difference between their present value and the value of that bond, and that is inflation of the most alarming character. All prices, all values, all business, are at once, as an inevitable consequence, inflated to almost, if not quite, the exact difference here shown.

But a stranger argument than all comes from my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] and that is that he is going to meet that great illuminating maxim which is found in the President's annual message—(and which he wants written over the doors of all the poor men in this country)—that maxim, contained in these words of the President's message, "debt, debt abroad, is the only element which can, with always a sound currency, enter into our affairs to cause any continued depression in the industries and prosperity of our people." My friend never stopped for a moment to consider the qualifying words, "with always a sound currency," used by the President, and on which this whole debate hinges, but flaunts his panacea for a foreign debt, which is the funding of it in a currency-bond bearing 3.65 interest, by which he promises to draw out of the hands of the foreign bankers our five-twenties 6 per cent. gold-bearing bonds in exchange for it. That is the sublimest stretch of financial imagination and the loftiest flight of political economy that it has ever been my good fortune to witness sent abroad upon the air from this House. Where is the fool abroad who holds any of the fifteen hundred millions of the debt of the United States payable in coin at 6 per cent. or 5 per cent. who is going to let it come back here in exchange for a currency-bond that bears only 3.65 per cent. interest? What is his inducement? What possible motive can lie at the bottom of such a proceeding?

But I take it my friend's answer to all this is, there is another element in this bond which I have not considered, namely, that he can convert it into greenbacks whenever he pleases, or carry his greenbacks back and get this bond again. Interconvertibility is the cabalistic word which is to work miracles upon our foreign as well as domestic debt. In other words, it is that he can play fast and loose with it. Now, that would indeed be a thing of great value to a foreign holder of our bonds! It would be of immense value to those who hold these fifteen hundred millions of our bonds that they could exchange them for greenbacks whenever they pleased by coming over here. But my friend from Pennsylvania is mistaken in this effect of his bond, or else all the laws which have governed trade heretofore and controlled men in the transaction of their business have proved erroneous. But suppose he succeeds in thus locking up every greenback in exchange for his 3.65, and then tolls back from foreign countries an equivalent of 5.20 bonds, he has funded after all only three hundred and eighty-two millions out of fifteen hundred millions of our foreign indebtedness, and his illuminated passage from the President's message over the doorway of the domicile of the poor man remains still an unfulfilled and delusive utterance. It has brought no bread to his table, no employment to his willing hands, nor has it set in motion one dollar of idle capital. There still remain unaffected by all this process fifty-eight millions of unemployed currency in the vaults of the banks of New York, and the wheels of business are as motionless as ever.

My colleague, in further support of this measure, proposed to cure another evil, and that was the great cost in transportation. He is to bring this measure into the platform of the cheap transportationists and the grangers of the West. Commenting upon the necessity for some relief in that quarter, my colleague made the following statement—I hope I understood him right this time—that the condition of things between the East and West in the cost of transportation was such that it took four bushels of corn to carry one bushel from the West to the sea-board. I believe I understood him right for once. Then I went to the price-current, and found that on the day he made his speech the price of a bushel of corn in Chicago was seventy-five cents, and in Boston about ninety-three cents. I turned to the cost of freight on a bushel of corn, and instead of finding it four times seventy-five cents, or three dollars, I found it from eighteen to twenty-one cents to New York, and twenty to twenty-two in Boston.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Was that Chicago-raised corn—was the corn you found at seventy-five cents raised in Chicago?

Mr. DAWES. No, sir.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is not West by a long chalk.

Mr. DAWES. That is the matter with this statement, is it?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let me put you right. I said taking freight from Minnesota where corn in some parts is twenty cents a bushel and is some 100 or 105 at the sea-board.

Mr. DAWES. From Saint Louis the cost is about the same as from Chicago, and from the center of Iowa it costs about eight cents more. Minnesota does not raise corn. There is no arithmetic except that published by my colleague which can make freights from any section known as the West four times seventy-five cents on a bushel of corn. He cannot make it half a dollar.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Have you added interest, commissions and middle-men? Do not try to cheat the people; give them fair play.

Mr. DAWES. Interest, insurance, and middle-men are common to both conditions of the currency, and therefore do not enter into this discussion. On a bushel of corn they are a mere bagatelle.

I beg to refer to another statement of my colleague, connected so closely as it is with our own State, and which excited my surprise; and that is his alluding to a matter of which the State of Massachusetts is very proud. Our State has one hundred and seventy-five savings-banks, in which was deposited $200,000,000 by more than six hundred thousand depositors, more than one in every three of her inhabitants; and an investigation showed that three-fourths of all were the fruits of wage-labor. My colleague intimated that, in this disturbed state of things as regards values, if the servant-girls of Massachusetts should call at once upon its savings-banks for their deposits, it would collapse all business in that State; and the remedy for the evil is the proposition to make the Government itself a savings-bank for that purpose. Now, I do not mean to intimate that my colleague has a feeling of the slightest hostility to any possible interest in Massachusetts, nor do I make a claim for myself to one particle more of zeal or fidelity for her interests, as I understand them, than I concede to my colleague as he understands them. But from my stand-point his propositions are all fraught with disaster and ruin, and I must say that I deeply regret any intimation or use of language which can possibly suggest to those to whom three-fourths of all that capital of two hundred millions on call in Massachusetts belongs, that there is such a condition of things possible that shall tempt them to make that call. My colleague, I am confident, would, on further reflection, never indulge in even a whisper of alarm in the ear of those whom he proposes by this bill to feed by reducing the purchasing power of their daily pay with chaff and a stone instead of bread. The depositors in the New England savings-banks can never be tempted to exchange the safety of these institutions for the uncertainty and risks which this bill involves.

I have shown, Mr. Chairman, that the direct and inevitable consequence of the substitution of this bill for the existing state of things, instead of bringing relief by appreciating the greenback to gold at par, will sink it 10 or 15 per cent. below its present value, and thereby take from the laborer, not only in Massachusetts, but the country over, 10 or 15 per cent. of the present purchasing power of his day wages, cutting down his now scanty loaf of bread that much. That is one of my objections to the measure. Well, my colleague says that his argument in favor of this measure has not been answered and cannot be answered. I am not going to enter into the lists with him in an argument upon that point. I am simply employing myself now with stating some insuperable objections to his bill. Whatever may be his philosophy, whatever may be the laws of political economy, sound or unsound, upon which he bases his bill, this fact, and this alone, inevitable as the laws of trade or the motions of the heavenly bodies, is enough for me. No policy shall receive my sanction that will further depreciate one iota this abnormal and strange currency which the Government has forced upon us; and that policy, and that alone, which I can be made to see will bring them nearer and nearer to the standard of the money of the world shall receive my vote.

Now, sir, one moment upon a suggestion which I think will have that tendency. It may not be, and is not, of course, the only one. My colleague may see insuperable objections to that, and others may. The greenback is a promise made by the Government. They have promised to pay me a hundred dollars; they do not say when; they do not provide a method for my enforcing it. It is worth something, and the whole value of it arises not alone from the ability of the promisor to pay, but from his disposition also. Now, some other value enters into the market price of this paper than the wealth of the nation of which we hear so much. It is not enough that the maker of the paper is able to pay. The question is whether he will pay. I may have a note of hand against my colleague or any other member of this House for a thousand dollars. I take it into the market; I satisfy the buyer that there is a million of dollars behind that; but his answer to me is, "Will the maker of that note pay it when I ask him?" If I cannot answer that question the note drops in the market. No matter how much the maker of it is worth; no matter how many millions of dollars of property this nation have behind the promise, if the maker thereof does not pay it and will not pay it, it is good for nothing to the holder, and its market value drops.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I should like to have a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no power in the Committee of the Whole to ask the committee for an extension of time. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] is recognized.

Mr. PHELPS. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts what time he requires.

Mr. DAWES. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy and will not abuse it.

Now, that is what is the matter with the greenback to-day. It is not that the Government cannot, but that it will not pay. The greenback would be worth just as much as a gold dollar to-day if the Government would pay it when you present it. It never will be worth as much as a gold dollar until the Government does do that thing. Do that thing and all the rest follows. Make the greenback exchangeable for a gold dollar, and it makes no difference whether you retire it or let it remain a part of the currency. Whenever you can have a dollar for it, then you do not want a dollar for it. Whenever you can get your national-bank bill convertible into so many dollars, that moment you would rather have the bill than the dollars. So it will be with the greenback. Make it exchangeable at par for a gold dollar or what is worth a gold dollar, and that moment there ceases the desire to make the exchange at all, and it becomes as good a currency as coin itself.

Now, sir, if the Government of the United States has not got gold dollars enough to pay this $382,000,000, what should it do? It should just tell the holder of them, "I will give you what is an equivalent; I will give you a bond that is worth par." Now, that is one way to bring the greenback to par. Another way to bring it to par is to make it scarce by contraction or by any other process. Any process that makes it scarce on the one hand and compels you to take it on the other compels you to pay more for it.

The remedy lies in one of two methods. The Government pays me this promise with a gold-bearing bond, or contracts its currency until it is so scarce that a man will have to give par for it.

What is the difference between these two methods? The difference is just this: in the one case the Government pays the discount; in the other the holder of the note pays it. Now which is right? The Government is the promissor; the Government made this paper; the Government by its own course has depreciated it. There is no power in the wide world but the power of the Government itself to depreciate its paper. The Government itself went to work by its own legislation, no matter whether ex necessitate rei, or in any other way; the fact is indisputable that the Government depreciated its own paper. Then, should not the Government itself bear the loss? The Government compelled me to take a one hundred dollar promise, and then by its own legislation made that promise worth only ninety dollars. Now this question is presented: either the Government shall make good that ten dollars of its own promise, or it will make me take the promise and make good the difference too. The difference between the effect of these two methods is as wide as the difference in their justice.

The process of contraction, making it scarce, brings about the evils my colleague and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] deprecate; appreciates values as they say, disturbs the relation of labor and capital, and, as they say, brings ruin upon the debtor and exalts the creditor. The other way, which is the wise and righteous rule, that the Government shall itself take care of its own paper, not depreciate it, shall make good that difference—that way disturbs no values, keeps the relation of debtor and creditor where it was before the existing state of things, brings values on the one side and on the other to a common level without depreciating the one or appreciating the other. The only manly, honest, and courageous way is for the maker of the paper to meet its obligations. That which is honest and manly in an individual in this regard is the only honest, manly, and upright course for the nation itself. It would be infamous for the nation to depreciate its own paper and then refuse to redeem it. I have shown that the inevitable effect of the bill before the House is further to depreciate in the market the promises of the Government, and it is only necessary to add that there is no pretense that the bill holds out the slightest promise of redemption. Though not intended for that result by its authors, it stands before the world as a measure further to bring dishonor upon the Government and distrust and consequent disaster upon the business of the country.

The effect of a dishonest and mean course on the part of an individual may be confined to himself and those with whom he deals. But the Government deals not only with all its people, but with all other peoples; and its credit at home and its faith with its creditors here and abroad depend upon its good name before the nations of the world. By so much the more is it incumbent upon the Government, regardless of all consequences to itself of expenditure in the matter of interest, to walk up in a manly, bold, and courageous manner and meets its obligations.

To that end, at the last session of Congress I introduced a bill providing for the funding of these greenbacks in a gold-bearing bond of such a rate of interest as would make the bond par in the markets of the world, and as they should be funded, meeting the necessities of trade and currency with free banking. If those bonds remain at par, of course the greenback exchangeable for it would also remain at par. I see no reason why the greenbacks, when brought to par, could not with safety remain a part of the currency. But if those laws of trade, stronger than legislation, and which will not lie, shall in their effect decide that, as between these two kinds of currency, the greenback and the national currency, this one shall go to the wall and the national-bank currency take its place, it goes there without loss to the holder, without dishonor to the Government, and we will again be where we were before the war—upon that basis of gold and silver which is alone recognized as money in the Constitution and by the civilized world.

It is now suggested that at some fixed period we should repeal the legal tender character of these notes. If that is done, of course they must be funded, and they must be funded in an equivalent gold-bearing bond, or the nation stands before the world repudiating its contracts. I see no necessity for such a repeal. Let them be brought to par and take their chances by the side of free banking, and let the instincts of trade decide between them. Therefore, whether it is accompanied with the suggestion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] and the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and the President, that after a time the legal tender character of these notes be repealed, or whether you do it with the idea that the laws of trade shall determine whether they shall longer exist or not, you do that, and that only, which common honesty requires at the hands of this Government.

Now, a single word more and I have done. There are many details of such a bill, many obstacles in the way that must be removed, I know. I do not intend to set myself up as a teacher in this matter. I only suggest a way out of this difficulty. If discussion shall show that a better way opens, that does lead out instead of leading further into that boundless and bottomless bog upon which we have been floundering since the war, that measure shall receive my support. But I insist upon it that those who are responsible for the administration of public affairs shall not allow any time to be lost. I can understand why my friend from New York [Mr. COX] deprecates our touching this question this session. I can understand why it will be taking from him a stored-up capital against the republican party, that they have put off too long this duty. I only wonder that any one on this side of the House will give his ear to any such suggestion from that quarter. The purpose and consequence of delay are so clearly to the advantage of those for whom he speaks, and so certain to bring disaster upon the party which he opposes and every business interest and obligation of the country, that the coolness of this suggestion of delay from that quarter is equaled only by the folly of acquiescence in it on our part.

The republican party has just three months in which to save or to bury itself, and has the rare opportunity of performing the work for itself. No other power can accomplish its ruin. It will pass out of mind and memory in the politics of this country, if at all, by its own hand. It has the power as well as the opportunity of accomplishing either of these results. In the past glory and achievements of that party, I am as proud as any one. In the grand possibilities of its future no man has more faith than I have, and in the work which it has thus far accomplished no man has devoted more of years or strength. Let me say, therefore, to those who have its future in their keeping, whatever else may betide it, let it not die for want of courage.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] has forty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. PHELPS. I shall not long occupy the attention of the House. I do not wish on this occasion to enter into any tedious review of those first principles of finance which are now familiar to all. Why should I tell the old story? The words of man may have heretofore been unable to force a recognition of them, but the providence of God has flashed a recognition into the heart of every American citizen, and argument at last is needless.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this Government has been for more than twelve years without any money. It has had a currency, and it has labored with whatever success it might to force this currency to do the duty of money.

This currency has been called by some, especially the men whose gift was that of eloquence, "the best currency which the world has ever seen." Others, whose gift was rather of reason and premonition, have called it a depreciated, an inferior currency, which called loudly for improvement.

Our currency, call it good or bad, is not equal to the money which it seeks to represent, and is below par in gold; and this has been the nature of the currency which we have tried to use since the beginning of the war. It was unequal to money, because it lacked the first requisite of money; it had no permanence of value; it fluctuated like the waves of the sea. This currency was worth 50; to-day is worth 90; and to-morrow, if the views of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] should prevail, may be worth 10. May I not say that a currency which fluctuates in this way, like the waves of the sea, is a bad currency, and which can only harm us and the people whom we represent?

Who now denies that such fluctuation in the measure of value is the source of innumerable woes, material and moral, breeding and perpetuating panics, while it touches with the hand of death all the industries of the nation.

Let us grant, then, that this currency is bad, and let us next consider how it shall be made good. But first, what made it bad? The currency is, in my opinion, bad for two reasons. The first reason is that it consists exclusively of promises of the United States Government to pay money, and the Government does not honor these promises; does not pay them. Of course, then, this currency is unequal to money, and must so continue until the holder of the greenback can knock at the door of the national Treasury and demand a fulfillment of the promise. When the promise of the Government is kept, then these Treasury notes, which constitute the only currency that we have, are equal to money, are at par with gold, and the currency is good. Let me repeat, our currency is bad because it consists exclusively of the promises of the Government to pay money, and which the Government refuses to pay.

There is another reason. We find operating in the field of finance that same law of supply and demand which mortals vainly seek to escape. There is more currency than the country needs; and because there is a superfluity of it, it sinks in value. The supply exceeds the demand. If you could increase the demand, you would increase the value; if you cannot increase the demand for currency, you must diminish its amount or diminish its value. And this currency of ours, because it is excessive in amount, is below the value of money, is not at par in gold.

You have now the two reasons why, in my opinion, this currency is depreciated. The next question is, how shall we improve and appreciate it? The most natural course would seem to be to remove the causes which have brought about this effect. We ought in the first place to redeem the promises of the Government; these promises, which constitute the currency, should be paid. It is no longer an excuse to say that their payment is impossible. It is not impossible. We ought to pay these promises of the Government, because they are due and we can pay them. Borrow money on time and furnish the Treasury of the United States with the means by which to redeem its honor. We can easily borrow on our bonds, and we need not borrow very much.

Do not think it necessary that we should borrow that amount of money which would balance dollar by dollar the whole amount of our circulation. We have not to borrow three hundred and eighty-six millions. The experience of banking, from its inception, has been that a small sum of money is sufficient to float a large amount of currency. Borrow one hundred millions and we could resume to-morrow, were it wise to insist on immediate resumption. This first method of improving the currency is the better; borrow on time and pay the promissory notes of the Government, which are due—all of them.

But there is another method. If we are unwilling to do the whole of our duty; if we are unwilling to undertake to keep all our promises which circulate from hand to hand, telling to every man, woman, and child the protracted dishonor of the country, let us do a part, let us do what we easily can—diminish their number. For even if the Government did not keep all its promises, did not redeem all the greenbacks, it could redeem some; it could withdraw and cancel a part. And this withdrawal and cancellation should proceed until the residue were forced to par. We should need to withdraw but a few. Potent influences aid us in the appreciation of the balance.

The country needs some medium of exchange, and can get no other. This is an inexorable necessity, and stamps some value on the greenback. Then there is the legal-tender act, which brings its duress; and law, while not omnipotent, is very powerful. This brings more. And then comes the hope of the citizen, growing to assurance, that the promises of the Government, thus reduced in number and amount, must ultimately be paid. These three influences would aid to keep the irredeemable greenbacks at par with gold were their proportions curtailed to the actual needs of the country's business.

To sum up: Reason would suggest these two ways of perfecting our currency and making it as good as money:

We could borrow money enough on time to pay all our demand notes, and then our currency is at par; or

We could borrow enough to pay off a portion of our demand notes, and by the necessities of trade, the pressure of law, and the growth of credit, float the rest at par. Ought we not to take one course or the other?

But my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] whose measure is now before the House, comes and looks at this problem and proffers a different solution. He ignores the public creditor, and glories in national protests. He would let the debt stand forever, and recognize insolvency as the permanent condition of a free people. Not one dollar would he pay; not one greenback would he withdraw or cancel. Gathering them all as the inevitable outgrowth of our civilization, he would permanently build upon this yeasty and fluctuating mass of protested paper a magnificent fabric of governmental banking, at the top of which should fly a broad flag with the mystic numbers "3.65."

Mr. KELLEY. As the gentleman from New Jersey proposes to speak for me, I should like to ask him a question. I protest against his interpretation. I ask whether you relieve yourself of debt by borrowing money to pay your present creditors? That, I understand, is his suggestion, that we shall borrow money with which to pay off greenbacks. That is the method of Mr. Micawber, who paid everybody when he could borrow the money to pay, and when he could not pay, gave his creditors due-bills, what the United States Government did in order to save the life of the nation in a great war. I do not believe in the Micawber method of transferring our debt by borrowing money to pay it.

Mr. PHELPS. My friend from Pennsylvania fails to make a distinction familiar to the minds of all business men, and which his friend Mr. Micawber, whom I would not cite as the very best illustration of business shrewdness, himself never failed to perceive.

He forgets to make this distinction. I may borrow money and promise to pay it in nine years. I am not then insolvent; I have not broken my promise; I am not in the hands of my creditors until nine years have elapsed and the payment of the debt is demanded and refused. But if I promise to pay one day after date, and the morrow comes and the promise with it, I am insolvent; I have broken my promise; I am in the hands of my creditor unless then and there I pay it. Recognizing this distinction, I ask the United States Government to pay the dollar which it promised twelve years ago—to pay one dollar to every man who presented a greenback. I ask the United States Government to sell its bonds, payable in twenty or forty years, so as to pay its creditors now. Their debt is due, and should be paid.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was saying the plan proposed by my friend from Pennsylvania was to recognize—it is evident from his question that I do not misinterpret him—this debt as permanent; and his bill shows I am correct in charging that upon this yeasty and uncertain basis he wishes to rear a magnificent fabric of governmental banking, and crown it with a flag that shall give back to the skies all the mystery of that magic number "3.65."

The conception of the scheme is grand and courageous. I admit also the beauty and perfection of its details. It lacks but one thing—it lacks money. But this banking system is conceived in perfect harmony with that financial system which now exists, and of which it shall be a complemental part. The financial system is based upon battle-worn and blood-stained greenbacks, and these are based upon the wealth and resources of this great and free country. So the financial system groups all the advantages of the earth.

And now comes my friend from Pennsylvania, and to it adds a banking system which is based upon paying and receiving interest at 3.65; which is based upon the fact that the earth revolves around the sun in three hundred and sixty-five days. So this banking system takes to itself the main advantages of the heavens. And when you unite the two together this financial system and this banking system you make a wall buttressed by earth and heaven against which all opposition beats in vain. He who speaks against the financial system despises patriotism, and he who speaks against the banking system ignores astronomy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, no government ought to go into the banking business. If any government ought to go into the banking business, it is not ours, because it is insolvent. It would seem as if the first requisite of successful banking would be money to lend; but this Government gets into the banking business under this bill because it has money to borrow. This lack of capital would in ordinary cases be an obstacle. But my friend is not discouraged. "The Government shall bank on credit." Very good. Its credit is already somewhat strained; some of its notes are protested, all are below par.

There is no money, there is poor credit. It is a desperate adventure, but it may succeed. You can improve its credit; you must. If the Government is to bank on credit and not on money, its credit must be good. As it has no money it must show that it can earn it. Then the customer can say, "I admit that the Government bank has no money; I admit its credit is weak; but its future is assured, for its business will be profitable." Alas! no customer can say this. For the Government bank disavows the expectation of profit, and boasts the expectation of loss. It is not to make profit, but its customers. So our Government bank has no money, poor credit, and a certainty of loss.

Is not this fair? Does not this bill propose, when money is worth more than 3.65 per cent., the Government shall lend it to its customers, so that they can profit? And does it not propose, when the money market is dull and money is worth less than 3.65, that the Government shall then take the money and the customer the bond, to make an interest through the bank which he could not make outside?

It does appear strange that men are so loth to listen to the teachings of experience. Why, sir, does not this bill deny that action and reaction are equal, and give hope that a man may pull himself over the fence by his boot? For, mark you, Mr. Chairman, the only conception of government which would make this bill other than ludicrous is to suppose that the Government is an independent something, separate and distinct from us, drawing money and resources from other reservoirs; that it is, in other words, a vast engine, which supplies its own fuel and fire so as to make the steam, which it can forever distribute among the machinery of its citizens gratuitously. But this conception of government is not correct. Our Government is only a part of us, and has no power, no resources, no money, except what we give it; and the money which the Government would loan is the money of its citizens.

Why, Mr Chairman, this same cry which we hear to-day is the cry which has echoed through six thousand years and which thundered here last session, "We want money." And this attempt which we are making to-day is an attempt which has strewed these six thousand years with failures, and which will fail to the end—an attempt to make money. This cry will doubtless be heard all through the centuries to come, for the poor we shall always have with us. And this attempt will doubtless be made so long as men shall be born to hug the delusions of hope and scoff at reason.

All, all, in vain. There is no way to get money except to earn it or to steal it. You cannot make it. And my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] may stand forth with his interconvertible wand, and he may shout his magic password "three-sixty-five" before all the paper our mills can produce, and neither the wand nor the password shall change that paper into gold or currency into money.

And when in the beginning he launched this measure by a proud allusion to Thaddeus Stevens, the Great Commoner, who preceded him in this House, I thought how Stevens during the times of our war issued here his edicts which Congress had only to record, and how he dared once in the pride of transcendent talent to fight against the stars.

He, too, sought by enactment to make of currency money, of paper gold. With what result? The quick lips of your Speaker had scarcely declared that bill an act before the telegraph from Wall street announced gold at 280. And so the laws of God again conquered the laws of man, and the Creator again showed himself stronger than his creature.

Mr. Chairman, I have spoken longer than I had intended. I wish only again to reiterate that in my opinion there is but one way to make this currency equal to money, to bring it to par with gold. That is to follow that straight and narrow path which is the path of honesty. The private citizen has to follow it; the Government, too, must follow it. The citizen pays his debts. We must pay our debts. Then only can we expect to be prosperous and happy; then only shall we again be a happy, a prosperous, and an honored nation.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I have no purpose of making a speech on this occasion. I desire only to explain the reasons which will control my own vote upon this bill.

First, I am opposed to all inflation of the currency. With the exception of my vote for the $400,000,000 greenback bill, for reasons which will appear, as I proceed, I have voted steadily and uniformly against expansion in every guise in which it has been presented to the House.

Second, I am in favor of the resumption of specie payments by the Government at the earliest moment possible, without serious detriment to the finances of the Government.

Third, I am not only opposed to all expansion of the currency, but I am equally opposed to any legislation in the interest of national-bank currency to the exclusion of the legal-tenders, and for these reasons: The legal-tenders represent the non-interest-bearing debt of the Government. Upon the $382,000,000 of legal-tender notes the Government is paying no interest whatever. Upon the $356,000,000 of national-bank circulation the Government is paying, by way of interest upon the bonds deposited as security, between twenty and twenty-one million dollars in gold every year.

I do not think that the substitution of national-bank currency, for the purpose of driving out the circulation of legal-tenders, is thrifty statesmanship. I am quite aware that these national banks pay taxes to the Government, which in part compensates for the interest which the Government pays upon that circulation, but it is only in part.

In the next place, I am opposed to driving greenbacks out of circulation, for the reason that they are legal-tenders, and that in the future even more than in the past they will be of signal service to the finances of our country. Now, in place of any extended argument to demonstrate this proposition, let me cite an illustration. In 1857, if at the distance of nearly twenty years my recollection is correct, the Ohio Life Insurance and Trust Company failed. Certain banks in New York City were involved with this company. There were runs upon those banks for specie payments, and they were compelled to suspend. Other banks were so far complicated with them that they suspended also, and nearly every bank in the country had suspended specie payments within the space of ten days. They shut up like oysters, throwing out the paper of solvent customers, who went to protest, and the consequence was, well nigh universal financial ruin and devastation.

Now, suppose that in 1857 there had been in circulation, or in the Treasury, $382,000,000 of legal-tenders, and that they could have been had in exchange for Government bonds at par with gold, that disaster to the country which happened from public fright, because of the inability of the banks to redeem their notes, would never have happened. And in the future, when the Government shall have resumed specie payments, in times of public panic, if your legal-tenders are in existence, to be had for Government bonds at par with gold, they will be worth more to the commerce and the finances of the country than their face in gold, because they cannot be exported; while your gold, in a sufficient amount to bear the strain of a general panic, cannot be kept in the country. For this reason they will prove to be a handy thing to have in the house. And when resumption of specie payments by the Government is sufficient to meet and overcome the financial evils which we now encounter, are we willing recklessly and madly to throw away the legal-tenders, which could be made of infinite value to the commerce of the country in the future? And let me add that, in my humble judgment, in any issue before the people, between greenbacks and bank-notes, the greenbacks will win, and, brought to par, they ought to win.

Now, I desire not to be misunderstood. I would consent to the continuance of these legal-tenders in circulation only upon condition that they shall be exchangeable for gold at the Treasury of the United States. Before you compel the people to resume specie payments, set them the example. Resume yourselves. Pay gold for your greenbacks at the Treasury. I am unalterably opposed to driving them out of circulation in the interest of national-bank notes. I will vote to make them receivable for customs dues in part. If need be, I will vote to retire them gradually until they come to par, with liberty to reissue them when they are at par. And I will vote with peculiar satisfaction for the measure suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] to fund them in a gold-bearing bond which is worth par.

Now, while there are in the bill of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] some features which impress me very favorably, I think there are very grave objections to it.

It has been said in this debate that there is no expansion in it, and that allegation has gone unchallenged. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there is expansion in this bill; that there is illimitable expansion in it; for this reason: these 3.65 per cent. bonds, it is provided in this bill, may be issued of the denomination of fifty dollars. The $382,000,000 of greenbacks may be returned to the Treasury and in exchange for them there may be issued $382,000,000, in fifty-dollar Government bonds bearing 3.65 per cent. interest. Now what is to prevent that 3.65 per cent. bonds from being circulated as currency? Why sir, it was said here last winter by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] if I mistake not, that the very object of making this interest 3.65 per cent. was that it might be easy of computation being one cent per day upon $100, so that they might readily pass from hand to hand, with the interest added. Not only would those Government bonds be circulated as currency, and thereby expand the currency, but they would be sought for with avidity precisely as the interest-bearing Treasury notes were sought after some years ago when they were in circulation. Now, what would be the result? If the $382,000,000 of greenbacks were returned and exchanged for Government bonds, and three-fourths of the greenbacks received by the Government were reissued to buy gold for the purpose of taking up our bonds abroad, precisely as is contemplated by this bill, then the greenbacks thus reissued would be put into circulation again, so that after the first exchange there would be in circulation, counting those greenbacks and the Government bonds issued for them, $668,000,000, and that process would be repeated ad infinitum. Thus the amount of paper circulating as currency in the shape of greenbacks and these bonds (which, as I said before, would be sought for with avidity, because they bear an interest easy of computation) would be limited only by the amount of Government bonds which we could call in under this process.

For this reason it seems to me there is illimitable inflation in this bill, which I deplore and against which I must protest. But, in the endeavor to relieve one objection to the bill, I move that it be amended in the first section by inserting the words "one thousand" in lieu of the word "fifty," in order that the bonds shall be required to be of the denomination of not less than one thousand dollars.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, we have had a very interesting discussion, as is manifest from the excellent attention which has been given; but I submit that perhaps we had better adjourn. I move, therefore, that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TYNER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 41) for the improvement of the currency and the reduction of the interest on the funded debt of the United States, and had come to no resolution thereon.

POST-OFFICE SCALES.

Mr. TYNER. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table, for concurrence in the amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. No. 3822) making an appropriation to enable the Postmaster-General to carry into effect the law requiring the prepayment of postage on newspapers, approved June 25, 1874.

There being no objection, the amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

Proposals for furnishing said scales shall be invited by seven days' public notice given by the Postmaster-General; and the contract shall be awarded to the lowest and best responsible bidder, the contractor to be allowed a reasonable time in the discretion of the Postmaster-General to deliver the articles contracted for.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. TYNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAINT CLAIR AND CARONDELET BRIDGE.

Mr. NEGLEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives for its use the report of the board of engineers appointed to examine the site of the Saint Clair and Carondelet bridge at Saint Louis, Missouri.

Mr. NEGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 83, noes 92.

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. EAMES were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 94.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask to make a suggestion, that the House meet to-morrow for debate only.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. By no means.

Mr. GARFIELD. Several gentlemen desire to speak.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I understand that; but I have no invitation to that frolic to-morrow, and I am not going to agree to the proposition. I want to come here and do business.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know what "frolic" the gentleman refers to. If my proposition is objected to, I demand the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I suppose that in a few days the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] will want the appropriation bills to stop all other business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Ohio is too late in calling for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that the House adjourn.

FILLING OF VACANCIES ON COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. Before submitting the motion to adjourn, the Chair will detain the House by announcing appointments to fill vacancies on the following committees:

The Select Committee on the Arkansas Election Investigation: Mr. SCUDDER, of New York.

The Committee on the Judiciary: Mr. FINCK, of Ohio.

The Committee on Reform in the Civil Service: Mr. CHITTENDEN, of New York.

The Committee on the Centennial Celebration and the Proposed National Census of 1875: Mr. SCHELL, of New York.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions: Mr. STRAWBRIDGE, of Pennsylvania.

The Committee on Education and Labor, and also the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department: Mr. CARPENTER, of South Carolina.

There was a vacancy created last session by the resignation of Mr. ROBERT S. HALE as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. No action was taken further than the rules indicated, and the Chair will have the rule read to show what takes place in such an emergency.

The Clerk read as follows:

The first-named member of any committee shall be the chairman, and in his absence, he being excused by the House, the next named member; and so on as often as the case shall happen, unless the committee, by a majority of their number, shall elect a chairman.

The SPEAKER. The operation of this rule makes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HARMER] the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PROTECTION OF LIVES OF PASSENGERS.

On motion, by unanimous consent, a message was ordered to be sent to the Senate, requesting the return of the bill (H. R. No. 58) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to security of life on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. MCDONALD, its Chief Clerk, notifying the House that the President pro tempore of that body had appointed Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, commissioner on the statue of General Nathanael Greene, as provided for in the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

It further announced that, in compliance with the request of the House, the Senate returned the bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to security of life on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes.

The motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, was then agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and forty-five minutes, p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ALBRIGHT: The petition of Charles B. White, George M. Sternberg, and J. J. Woodward, assistant surgeons United States Army, asking redress of grievances, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BECK: The petition of Rachel E. Turner, widow of James H. Turner, deceased, late adjutant Twenty-Fourth Kentucky Volunteers, for arrears of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of citizens of Poweshiek County, Iowa, of similar character, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of citizens of Iowa County, Iowa, of similar character, to the same committee.

By Mr. WOOD: The petition of Annie M. Dudley, widow of William H. Voorhies, alias William J. Brown, late of Company F, One hundred and fifty-ninth New York Volunteers, for removal of charge of desertion from her deceased husband, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 11, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

REGENCY, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. HOOPER. I move, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution (S. R. No. 11) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents to the Smithsonian Institution, for consideration at this time.

There was no objection, and the joint resolution, which was read, provides that the existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than members of Congress, shall be filled by George Bancroft, of the city of Washington, in place of William T. Sherman, resigned.

The joint resolution was taken up, read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, and, being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. HOOPER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. POLAND. I move, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table the amendments of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House in reference to the binding of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

There was no objection, and the original resolution, which was read, provides that the Congressional Printer be directed to bind one hundred copies of the Revised Statutes of the United States without the index; forty copies for the use of the Senate, and sixty copies for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. This concurrent resolution comes back with the following amendments of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 after "one hundred" insert "fifty;" in line 5 strike out "forty" and insert "sixty;" and in line 6 strike out "sixty" and insert "ninety."

The SPEAKER. The amendments increase the whole number to one hundred and fifty, giving ninety to the House and sixty to the Senate.

Mr. POLAND. I move concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TEXAS AND MISSISSIPPI RAILROAD.

Mr. MOREY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3746) extending the time for the completion of the railroad in the State of Louisiana from the Texas State line to a point on the Mississippi River opposite Vicksburgh, Mississippi, and moved that it be printed and recommitted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Consent is only given on condition the bill is not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The bill was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

DISPOSITION OF PUBLIC LANDS IN ALABAMA, ETC.

Mr. MOREY also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3605) to place the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Florida, and Arkansas upon the same footing in regard to the disposition of public lands within their limits as the other States, and moved that it be ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Consent is given on the same condition, that this bill is not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. ORR, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3327) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in certain portions of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and Kansas.

The bill, which was read, provides in its first section that it shall be lawful for homestead and pre-emption settlers, in those portions of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and Kansas where the crops of such settlers were destroyed or seriously injured by grasshoppers in the year 1874, to leave and be absent from said lands until May 1, 1876, under such regulations as to proof of the same as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe.

The second section provides that during such absence no adverse rights shall attach to said lands; said settlers being allowed to resume and perfect their settlements as though no such absence had been enjoyed or allowed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ORR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at twenty minutes past twelve o'clock; and, this being Friday, the House proceeds to the consideration of private business, the pending bill coming over from last session being House bill No. 3425, for the relief of Rollin White.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to present a question of order in reference to the consideration of bills under the six-day rule of the House and the twenty-first joint rule, which will be found on page 34 of the Digest of the Rules of the House, and which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After six days from the commencement of a second or subsequent session of any Congress, all bills, resolutions, and reports, which originated in the House, and at the close of the next preceding session remained undetermined, shall be resumed and acted on in the same manner as if an adjournment had not taken place. And all business before committees of the House at the end of one session shall be resumed at the commencement of the next session of the same Congress, as if no adjournment had taken place.

[And by the twenty-first joint rule the resumption of all undisposed-of bills, resolutions, and reports, which originated in either House, is in like manner provided for. The word "resolutions" in the foregoing rule has been invariably held to apply to "joint resolutions" only.].

Mr. HOLMAN. The question I raise is whether the House, under this rule, can proceed in the first six days of the session to the consideration of the unfinished business of the preceding session.

The SPEAKER. The rule has been in existence for many years, and attention has been very seldom called to it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] wish to obstruct the public business at this short session?

Mr. HOLMAN. I simply insist on the rules of the House being complied with.

Mr. KELLOGG. The gentleman was pursuing the same course when he voted to adjourn over from Thursday till Monday.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a day for raids on the public Treasury; and any rule of the House the enforcement of which will prevent that is a good one.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask if that is a joint rule or a House rule?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again read the rule. The Chair remembers the point being raised once on the rule since he was a member of the House; but never since he has been in the Chair.

The rule was again read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from Indiana in support of his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only construction the rule seems to admit of is that the business of the preceding session shall not be taken up for six days; that a reasonable time shall elapse for the introduction of new business at the new session.

The SPEAKER. The rule does not say that the business shall not be taken up within the first six days of the session.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the inference seems irresistible, from the terms of the rule, that the business coming over from the preceding session shall be postponed until after the first six days of the new session. The implication of the rule is certainly one of limitation.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair may be allowed to address an inquiry to the gentleman from Indiana, he would ask him what is the implication as to the business to which the House would proceed on the first six days of the session?

Mr. HOLMAN. The limitation applies to the business which comes over from the preceding session, and implies that new business of the new session shall occupy the six days? The purpose of the rule seems to be very manifest; that the business which came over from the preceding session, inasmuch as it is informally dropped by the adjournment of the House, shall be resumed after six days are given to the introduction of new business. There should be some interval, that the first six days of the session may be devoted to the consideration of the new business of the House, independent of that which came over from the preceding session; as under the old rule the business of each session terminated with it.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state what business there can be before the House in the first six days? In the ordinary routine of the business of the House, the Chair would be at a loss to know what business would be before the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Would it not be in order now to move to go into Committee of the Whole upon an appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. There is no appropriation bill that can be reached until Tuesday of next week.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Does the rule exclude business that came from the Senate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was getting at the spirit of the rule. The question was raised, he remembers now, during the speakership of his immediate predecessor. He thinks the gentleman from Indiana mistaken as to the effect of his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the reason of the rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the reason of the rule is this: That by reason of an adjournment any business pending at the end of the previous session should not get the go-by or be neglected; but it is mandatory upon the House that after six days of the session the House shall proceed to consider the business coming over from the previous session. It is affirmative; it is not a negation; it does not say that the House shall not take up that business before the end of the six days, but that at the end of the six days the business before the committees coming over from the previous session shall be regularly proceeded with.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, then, say "after six days?" Why not say that the House shall proceed with the business that came over from the previous session?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know why that expression was used, except that the fact of receiving messages from the Departments and referring the same, and other preliminary business of that kind, might occupy the six days. There is not a single negative in the whole rule. It does not say that the House shall not proceed to do what it pleases in the first six days. It says that after six days the House shall resume the consideration of business from the previous session.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House could exercise that very power, in the absence of such a rule, from the beginning.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly; and the House has been doing so. At this session the House in Committee of the Whole has been considering a report which came over from the last session.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House has been considering it by unanimous consent, without any question having been raised upon the rule. Apparently the first six days of the session are designed to be consumed in the introduction of appropriation and other bills, and providing for the order of business, and other preliminaries.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will indicate by a practical point the application of the rule. There comes over from the Committee on Patents a report made in the last session. The House adjourned upon that report at the end of the last session. The rule intends that the Committee on Patents shall not be allowed upon its call to interpose any new business, but that the business coming over from the last session shall be resumed. It is an affirmative declaration that the business coming over from the last session shall have precedence of any new business prepared by the committee; and that after six days it must be proceeded with before any other report from the committee can be taken up.

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me to ask this question of the Chair: Whether the construction the Chair is inclined to put upon this rule is that heretofore given to it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is the previous construction of the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. The other branch of Congress has adopted a different construction; that is, that this rule implies limitation upon the consideration of business coming over from the previous session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point was raised and decided by his predecessor. The decision does not seem to have been minuted in the Digest, probably because there was no appeal from it. But the Chair thinks the decision was made by Speaker Colfax as he now reiterates it.

Mr. COX. The rule reads:

And all business before committees of the House at the end of one session shall be resumed at the commencement of the next session of the same Congress, as if no adjournment had taken place.

That seems to be an implication that that kind of business might be taken up at the commencement of the second session, and consequently a limitation upon the construction of the preceding portion of the rule.

The SPEAKER. Still it is mandatory; it provides that all business before committees of the House shall be resumed at the commencement of the next session. It gives the committees six days' more time for the preparation of the business of the House; the committees would be employed for a week in preparing business for the House. The Chair thinks the limitation is suggestive of the meaning of the rule.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I am told that prior to the adoption of that rule all business fell with the session.

The SPEAKER. It fell with the session.

Mr. SCOFIELD. And this rule was adopted in order to carry business over to the next session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. Formerly the call of committees began at each session at the beginning of the list of committees. For many years the practice has been otherwise; and now the call of committees is resumed, in pursuance of the principle of that rule, just where it left off at the previous session, which seems to carry out the spirit of the rule.

Mr. SCOFIELD. If you could not resume the business at all in the subsequent session, prior to the adoption of this rule, it can now be resumed only under the rule. If prior to the adoption of the rule all business of the former session fell with the adjournment, and the business had to be begun de novo, under this rule we must begin at the end of the six days, because the rule does not apply to the first six days of the session. It is only because of the existence of this rule that the business of the former session does not fall altogether.

Mr. GARFIELD. It seems to me that the historical fact alluded to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] would be decisive not only of the origin of the rule but of its purpose. And I may add a further reason, which seems to me to be of some force. Not far from the same time a rule was adopted requiring the Committee on Appropriations to report their bills within thirty days of the commencement of the session. It would be very natural that the ordinary work before the House should be held off for six days, that is the work on the Calendar, in order to allow, not the Appropriation Committee alone, but all the committees of the House to prepare work and get ready for a fair start. If the work of the House should commence instantly upon the commencement of the session, there would be no time for that preliminary preparation. It seems to me this is a limitation simply, intended to compel the House to resume the business of the previous session at the end of six days, but leaving us free to resume it before that time if we choose. It seems to me the Speaker is clearly right.

ROLLIN WHITE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the bill is properly before the House. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Patents be, and hereby is, authorized to rehear and determine the applications of Rollin White for the extension of his letters-patent for improvements in fire-arms, issued April 3, 1855, numbered 12632, 12648, and 12649, (No. 12638 having been reissued May 1, 1866; Nos. 2236 and 12649 having been reissued October 27, 1863, in divisions numbered 1557, 1558, and 1559,) upon the evidence, in the same manner and with the same effect as if they were original applications, made within the time prescribed by law for said extensions before the Commissioner of Patents, and as if no hearing had ever occurred; application to be made within ninety days of the passage of this act: Provided, That, in case of such extensions being granted, no damage shall be recovered for infringements thereof between the date of the expiration of the original patents and the date of such extensions: And provided also, That the Government of the United States, to whom said White has heretofore released, shall still have the right to manufacture and use all the improvements included in said patents in case of such extensions, freely and without charge, and without liability for damages for the use of said patents: And provided also, That in case said extensions shall be granted any person, firm, or corporation that since the expiration of said patents and prior to the passage of this act shall have constructed machinery for the manufacture of the inventions described in said patents or have engaged in the manufacture of said inventions, using machinery previously constructed therefor, shall have the right to apply for and be entitled to receive a license from said Rollin White to manufacture and sell the fire-arms described in said patents for and during the extended term thereof, upon reasonable conditions as to security for payment of the royalty hereinafter mentioned, and prescribed uniform quality of arms manufactured, and as to making report on oath of manufacture and sales, and upon payment of a royalty to said Rollin White of fifty cents, in quarter-yearly payments, upon each and every fire-arm so manufactured.

Mr. CONGER obtained the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] would state whether the report in this case has been printed. I have sent to the document-room and could not obtain a copy. I understand no order was ever made to print it.

Mr. CONGER. The report is printed.

I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] for fifteen minutes.

Mr. MCCRARY. Mr. Speaker, I do not ordinarily desire to discuss bills of this character reported by the Committee on Patents; but my knowledge of Rollin White and my regard for him induced me some time since to make a careful examination of this case, the result of which is a firm conviction in my mind that this bill ought to pass. I believe it to be a case that will appeal to the sense of justice of every gentleman upon this floor who will take the pains to inquire into the facts. As a general thing I am not in favor of the extension of patents; nor have I generally been able to favor bills which merely provided for an extension of the time within which to apply for an extension. But this is a case, in my judgment, of such overwhelming equity that the bill ought to pass. It is an application for a rehearing simply. As to the merits of the case when it shall come to be tried upon its merits I have no opinion now to express. It is not necessary, nor is it proper, that the House should go into that question; but I think every gentleman upon this floor will agree that Mr. White, like every other man who has a case to be tried before a judicial tribunal, ought to have a fair and impartial hearing, and if he has been denied this without any fault of his own—if he has been denied this by reason of the misconduct, the fraud, or the crime of others—then I think the House will not hesitate to accord to him the right to a fair and a full hearing.

Mr. White made his application for an extension of this patent in due season. The Commissioner of Patents fixed the time for the hearing within one or two days of the expiration of the period within which it could be heard. A postponement of two days would have deprived the Commissioner of all jurisdiction in the case. So that it was absolutely necessary to hear and determine the case on the day first fixed by the Commissioner, and I beg the House to bear that in mind. It was not possible for Mr. White to obtain a postponement of the hearing of this case beyond the time fixed by the Commissioner for the trial, because a postponement would have put it beyond the time in which under the law it could be heard at all. The Commissioner of Patents had no jurisdiction to hear it after the expiration of the time fixed by law.

Now, sir, he did not have a fair, full, and impartial hearing for two reasons: First, because the testimony shows conclusively that his attorney was taken suddenly ill and was not able to transact any business for some time before the hearing of the case. The result was that he failed to send forward a considerable part of the testimony which was in his hands, some of which was very material to the rights of Mr. White. I apprehend, if there was nothing in this case beyond that, any court in Christendom would grant a new trial.

And that, sir, is not the most important matter in this case. Mr. White had taken a large amount of testimony before the commissioner in New York. This testimony was placed in the hands of one of the officers of the court there where the testimony was taken. It was locked up in a room for safe-keeping. Two days before the time for the hearing of this matter before the Commissioner of Patents the room was broken into, the trunk in which these exhibits and testimony were kept was broken open, and every particle of testimony to be found there which was intended to be used by Mr. White was stolen and carried away.

Let me show the House that I am not mistaken on this point. The testimony of Mr. Keefe, which was taken before the committee, and which is a part of the report in this case, states the facts in these words:

Testimony of Hamilton M. Keefe, crier of the United States circuit court.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK,
City and County of New York, ss:

Hamilton M. Keefe, of the city of New York, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I am crier of the United States circuit court for the southern district of New York, and have charge of all the models during examinations in said court. Kenneth G. White, esq., United States commissioner, before whom the testimony in the matter of the application of Rollin White for an extension of his patent of fire-arms was taken, instructed me to lock up the models which had been put in evidence in this case. I did so, put some of them in the trunk and the rest in a carpet-bag, and locked them up in a room adjoining the United States circuit court-room, and to which room no one had access but myself. I had occasion to go into the room on the afternoon of the 17th of March, as late as 5 p. m., and then saw that they (the models) were all there safe. I came out and locked the door.

On the morning of the 18th of March I visited the room, and found that during the night it had been opened by some one, and the trunk broken open, most all of the models taken, and the carpet-bag had been taken away altogether, said carpet-bag having in it exhibits. There was also a valise, which contained books and papers in the case, which had been dragged out of the room, through the court-room through an open window, where I found it in the morning. In the room where these models and papers were kept were also a number of valuable models in other cases, and a quantity of clothes belonging to this deponent, none of which had been disturbed. I assisted in packing up all the pistols and exhibits that I found left after the robbery, and I have this day delivered all of them to the express company to be forwarded to the Commissioner of Patents, at Washington, District of Columbia.

HAMILTON M. KEEFE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 23d day of March, 1870.

J. F. STILLWELL,
United States Court, Southern District of New York.

Now, sir, that this testimony and these exhibits which were thus stolen from this claimant on the very eve of his trial were material and were important and necessary to a full and fair hearing of his case is entirely clear from the report of the examiner himself, made to the Commissioner of Patents, on this case.

That report reads:

The evidence filed by the applicant in this case is almost unintelligible, owing to the entire absence of the exhibits to which the witnesses refer. I am informed verbally that these exhibits were abstracted from the office of the magistrate before whom the testimony was taken, after they were packed up for transmission to this office. That the invention is useful, valuable, and important to the public is apparent to my mind, and upon the latter point there is sufficient testimony from disinterested parties.

There, Mr. Speaker, is proof which no man can question that this claimant did not have a fair hearing of his case because somebody stole the evidence from the commissioner on the eve of the trial and when it was too late to replace it.

Now, sir, it is a fair inference—it is an irresistible conclusion from these facts—that somebody stole that evidence and those exhibits and carried them off for the purpose of defeating Mr. Rollin White and preventing him from having a fair trial on his application for an extension of this patent. Who else could have had any motive for abstracting this testimony? Who else could have had any motive for carrying off these exhibits? No man under the sun except some one who wanted to defeat the application of Mr. White for an extension of this patent. Other property was in this same room, property of value, and these exhibits and this testimony were of value to no man upon the face of the earth except Rollin White and the men who were seeking to defeat him in his application for an extension. They took nothing else; they left everything else of value in the room, and only carried off the evidence upon which Rollin White relied for a fair hearing of his case before the Commissioner. As I have said, they carried off nothing else at all.

To me, sir, I say, it is clear, and I put it to any lawyer on this floor that there is not a court on the face of the civilized globe which, upon presentation of facts like these, would hesitate for one moment to say that this party was entitled to a new trial. That is all there is in this bill. It is a provision that Mr. White shall have a hearing upon the facts, upon the testimony as he can produce it. Whether he will be granted an extension I do not undertake to say; that I do not know. All that I claim is, as I said at the beginning, that he is entitled to a fair and full hearing; and in order that he may have this, it is necessary to pass the bill which is now pending.

Mr. MERRIAM. I wish to ask the gentleman if it is not the fact that all the models necessary to perfect his case were in the Patent Office at the time that he made application for the extension?

Mr. McCRARY. Quite the reverse of that is the fact, Mr. Speaker, I know that Mr. Foote, who was Commissioner of Patents at the time, subsequently wrote a letter in which he said that in his opinion no amount of evidence could have been introduced that could have changed his judgment in that case. But I think that was a statement which will not commend itself very much to any fair-minded man. A judge who cannot be convinced by evidence, by any amount of evidence, is not the sort of judge that I would like to have my cause tried before. The fact is as stated by this Commissioner who examined this case, that it was, as he says, entirely unintelligible because of the absence of these very models and these very exhibits which had been stolen from Mr. White. And I say, sir, that any man who will look through the case will see that in a case so complicated as this, without the models and exhibits by which the claimant expected to sustain his case, no court could have a clear and intelligible understanding of its merits; no court could fairly and fully and impartially try it. Mr. White's application was resisted as it is resisted now by the great manufacturing companies of the country—Remington & Co., in the district of my friend from New York, [Mr. MERRIAM,] and other manufacturers in the State of Connecticut, who resisted him then and resist him now, and have fought him about this patent for years.

Mr. MERRIAM. If the gentleman will allow me, I would simply say that all opposition was withdrawn at the time this extension was asked for, mostly by a compromise with those parties.

Mr. McCRARY. There was a compromise with some of them, perhaps, but not with all of them. The whole case is in a nutshell, and I hope the House will not be drawn away from it. This man had a suit before the Commissioner of Patents. He had his counsel employed for many years, who was familiar with all the facts of the case, and had prepared for the trial. His counsel was taken suddenly ill; so ill, that it was impossible to communicate with him at all. His counsel had in his hands important papers and valuable testimony, which he did not, on account of his illness, send forward to the hearing. And in addition to going into the trial under the difficulty of having a new counsel, who had been brought into the case at the last hour, and the case being a difficult and complicated one, his testimony, in the hands of an officer of the court at New York, was stolen and taken away; so that, according to the testimony of the examiner himself, his case was rendered unintelligible. Now, if that be not a good case for granting a rehearing, to the end that there may be a fair trial, I do not know what would make a good case. I say nothing as to the merits. I take it that the Commissioner of Patents will try it fairly; but I say this man is entitled to a fair trial.

Mr. MERRIAM. Will the gentleman yield to me to say——

Mr. McCRARY. I have the floor from the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. MERRIAM. I want to answer one point of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CONGER. I cannot yield to the gentleman just now. I have yielded ten minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman from Connecticut will allow me a few minutes, I desire to have read from the New York Tribune an editorial paragraph. I ask the Clerk to read the paragraph which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

A HALF-MILLION STEAL.—The first of the jobs makes it appearance at the Capitol early, and, we regret to say, in one of General GARFIELD'S surprisingly prompt appropriation bills. We beg the general to relieve himself and his committee from responsibility for it at once. * * * A correspondent, thoroughly well informed, traces in detail, in another column, the various steps of the robbery. Let us here reproduce the outline.

The Pacific Mail was in the enjoyment of a subsidy of $500,000 dollars per annum. Mr. Stockwell, one of its numerous retiring presidents, succeeded in getting a law authorizing $500,000 more, on condition that enough new first-class iron steamers should be placed on the line to do the mail service by the 1st of October, 1873. The company failed to get them on by that time, has not yet got them on, and has only two of them, the Tokio and City of Peking, even built. The Postmaster-General reported this failure to Congress in December, 1873. Congress thereupon made no appropriation for the subsidy, and the bill itself only escaped repeal because of the view, generally expressed, that the company's failure to comply with its terms made it null. Congress being out of the way, Attorney-General Williams was appealed to for one of his opinions. He conveniently decided that the failure of a year or two, more or less, made no difference. Postmaster-General Jewell, new to the duties of his office, and easily imposed on in matters of routine, has been induced to estimate for the extra $500,000 subsidy as if it had been earned; and General GARFIELD has promptly reported it to Congress in the postal appropriation bill.

We call upon every friend of honesty in the public service to watch this job, and to resist it from the outset. We are unwilling to believe that either Governor Jewell or General GARFIELD could have been aware of its nature; but after this exposure there can be no decent pretext for continuing the claim.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose that the editor of the New York Tribune desired to do an injustice either to the Committee on Appropriations or the chairman of that committee. It is clear that the editor was misled by some correspondent. That correspondent does not appear to have been the Washington correspondent, but some person writing in New York. The editor charges that a "half-million steal," characterized further down as a "robbery," has been introduced into the House by me, in the post-office appropriation bill, and it is intimated that the Committee on Appropriations met in the vacation, partially for the purpose of preparing this scheme and launching it thus early into the House.

Of course I need not say in the hearing of the House one word upon this subject. Every member of the House knows that the Committee on Appropriations has not yet reported the post-office appropriation bill to the House. I may add further that the Committee on Appropriations has not even taken the bill up for consideration. I may add further that for one I have not yet even looked through the estimates on that subject as submitted in the Book of Estimates. I may say further that the committees of the two Houses on appropriations were authorized by joint resolution to meet in the vacation for the purpose of preparing the appropriation bills, for one thing, and for the further purpose of inquiring whether something could not be done to retrench the expenses in the several Departments of the Government.

The committees met in joint session during the vacation, and their attention was called to two items of expenditure which they considered very large. One was the cost of collecting the revenues from customs. The other was the growing deficiency in the Post-Office Department. To find out the real facts in regard to both these items two sub-committees were appointed, consisting of three from each committee, making joint sub-committees of six members, one on the cost of collecting the revenues from customs, and the other on the expenses of the Post-Office Department. These joint sub-committees have been earnestly at work. The Committee on Appropriations of the House agreed that they would not take up or consider at all the estimates for the Post-Office Department until that sub-committee had reported. They therefore have not taken the subject up at all. A few days ago the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. TYNER,] who has charge of that post-office appropriation bill—as I never had in any Congress—requested the committee to decide that they would not take up the post-office appropriation bill until after the holiday vacation, in order to allow the sub-committee more time to go over the whole subject more thoroughly.

Now, with the statement of these facts, I must say that it is surprising that a great journal, basing its statements on what it calls "a thoroughly well-informed correspondent," should commence by charging at the head of its article "a half a million steal," and afterward by calling it "a robbery;" and intimating that the four weeks of hard work which was done by the Committee on Appropriations, for the sole purpose of making our work thorough and trenchant, was undertaken for a mercenary and dishonorable purpose. And more especially is it surprising when that journal two days before published the titles of all the appropriation bills which have been reported at this session, and the post-office appropriation bill was not of the number. I have no doubt the editor of the Tribune will be glad to make the correction; but I mention this to show with what facility and on what slight grounds men in public life are charged with unworthy motives and dishonorable conduct.

Mr. MAYNARD. Does the gentleman suppose that this is the first instance of the kind?

Mr. TYNER. Perhaps I have, to some extent, been the innocent cause of the charge made against the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] in the columns of the New York Tribune, and I beg the House to listen to me a moment only, while I explain all the connection that the Committee on Appropriations or I myself, as an individual member thereof, have had to do with this subject of the Pacific Mail Steamship subsidy.

Last year the Postmaster-General, in his annual report, notified the President and the country that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had failed to comply with the terms of its contract, in providing for the mail service between San Francisco and China and Japan iron steamships of the kind and capacity named in the contract. He therefore did not make a recommendation for the continuance of the additional subsidy of $500,000. Hence the Committee on Appropriations last year did not even take up and consider the subject of a subsidy to that company, but reported the post-office appropriation bill to this House precisely as it passed both Houses and became a law, without a word or figure on the subject of a subsidy.

This session the Postmaster-General, in his annual report, calls the attention of the President and of Congress to the fact that the question of the obligation of the Post-Office Department to pay this additional subsidy had been submitted to the Attorney-General of the United States, who had thereupon written out for that Department an opinion to the effect that the Post-Office Department was bound for this additional subsidy. Thereupon the Postmaster-General, in his estimates, submits this additional estimate of $500,000 for that subsidy.

On looking over the report of the Postmaster-General and his allusion to these facts, I deemed it my duty, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, to ascertain precisely what had been decided by the Attorney-General. Hence I called upon the superintendent of foreign mails in the Post-Office Department to furnish me with a copy of the opinion of the Attorney-General. That copy came to me in my morning mail one day during the present week; and, without even looking at a single line or word of it, because I had no time, I called the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that a copy of this opinion was in my hands, and suggested the propriety of asking an order from the House to print it as a matter of information to the committee and to the House. I was authorized by the committee to ask for such an order, which I did, and the order to print was made. That is the only step that has been taken by the committee in regard to this question of the Pacific Mail Steamship subsidy; and the only purpose I had in view—and I am sure the only object the committee had in view—was simply to get the opinion of the Attorney-General printed, in order that they might consider whether or not, in their judgment, it was binding either upon them or upon Congress.

And when the question of the appropriations for the Post-Office Department shall come up, I presume the opinion of the Attorney-General will be read, in connection with all other facts and all other matters of whatever character and description that may be brought before that committee pertaining to that bill. These are the facts of the case. The Committee on Appropriations have not acted upon the matter in any way whatever.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. SCOFIELD. On yesterday the House passed a resolution, at the instance of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] asking the Secretary of the Treasury to call upon the commissioners who were appointed to investigate the affairs of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for their report and to transmit it to this House. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky to consent that his resolution be so far modified as to direct the commissioners to furnish their report to this House, without resorting to this roundabout way of going to the Secretary of the Treasury for the report. I think the gentleman will make no objection.

Mr. BECK. The resolution as sent to me was in the form now indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD.] Thinking, however, that the House could only call upon the heads of the Executive Departments for such information as this, I inserted the words which the gentleman now proposes to strike out. If that language has led any one to think that I was disposed to hold the Secretary of the Treasury responsible in this matter, I want of course to relieve him of that imputation.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I think, if the resolution be left in that form, it might give rise to an impression that the Secretary is responsible.

Mr. BECK. The modification suggested can be made, if the gentleman knows that the report will in that case be sent to the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I judge that the resolution has already been transmitted.

Mr. SCOFIELD. No, sir; it has not.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be considered as modified in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

There being no objection, the resolution was accordingly modified.

ROLLIN WHITE.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of Rollin White.

Mr. CONGER. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Before I occupy any time in the argument on this question I wish to ask that some arrangement may be made for allowing more time for the discussion. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Patents has but an hour to give, and hence he is offering us five and ten minutes each. A number of us are very much interested in this question and desirous of being heard. It is utterly impossible for me to state even in my most rapid and condensed way the essential facts in this argument in ten minutes. Now I ask that an hour be given to each side.

Mr. POTTER. What is the limitation of time?

A MEMBER. The morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Unless a motion to go into Committee of the Whole should be interposed this business may run on until the adjournment.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Will the bill hold its place in the morning hour until disposed of?

The SPEAKER. It will hold its place from Friday to Friday until disposed of.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Then nothing is gained, I suppose, by cutting it off this morning at the end of an hour; but if it should occupy the whole of the morning hour next Friday it might prevent other committees from reporting. Therefore it may be best that the question should be allowed to occupy two hours to-day, as it would facilitate business on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour runs for the entire day unless interrupted by a privileged motion.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I suggest that we take an hour to-day and an hour next Friday. The bill is not before us in print—only in manuscript. It is a very important measure, involving interests to the amount of millions. If it should go over till next Friday we shall have a better opportunity then to know precisely what the bill is. Some amendments will be proposed, I think. If the bill goes over till next week it can be printed; and when the matter is finally voted upon the House will have had an opportunity to understand the question fully.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I wish to say that I think there will be no objection to giving an additional hour this morning; and if there be no objection I hope that arrangement will be made now. I ask unanimous consent that an hour be added to the present morning hour.

Mr. POTTER. That is, that the morning hour be extended until twenty minutes after two o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour will not come to an end till the adjournment to-day, unless there should be a motion to go into Committee of the Whole. The Chair will make a remark that will apply to every Friday during the session. There is no need ever of having unanimous consent in reference to a matter which a majority can control. If a majority of the House should desire to consider this bill to-day they can go on with it, because when the morning hour expires a motion to go into Committee of the Whole if voted down leaves the bill before the House.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I only made the suggestion to save time, so that when the morning hour expires we may not consume perhaps half an hour in deciding whether we shall continue the consideration of this bill or shall go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state his proposition?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. My proposition was that an hour should be added to the present morning hour to enable gentlemen to get through with this bill to-day, unless it should be disposed of sooner.

The SPEAKER. There has been a considerable portion of the time occupied by gentlemen upon other matters which have been interposed.

Mr. CONGER. The committee have had but fifteen minutes, the time occupied by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCRARY.]

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] will indicate by the clock the time to which he desires the morning hour extended, the Chair will submit the question. It had better be put in that form, as the time has become somewhat confused.

Mr. CONGER. If three o'clock be named that will allow an hour and three-quarters.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the vote being taken at half past two o'clock?

Mr. POTTER. Yes, sir; I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut will proceed. A great deal of time is lost in trying to get unanimous consent to that which a mere majority may control. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has yielded ten minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I wish I could be allowed a little more time.

Mr. CONGER. It is impossible for me to divide the time in any other manner.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCRARY] says that a new hearing is all that is proposed and all that is asked by this bill. In that he is very much mistaken, as I could show in thirty minutes and will try to show in ten. That is but a small part of what is asked. In the first place, this patent, in its origin, was of extremely doubtful propriety and validity. It was in existence for fourteen years, levying a heavy taxation upon all the arms manufactured in the country. It expired five years ago last April, and has not been in force from that time until this.

It went through this House once with no debate whatever; it slipped through the Senate with scarcely any debate; it was vetoed by the President; and it was then immediately attempted to push it through over the veto. When it came to the House it was defeated by a vote of 168 to 12. There was an appeal taken to the Supreme Court of the United States from a decision in favor of its validity, and the case was twice argued there. Twice the court was equally divided, leaving the decision to stand; showing there were in the minds of that court very serious doubts of its propriety.

The gentleman says the case was imperfectly, if not improperly, heard before the Commissioner. It is true Mr. Keller, who is said to have been chief counsel for Mr. White, was ill at the time of the hearing; but it is of record that Mr. Harding of Philadelphia, Mr. Stoughton of Washington, and Mr. J. J. Coombs of Washington, some of the ablest counsel in the country, conducted the hearing; and they and White argued the case, as the Commissioner says, with ability. The gentleman states that the evidence was not all in. Commissioner Foote says, in his letter of January 17, 1870:

> I was not aware that Mr. White had failed to obtain all the testimony he desired. I do not now recollect that any complaint was made in that respect. The time the application was pending, about two and a half years, would seem to have been sufficient to probate all needful evidence.
> At the hearing it was stated by Mr. White that a part of his models, intended to illustrate his inventions, had been lost or stolen, and it appeared to be to him a source of much regret and disappointment. I do not think, however, that I had any difficulty in fully comprehending his inventions and other devices referred to without them, from the papers and models in the Patent Office. * * *
> In view of the facts detailed I do not think that more arguments or more illustrations, or, indeed, more testimony, would have altered the conclusions at which I arrived or the decision which I made.

The gentleman says certain models and some evidence in the case were lost. By whom lost—through whose fault? Who took them away? As likely to be one side as the other in an application for extension like the one now pending. But in fact nobody appeared against the patent in that last hearing. Nothing appears here to show how the evidence disappeared, but the Commissioner says the loss was not material.

Mr. Speaker, I have one question to raise with the committee or somebody in this case, and I might as well raise it now as at any time. I assert that this bill has never been printed. Can any member of the committee deny it? It is not even in the private pamphlet which the advocates of this measure are circulating about the House. It may be supposed that the bill is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 23, with the report of the committee, as it purports to be. It is not there. It is nowhere in full, every word of it, except in the manuscript copy upon the Clerk's desk, which perhaps nobody but myself has read and compared with the pretended copy in the RECORD.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. Here is a copy of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. It is not a perfect copy of the bill, for the most important two lines are left out in that privately printed copy. They are left out in the RECORD. I have compared the original manuscript bill on the Clerk's desk, and it reads as follows:

> And provided also, That in case said extensions shall be granted, any person, firm, or corporation that, since the expiration of said patents and prior to the passage of this act, shall have constructed machinery for the manufacture of the inventions described in said patents, or have engaged in the manufacture of said inventions using machinery previously constructed therefor, shall have the right to apply for and be entitled to receive a license from said Rollin White to manufacture and sell the fire-arms described in said patents for and during the extended term thereof, upon reasonable conditions as to security for payment of the royalty hereinafter mentioned [and prescribed uniform quality of arms manufactured] and as to making report on oath of manufacture and sales, and upon payment of a royalty to said Rollin White of fifty cents, in quarter-yearly payments, upon each and every fire-arm so manufactured and sold.

The words "and prescribed uniform quality of arms manufactured" are omitted from the bill as printed in the RECORD and in the copies circulated by the petitioner. I cannot stop, of course, to explain and tell you why there are perhaps no lines in the whole bill more important than the two lines thus omitted. If the bill should pass as in the manuscript every manufacturer might find himself entrapped. The patentee would have power to establish a model to which every licensed manufacturer would be obliged to conform, and all the great arms manufactories would be at his absolute mercy. I do not say the committee intended this. Of course they did not; they have never even observed this, but somebody made the most extraordinary accidental omission which I have known in some years.

The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCRARY,] who believes every word he says, has stated that this is nothing but a petition and bill for a rehearing. Now let us see what else there is in it. Recall the proviso I have just read.

The committee put in a proviso by which White may prevent every manufacturer in the country from touching breech-loading pistols except such manufacturers as may have during the last five years made some machinery and engaged in the manufacture under the supposition that the patent has expired. Pass this bill, and should the Commissioner renew the patent a new manufacturer might fill his rooms with new machinery under the reasonable supposition that he could manufacture upon paying fifty cents royalty, but he might further find that White would grant him no permission whatever to make a single pistol, he not having made any machinery or pistols during the last five years!

Moreover, this will give to White, if he licenses anybody to make pistols, the power to prescribe the quality and kind, the object being to prevent the great manufacturers of the country from keeping and selling cheaper pistols, as they are abundantly able to do, many valuable patents having expired and they having on hand extensive and valuable machinery. All the great establishments, having no private bargain with White made before the renewal, can be absolutely governed by him. Now the manufacturers of fire-arms in this country are able to compete with all foreign makers if you let them alone. There was a heavy tax in favor of this invention for fourteen years. Our makers are now free. The manufacturers abroad are under no restriction in regard to the use of the patent. The substance of the invention is putting the metal cartridge in at the rear of the chambers, which are bored completely through for that purpose. Every foreign manufacturer can make pistols of that kind without tax. The bill proposes to put a practical prohibition on their bringing in pistols to compete with ours, (no free-trader can vote for that,) and you put on every American manufacturer a duty of fifty cents on each pistol, which he has got to pay to White or his backers before he can send pistols abroad to compete in foreign markets. Our manufacturers are sending their pistols all over the world. But you are to put a charge of fifty cents on each pistol, which will weigh them down as against foreign makers. You shut up against them all the markets of the world, confining them to this country alone, and in this country you confine the manufacture to such men as Rollin White may license at the rate of fifty cents for each pistol, and to just such pistols as he may prescribe to each! He has undoubtedly private contracts with some favored friends at the rate of ten and twenty cents.

And that brings me to another issue with the committee. I charge that the opponents of this measure offered to prove before the committee that private bargains existed between Rollin White and certain manufacturers, which gave them special privileges, to the detriment of all the rest of the world. They are responsible men, who were ready to prove that fact, and stand ready to prove it to-day.

General W. B. Franklin, who presented a brief as representative of the Colt Arms Company, wrote to the committee:

> HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT, April 18, 1874.
> DEAR SIR: I learned only this afternoon that the case of Rollin White, applicant for extension, has been referred to one member of the sub-committee to examine and report to the sub-committee, which report may be made next Wednesday; and that the hearing is adjudged by the committee to be closed. On behalf of the Colts' Patent Fire-Arms Manufacturing Company I beg leave to remonstrate against the committee coming to any decision in this matter in the present condition of the evidence before them.
> Mr. White, in his reply to our argument, asserts indirectly that he has no private agreement now existing with particular licensees by which they shall be practically secured a monopoly of the manufacture of the arms if the patent is extended; and he would not make this assertion if he did not suppose it to be important that the committee should so believe. But we are in possession of information which leaves no doubt in our mind that this assertion is not true, but that, on the contrary, there is an agreement recently made between White and D. B. Wesson, of Springfield, Massachusetts, and now in force, of that very kind which White indirectly asserts does not exist, and which, if exposed to the committee, would materially affect their judgment as to reporting the proposed bill. We therefore respectfully urge upon the committee that before any report is made or any sub-report received White be required to satisfy the committee by his oath and that of Mr. Wesson that no such contract exists, and that a day be appointed for their examination in this behalf, not earlier than the 28th instant, so that we may have opportunity to attend and cross-examine. We are convinced that there is danger of a fraud being practiced upon the committee, and earnestly urge upon you to see that the above means be taken to frustrate it.

Your obedient servant,

W. B. FRANKLIN,
Vice-President and General Agent.

Hon. B. T. EAMES,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

To which the committee responded:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1874.

SIR: Your letter to the Hon. B. T. EAMES was submitted by him to the committee this morning. I am directed by them to reply that there seems no occasion for the examination by the committee of either White or Wesson. The committee has pleasure in assuring you that they will use due care to see that no fraud is practiced upon them.

Respectfully,

T. J. SEAVER, Clerk.

General W. B. FRANKLIN.

The committee promised to "use due care to see that no fraud was practiced," but there is no provision against this practical fraud in the bill. There is nothing in it that will tend to secure the public against secret contracts at a low royalty or none at all, certain manufacturers being favored and others practically forbidden to work by reason of a fifty-cent royalty and a prescribed standard. I now here charge that such secret contracts exist, and I can have the charge sustained, as the remonstrants offered to sustain it before the committee. Everybody knows who D. B. Wesson is, of the firm of Smith & Wesson, arms manufacturers. He says in a letter of April 2, 1874, to certain counsel:

I think you should advise the Colt Company to require all the facts in the case to be stated by White under oath; and if the whole truth cannot be obtained in this way, to summon those who can and will state the whole truth. For my part I do not believe in attempting to obtain the passage of an act of Congress or the extension of a patent by fraud or deception.

Yours, truly,

D. B. WESSON.

And Mr. Wesson is the man who has had hitherto the most benefit from that patent, and he is one of the men who have to-day a private contract contingent upon the renewal of the patent. He very honorably urged that Congress should not be imposed upon by fraud. I charge that the committee has not heard evidence and has refused to hear evidence upon the point that private contracts exist for the benefit of certain manufacturers to the absolute mastery over other manufacturers, while White and his counsel were indirectly denying such contracts, but the printed argument shows very carefully not positively denying, and that the committee, promising to exercise due care against them, has not put a word in the bill upon the subject!

I have here memoranda of the various contracts that had been made about the time of the expiration of the patent and after the time of the expiration of the patent with various parties; but I cannot dwell upon them.

Now, in compressing my remarks into ten minutes, the chairman of the committee has made it impossible for me to state various interesting facts in relation to this matter which I wished to place before the House. I have here a copy of a letter of Schuyler, Hartley & Graham, very large dealers, who know as much about this matter as any persons in the country. From a careful estimate they have made they say there have been manufactured and sold in this country, in the year preceding this letter of May 26, 1874, no less than 255,000 pistols liable to royalty under this patent, and they give the estimate in detail.

The committee wish to put a tax upon these manufacturers of fifty cents a pistol, when they are willing to make a pistol for from two to four or five dollars and upward, and that for the benefit of a man who has already received, as the Commissioner of Patents wrote, $70,000 above his expenditures. The Commissioner says White's aggregate receipts were $93,899; from which deduct $22,457 for expenses, leaving $71,442 as White's reward. White claimed to have spent in litigation the additional sum of $38,321. But Smith & Wesson, who did nearly all the work under the patent, say they have paid that, and it has never been repaid to them. It is not to be deducted from the money received by White.

I have already shown that this is a tax on American manufactures at the very time when we are desiring to increase our exports and to diminish our imports. We have better machinery; we export machinery to enable foreigners to make arms, and then we can make pistols here so as to compete with them in their own countries, though they may have our machinery. And you are asked to add a duty of fifty cents on every pistol made here and sent abroad—a duty directly for the benefit of foreigners in foreign markets. That is the bill of equity which the committee have brought in. The primary and public purpose of the patent law is not to enrich the individual, but to stimulate industry for the benefit of the whole country. We say to a citizen, "Devise some valuable invention and we will give you a special right to it for a number of years, and you may make money out of it, and we will then give it to the world free for the general benefit"——

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I beg pardon of those who thoroughly understand the gross injustice of this bill for having so imperfectly presented the merits of the case in the brief time which has been allowed me.

Mr. CONGER. I had not proposed at this time, and do not now propose, to say anything upon the merits of this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I think not.

Mr. CONGER. And I think not. But I propose to comment a little upon the peculiar manner in which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has left out of consideration entirely the merits of this bill in order to make an assault upon the Committee on Patents of this House, and in advance to prejudice the members of this House against that committee. If the gentleman had paid attention to the records of this House, if he had read the printed report of this committee which for months has been upon the tables of members, he would not have made such charges as he has now rashly and foolishly made here against the committee on the representations of interested parties who have never been before the committee, but who state that they sought to be there and were refused.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Let me correct that statement.

Mr. CONGER. I cannot have it taken out of my time now. The gentleman has had his say.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. You are misstating me, or stating what is not the fact.

Mr. CONGER. On the 23d of May last there was printed in the RECORD the report of the Committee on Patents, full and complete. The gentleman might well have attended to the reading of the records of Congress. The bill is printed in that.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. No, sir.

Mr. CONGER. The bill was printed in this report on the 23d of May last. And in the report of the committee they say that they report the bill with an amendment, and that amendment is printed in the report. What is the amendment about which the gentleman has made such sweeping assertions? If he had devoted his time more to the reading of the records of this House, and among them the report of the Committee on Patents, he would not have placed himself in the unpleasant predicament of causelessly attacking his fellow-members here before the House and the country. I commend to the gentleman from Connecticut further diligence in reading the reports of the committees of this House.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Now the gentleman must permit me to say——

Mr. CONGER. Let the gentleman wait with patience until I have done. The committee say:

The arguments presented to us have had reference to the bill before recited as thus amended.

How amended? It is an amendment relative to the quality of the fire-arms, and is the only difference in the bill subsequently reported to the House. What did the committee say on the 23d of May last in their report which the gentleman might have read if he chose?

The committee are of opinion that the bill as submitted with the proposed amendment is a proper one for the favorable consideration of Congress, as it seems to guard all the interests affected, whether of the United States or of manufacturers in this country who have in good faith embarked their capital in the manufacture of these particular fire-arms.

Now mark, Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of this House, what is said in regard to the provision which the gentleman has attacked:

The provision as to the quality of the arms seems essential in order that all the manufacturers who may take licenses of Rollin White, should his patent be extended by the Commissioner of Patents, may share equally in the protection of the patents, and be free from an injurious competition upon the part of those who might, in order to get control of the market, fill it up with cheap, inferior pistols, more dangerous to the user than to anybody else.

Now, that is the report of this committee, spread upon the records of this House, which the gentleman has declared to be secret, and has styled to be clandestine.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. If the gentleman——

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CONGER. One at a time, gentlemen. You are both from Connecticut, and both I believe represent the same fire-arms manufacturing company.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] whether the bill in the printed form circulated among members is the same as the bill on the table?

Mr. CONGER. It is, with the exception of the amendment to which the committee refer and with regard to which I have read.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I heard the bill read, and it is my impression that it is not the same.

Mr. CONGER. It can be read again if necessary and a comparison made. I speak only from my memory of the bill and of the report of the committee.

I had not intended to take any part in this discussion, but merely to "farm out" my time to those who, like the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and others, having constituents interested in different manufactories of fire-arms, wish to oppose this bill, and also to those who might wish to advocate the claims of Rollin White, who comes here with the unanimous report of the Committee on Patents in his favor—a committee whose reputation before this House during the last session, I venture to say, has not been that of a committee desirous to press upon the House or the country any patent or any extension contrary to the public interest. We have sought carefully to guard the public interest in every case, and have had heretofore the sanction of the House for every report we have made. I merely rose to rebuke in my feeble way the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] in charging this committee with any clandestine attempt to impose upon the House, when their report is printed not only in the form now before members, but printed in the RECORD of the 23d of last May.

In regard to the hearing before the committee, I wish to say that they never refused in this or any other case a full, absolute, and perfect hearing of all those in favor of a proposed measure and all those opposed to it. Not a member of this committee is connected either with patentees or inventors or manufacturing companies. We never have declined to hear evidence. On the contrary, we have frequently, in this case as in several others, reopened questions for a hearing time and again. I say this to the honor of my associates on the committee. They have devoted their time to the hearing of these important cases with a diligence, a patience, a perseverance, that I have never witnessed on any other committee with which I have been associated in this House. Therefore I deny the allegation, whether it comes from the gentleman from Connecticut or whoever else it may come from, that there has been anything secret, anything clandestine, anything wrong, in the action of the committee in this or in any other case. Unrebuked by me, there shall not come from representatives of these vast manufacturing companies, either through letters to their friends in this House or otherwise, any imputation that there has been clandestine action on the part of the committee.

I want to say further, that in this very record the committee say that they gave notice to the manufacturing companies and their attorneys in regard to these matters, including this very question of the quality of arms, to appear before the committee and be heard. Besides that, the brief of the company in whose interest the gentleman from Connecticut speaks recites the very language of this amendment. That brief, which was presented to our committee, contains this language:

> The proposed bill does not even give the trade, if the extension is granted, the equal rights which it seems to give. In the first place the amendment, which consists in inserting the words "and prescribed quality of arms manufactured," in line forty-two, is cunningly contrived to undo what the rest of the last proviso does.

Now that is their brief before our committee. Yet the gentleman from Connecticut tells this House that we smuggled this proviso in without his friends knowing anything about it.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. The gentleman ought certainly to allow me to correct a misapprehension under which he is laboring. I have said that that proviso is in the bill, in the manuscript bill, but not in the printed form in the RECORD, or in the pamphlet which the friends of this bill have distributed. Of course that provision will pass if the bill should pass.

Mr. CONGER. Of course that language is in the manuscript bill; of course it is in the bill we have reported. But what did the gentleman from Connecticut say, if I remember his words aright? He assured the House that this provision was clandestinely inserted in the bill without the knowledge of the gentlemen whom he represents.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. O, no.

Mr. CONGER. Yet in their printed brief, presented on the 6th of April last (our report being made on the 22d of May, and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 23,) the manufacturing company that the gentleman represents recites the language of this amendment as I have read it here.

Now, I ask the gentleman from Connecticut and other gentlemen, in arguing this case before the House, not to tread too closely upon the action of a committee whose action they so totally misunderstand, and not to impugn the motives of our committee, when the printed record shows that they have been fair and open in every transaction connected with this matter.

Now, sir, I do not propose to speak upon the merits of this case. The report of the committee, together with the remarks of other gentlemen who will speak, will, in my judgment, be a sufficient answer to these four or five or six gentlemen in whose districts are these great manufacturing companies that have so long pressed this poor cripple, Rollin White, to the earth, and prevented his getting any benefit from an invention from the use of which they have received thousands and hundreds of thousands—I do not know that I would go too far in saying millions—of dollars of profit, and who desire still to do so.

Mr. McCRARY. Is not the provision to which attention has been called inserted for the benefit and protection of the manufacturers? If the bill should be passed without such a condition, would it not allow the patentee to fix his own terms?

Mr. CONGER. That is the manner in which the committee viewed the matter. They required Mr. White to accept, whether he wished to or not, that provision, because it is for the public interest as they understand, though it may be against Mr. White's interest. It is the interest of the country that, whoever may manufacture arms, they should be of good quality, and not, in the language of the report, more dangerous to the user than to the object against which they are directed. I yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. PARKER.]

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, as one of the members of the Committee on Patents it is proper I should say a word in regard to the question now before the House. It is important that we understand clearly what is the question now pending, and not confuse it with anything foreign to the subject. It is not a question of the extension of the patent of Rollin White, as is assumed by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.] We do not ask the House to pass an arbitrary law extending the patent of Rollin White, but we simply ask that this House will give Rollin White a day in court; that it will place him where the law placed him in 1869. That is all. Under the law existing at that time Rollin White had the right, as every other patentee had, whose patent had expired, to appear before the Commissioner of Patents, and there prosecute his application for an extension after the same had run fourteen years. He did so; but was deprived of a fair and full hearing by reason and on account of the sickness and inability of his counsel to be present. To show this fact, I ask to have read at the Clerk's desk the following letter from his counsel, which shows the embarrassment under which Mr. White labored at that time, and which is sufficient to convince any reasonable man that he ought to have another hearing before the Commissioner of Patents.

NEW YORK, January 26, 1872.

SIR: It was in consequence of severe illness that I was prevented from prosecuting Mr. White's application for extension before Mr. Foote, then Commissioner of Patents. At a late day in the proceedings Mr. Harding took charge of the preparation and management of the applications, and that was at so late a day that it was impossible for him to develop all the evidence necessary to a full understanding of the merits of all the applications. I know that the exhibits, which were stolen when it was too late to replace them, were essential to enable any person, except one determined to defeat the application, or under the influence which caused the theft, to reach a just and satisfactory opinion on the propriety of extending some of the patents in question.

But imperfect as the evidence was as to some of the patents, it was, in my judgment, sufficient to justify the extension of one of the patents, for that had successfully passed through the severest of legal tests in the first and second circuits and in the Supreme Court.

There is no doubt that White's invention, known in the market as the Smith & Wesson pistol, is superior to all others. The inventor, who was entitled to a large reward, will be left in poverty unless his patents can be extended. I know the merits of his invention and the hardships to which the inventor has been subject, having been his counsel in the complicated, protracted, and expensive litigations which resulted in sustaining the legality of his patents, just in time to see all of his hopes blasted by rejection of an extended term of his patents.

Respectfully, yours,

C. M. KELLER.

To the CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. Now, it can be seen Rollin White has not had a fair, candid, and impartial hearing in regard to this matter. It is only proposed by this committee to place him where the law placed him in 1869, so that he may be permitted to go again before the Commissioner of Patents and be heard. Then the constituents of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] can appear before the Commissioner and be heard if they have any rights to protect; or if there are any merits in their defense they can then present them to the Commissioner. That is the tribunal, the proper tribunal, to try this controversy. During the life of this patent only about $10,000 was realized above the expenses for this most valuable invention; while on the other hand these parties opposing have realized a very large amount.

We do not come here, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, asking you to pass upon the merits involved in this extension, but simply—and I ask the House to understand it—that this man may go before the proper tribunal and there try the merits of his case, everybody having notice, everybody appearing, everybody being heard then and there. Gentlemen, is this a fair proposition, is this a reasonable proposition? Such as ought to commend itself to the minds of candid men? Is there anything unreasonable in this request? Is there any injustice here? It seems to me to be the plainest principle of equity.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] is very apprehensive that injustice is going to be done. Ah! gentlemen, I fear that, like the Irishman, his constituents are apprehensive that justice will be done; and that is what troubles them and what they most fear.

The gentleman from Connecticut says that Rollin White has been here five years asking this action. It is true; and the reason why he has been kept here for five years is because he has been opposed by this gigantic monopoly from Hartford, Connecticut, the Colt Arms Manufacturing Company, backed by millions and millions of money—one of the most gigantic corporations and monopolies in this country, and one they ask to have perpetuated. They are the parties who have opposed this poor, lame man, who has been kept here at expense these long years. These are the men who have said to Rollin White, after they have been rolling in wealth, "You shall not have a day in court. You shall not be heard." We simply ask this House to give him the privilege of being heard; that is all there is of this case.

Mr. CONGER. I yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to yield to me for a longer period than five minutes—say ten minutes.

Mr. CONGER. I cannot yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. If I am to have only five minutes, then I hope I will have the attention of the House for that length of time, and will be brief as possible in doing justice to this bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no charge to make against my friend from Iowa, [Mr. McCRARY.] I listened with interest to what he had to say, for I know he is sincere and means to do what is right in the case. I have no charge to make against the Committee on Patents or any member of it, and concede they have acted fairly in all respects. But, sir, I say that there is no man who is familiar with the history of this application for a patent during the last six years but will say, if there is not deception in this House, there is and has been deception with outside parties, who have been seeking to impose upon this House by inducing it to grant this extension. Shakespeare tells us time was, "when the brains were out, the man would die;" but there seems to be something about this Rollin White concern, no matter how often it has been killed, which enables it to spring up again into new life at every session. The patent had already existed fourteen years for this patentee and for Smith & Wesson's pistols; and the patent for one year on those pistols during the war was worth ten or twelve ordinary years. Indeed, it has really had an equivalent for thirty or forty years of profitable existence for this patentee and for Smith & Wesson, at least, who have made the most money out of the patent, as is said; but the patentee made ten times its real worth.

The patentee came to the Commissioner of Patents before 1869, with five or six parties opposing him, asking for an extension of the patent. He got rid of one after another of his opponents, and finally, when other parties had one of their number there as they supposed, opposed to it, he bought him off at the last hearing or arranged in some way to get rid of him, as the letter of Mr. Foote, the Commissioner of Patents, shows; and they had not a particle of evidence before the Commissioner against the patent extension, at the final hearing; and then even the Commissioner would not extend his patent when he had bought off his last opponent, because he had no real ground for an extension. And Mr. Foote, the Commissioner of Patents himself, as appears in this report in the Congressional Globe of the Forty-first Congress, says that he had a perfect understanding of the whole case. The absent models did not make any difference in the cause.

My friend from New Hampshire [Mr. PARKER] has quoted a letter from White's lawyer to show that he did not have a fair hearing on account of the loss of some models, and triumphantly asks if that is not full proof he did not have a fair hearing. The assertion of his own lawyer when he lost his case! I put against that the statement of the tribunal before whom it was heard, that of the Commissioner of Patents, who could have no interest in it. There it is. I have no time to read it, but will make it part of my remarks:

NATIONAL HOTEL,
Washington, January 17, 1870.

DEAR SIR: For the purpose of answering the inquiries in your letter of the 14th instant I have re-examined the papers on file in the Patent Office to refresh my recollection.

On the hearing of Mr. Rollin White's application for an extension of his patent Mr. Harding, of Philadelphia, and Mr. Stoughton, of this place, appeared as his counsel. Mr. White spoke in his own behalf, and Mr. Harding was heard two or three times; and to those acquainted with that gentleman I need not say that the cause was argued with much ability. It was stated that Mr. Keller, of New York, who had acted as counsel for Mr. White in suits upon his patent and in taking testimony to be used on his application, was absent on account of sickness.

Several persons (perhaps they could not properly be called "counsel") seemed to be much interested in Mr. White's behalf, and strongly pressed the granting of the extension.

Soon after Mr. White's application was made (in 1866) objections to the extension were filed in the Patent Office by several persons, and testimony in support of them was taken. Afterward the opposition of some was formally withdrawn, and at the hearing no one appeared to oppose the extension.

I was not aware that Mr. White had failed to obtain all the testimony he desired. I do not recollect that any complaint was made in that respect. The time the application was pending, about two and a half years, would seem to have been sufficient to probate all needful evidence.

At the hearing it was stated by Mr. White that a part of his models, intended to illustrate his inventions, had been lost or stolen, and it appeared to be to him a source of much regret and disappointment. I do not think, however, that I had any difficulty in fully comprehending his inventions and other devices referred to without them, from the papers and models in the Patent Office.

* * * * * * *

Very respectfully, yours,

ELISHA FOOTE.

There is the statement of the Commissioner himself. He did not think he was entitled to have a patent. Then this Mr. White came to Congress in the short session at the opening of the Forty-first Congress, and when little business was done; and long after the hour of midnight, when members were asleep on the benches, and without any hearing before the Committee on Patents by any other parties interested, that bill was put through. That bill was vetoed. It came up again in the long session of the Forty-first Congress, and there was a full discussion on its merits; and after that discussion this House voted by yeas and nays—12 for an extension and 168 against. And my good, honest friend from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] was one of the 12. He believed in the case honestly then, as he does now. But the House, with a full understanding of the facts, voted it down, ten to one. The case has been coming here again ever since.

Early in the last Congress it was brought before the Committee on Patents, of which I was then a member. I will not say what took place in the committee, but I will say what took place outside the committee, and what did not take place in a session of the committee. This same man, White, came and asked us to give the patent to a Mr. Hubbell, of Philadelphia, when he found he could not get it himself, thus admitting that he was not the first inventor. It was shown to our committee that this Mr. Hubbell was the prior inventor of the two, though it was an old invention. He made an arrangement with Hubbell by which he could have his share, and he wanted that a bill should be passed for Hubbell's benefit and they could divide. And finally a report was got in on the last night of the session of last Congress, without its having been ever read to the committee, as far as I know, or at least I have never known of it; and when I went to my friend who reported it and asked him what he meant, he said it was simply reported that it might get on the record and that no action was expected. None was had that Congress. Now, that same report comes up here word for word verbatim et literatim, as having been adopted by the Committee on Patents of the Forty-third Congress.

This patent went to the Supreme Court, as my colleague has stated, and this applicant was not able to sustain his case there except by a divided decision. It had its full term of fourteen years, four of which were years of war, with ten or a hundred fold more pistols sold than in any other year; and this patentee, having had a full hearing before the Commissioner in 1869, the Commissioner himself saying that he had a full and fair hearing, and the last opponent having been bought off and the Commissioner having then refused to give him an extension of the patent, now asks for a renewal of it. He asks us to do what a tribunal established for this very purpose by your laws and under the Constitution has refused to do.

Mr. CONGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CONGER. According to the memorandum of the time I have yielded to various gentlemen, I have had only forty-five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has reckoned this hour very liberally at an hour and ten minutes; but he will not himself oppose any objection to the extension of the gentleman's time. What time does the gentleman from New York propose to occupy?

Mr. HALE, of New York. Five minutes.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to have fifteen minutes more of this hour.

Mr. POTTER. How much time has the gentleman from Michigan remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan claims that he has fifteen minutes of his hour remaining; and it is not the habit of the Chair to doubt the word of any gentleman who makes a conscientious statement.

Mr. POTTER. I only supposed his hour would expire some time.

Mr. CONGER. I will give the gentleman from New York whatever time he requires.

Mr. POTTER. Very well.

Mr. HALE, of New York. This bill is not a bill for the extension of a patent. It is a bill to give to a claimant a day in court on his application for an extension of his patent under general laws. The report of the Committee on Patents and the statement which has been so fully and succinctly made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] this morning establish the fact that by fraud this man has been prevented from a fair hearing of his case before the constituted tribunal. It is said by those who oppose this bill that years have elapsed since this patent expired and means have been invested in this manufacture, and that it would be hard on those who had made large investments, on the fact that the patent had expired, that it should now be renewed. There would be force in the argument if it were not for a few other things to be borne in mind, the first being the proposition which I have already made and which is so fully sustained by all the evidence in the case, that it was by the fraud of the men who now oppose this bill, the men interested in the opposition to it, that this man was prevented from having a hearing.

When so prevented, this claimant did not lie idle for five years. He does not come here for the first time. He presented his case to Congress at once. The two Houses passed a bill five years ago for his relief. That bill was vetoed by a veto which must be fresh in the recollection of many gentlemen in this House, and which certainly struck everybody as a surprise as regards the matter of form. From that day to this, the particular objection on which the veto message was based having been immediately obviated, this claim has been before Congress in one form or other, and I challenge contradiction when I say that it has been fought by these great and rich manufacturing companies—fought by every means within their power, lawful and unlawful, honorable and dishonorable, honest and corrupt.

I say, and I make the assertion upon my own responsibility, that corrupt expenditures of money have been made by the parties opposing the passage of this bill, to an extent that should have the thorough investigation of this House, and when the facts appear should be met with due and proper punishment.

The merits of this patent are not now in discussion here. This proposition is simply to send it to the tribunal which has the right to determine upon it. I know something of this man. I knew him when a boy. I know him now to be an honorable, upright, laborious, worthy man. I believe that the opposition which has been instigated against him comes from these great companies that substantially monopolize the manufacture of fire-arms in this country, and that they have pressed this opposition most unscrupulously. It is a new position for me to advocate the extension of a patent. I have almost if not quite uniformly been found opposing these applications. I have been found in opposition to my friends from Connecticut, who are now opposing this bill, when they were pressing matters in the interest of these great corporations, and I was fighting for the rights of the people. Our positions are now reversed. The corporations are here fighting this bill, and a worthy and poor inventor is met by their opposition. I trust the House will pass this bill and give this man the relief he asks.

Mr. DAWES. I am not like the gentleman from New York who has just taken his seat, [Mr. HALE.] I am in no other attitude than that which I have always occupied in this House—one of opposition to extension of patents. I do not know that I should press myself upon the consideration of this House at this time but for the remark of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that a constituent of mine holds a secret arrangement with this patentee, by which, if the patent is extended, he will have the benefit of it without the payment of a royalty. I wish to say that I am in this House in the interest of no manufacturer of fire-arms. If I have a constituent who has made such an arrangement as that, while I may know him personally to be an honest and honorable man, one who will make no dishonorable arrangement, he cannot get me to represent him here in putting any provision in a law which will give binding force to such a contract. I do not believe he has made any such arrangement. If he has, I hope no legislation of this House will give a sanction to any such contract as that. I am always opposed to the extension of patents.

I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] will not forget the statement he has just made here, and which he says he makes upon his own responsibility, that corrupt measures have been resorted to in opposition to this bill. After having made that statement, he cannot omit to call upon the House to investigate such a charge as that.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Allow me to say that I do not refer to the present Congress. I take the full responsibility of what I said, here and elsewhere.

Mr. DAWES. Of course my friend from New York will do that; I only suggested that he should not forget it.

There are two or three points in this case to which I desire to call the attention of the House. First, this clause in the amendment, although it is worded to carry the idea that the object of it is to keep up the quality of the arms, it seems to me is so worded that Rollin White will have it in his power to make the form of the arm a part of his description, and if so, it puts every manufacturer in the country in his power. I do not object to his requiring quality to be kept up without respect to form, but if he can prescribe the form and measure and dimensions of the arm, he will have power to stop the manufacture of arms is this country by everybody who has not his license.

Another thing: There is no regard paid here in this bill to that condition of things which exists all over this country, and which will affect the manufacture of arms; that is, that while this patent has been four or five years open to the public, in the competition of the manufacture of arms throughout the country, contracts have been made for the future for years in advance, on the supposition that this invention was free to all. If this bill passes this patentee will come down upon these men and compel the payment by them of fifty cents for each pistol which may be made under the contracts which in the sharp competition of free manufacture have been made for the future delivery of arms.

Then there is another thing. In order to escape the objection of the veto and in order to escape the opposition elsewhere, it is provided that the Government of the United States may manufacture these arms without paying him his royalty. Now, the fact is that the Government has gone into the manufacture of fire-arms, for sale, not only in this country but to foreign countries; and, being protected by the laws of nations, they supply arms to nations at war. And yet the private manufacturers in this country will be put to the disadvantage of that particular provision of the bill by being required to pay fifty cents royalty in competition with the United States Government, who will manufacture without the payment of royalty.

One word more about this fifty-cent royalty. I understand it to be based upon the estimate that there are manufactured every year in this country three hundred thousand of these arms. That will give a royalty to this man of $150,000 a year. If this bill passes at all, it seems to me the royalty should be reduced to not exceeding twenty-five cents.

I wish further to say that the foundation of the patent of Rollin White—his whole claim here—is for an invention so constructed that it was not a particle of use to anybody at all until other people's improvements made it a safe, useful, and desirable arm. He, being at the bottom, can now avail himself of all other people's improvements, without which he was never able to put an arm upon the market.

Now, one word about the allusion which has been made to my watching this matter in a previous Congress. Without any interest in it myself, I was requested by a colleague of mine on the last night of the session (he being obliged to leave here in the nine-o'clock train) to watch this measure and oppose it in his behalf, because some of his constituents had been promised a hearing and had failed to get it.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to have a minute or two more.

Mr. CONGER. I have but five minutes more. If the House will extend the time ten minutes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] can occupy a few moments more, and my friend from New York [Mr. MERRIAM] can occupy five minutes, at the end of which time I shall call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to that arrangement.

Mr. CONGER. Then I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. As I was saying, a colleague of mine, for the reason that his constituents had been denied a hearing, requested me on the last night of a former session to watch and oppose this bill. I did watch it all night long here, with the full knowledge of the men then having it in charge. But just before noon on the last day of the session, when according to custom it was my duty to move for a committee to wait upon the President and inform him that Congress had concluded its business, I went to the President's room for that purpose; and before I got to the Rotunda this bill was called up and passed. It did not, however, reach the President till after twelve o'clock, and therefore it went over to the next session, when it was vetoed.

Mr. CONGER. I wish the gentleman had been able to be on hand, and then probably the President would not have vetoed the bill. I now yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MERRIAM.]

Mr. MERRIAM. Mr. Speaker, before entering upon the discussion of this question I wish to call the attention of my colleague [Mr. HALE, of New York] to one statement he has made that might be construed as reflecting on gentlemen who deservedly rank among the purest men in this country, the Messrs. Remington, of Ilion, New York, whom I have the pleasure to know personally. I ask my colleague whether, in his allusion to fraud and dishonesty, he intended to embrace those gentlemen?

Mr. HALE, of New York. O, no; not in the slightest degree. I had not thought of the Remingtons.

Mr. MERRIAM. That is all I have to say on that point.

Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that this question is to come before the Representatives of the American people to-day for final action. There is a principle involved in it that reaches beyond the individual interest of Mr. Rollin White, which should now be settled forever. No such monstrous proposition has been presented to Congress since my experience here, if ever before.

To resurrect and give life to a patent five years dead would be to strike a blow at the material interests of mechanical industry in this country from which it could not recover in our day and generation.

The principle involved in this proposition strikes at the very heart of our industries. It reaches so far, and involves such vast interests, that I rejoice that each Representative of the American people will have an opportunity to make his record, that will hold him to full responsibility. Capital is always sensitive and timid; it shrinks from danger. No man in this House, no man in this country, could be induced to invest a dollar in any manufacture based upon the use of any invention patented ten, twenty, or fifty years ago, if this dead patent be resurrected.

Now, what are the facts in this case? Five years ago last April this patent expired. The fire-arms manufacturers of this country, as I know in the case of the Remingtons in my district, have expended large amounts of money in buildings and machinery, which they would not have done except for the expiration of this patent. They have obtained contracts from abroad to manufacture these pistols, which they could not afford to execute under the provisions of this bill. If you renew this patent and add fifty cents to the cost of each pistol manufactured, you not only affect injuriously the manufacturers, but you deprive American skilled labor of employment to the extent of all attainable foreign contracts at a time when employment is not too abundant in this country.

Moreover, you could strike no other so heavy a blow at the inventive genius of this country. Once let it be understood throughout this country that after a patent has expired it can be renewed, and the capitalists will not invest one dime in any patent, because it can be taken away from them at any moment by similar power of legislation. There are three hundred thousand pistols manufactured annually in this country. Fifty cents upon each of these is $150,000 per annum, which it is proposed to give to Mr. Rollin White under this bill; so that his proposed seven years' extension would be equivalent to $1,050,000—certainly an amount which is fabulously large, considering the doubtful rights of the petitioner.

My colleague [Mr. HALE, of New York] has said that this bill simply allows this man to have a hearing. Why, sir, every man in this House knows that the passage of this bill will be equivalent to a mandatory order to the Commissioner of Patents to grant this extension, and it would be so considered by the Commissioner.

My friend from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] spoke with much sympathy in behalf of his acquaintance, Mr. White. I am glad that I do not know him personally, and can stand up here and plead for justice and right without sympathy for individuals. He has said that White did not have a fair hearing because his attorney was sick. The Commissioner of Patents in his report says "the cause was argued with ability by three able and experienced patent attorneys."

Unfortunately the manufacturers of this country are constantly worried by pretended inventors and black-mailers, and by applications for renewal of expired patents such as is contemplated in this bill. It is time Congress put upon such annoyers its seal of condemnation. Our manufacturers are liberal toward inventors. The Messrs. Remington have paid for patents more than half a million dollars, and are always ready to be liberal in their dealings with inventors.

This proposition seems to me to be an outrageous attempt to benefit one man at the expense of the many, and which, in its bearing, will harm alike inventors, manufacturers, and the laborer.

Mr. CONGER. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER.]

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, I do not come within the personal objection raised by gentlemen who advocate this bill to those who have opposed it in debate. Within my district there is no manufacturer of arms, or other persons, especially interested in opposing the extension of this patent. Indeed, as far as I know, among my constituents there is not a single person who has any interest in opposing the extension except that interest against the longer continuation of this monopoly in the manufacture of arms which is common to all citizens of the United States.

But, sir, I should be wanting in my sense of duty if, with my convictions, I failed to take advantage of whatever time I can get to protest to this House against an extension of this patent, which I believe to be as absolutely without merit as any extension which has been asked for within my experience here.

I understand very well, sir, as gentlemen who present this bill have told the House, that the bill is not for a direct extension of a patent, but only (in the language of one of them) to give Mr. White a day in court. But, Mr. Speaker, if there is anything certain about the matter, to my mind it is that, when this day in court is once given, and this application comes to be reconsidered, it will result that this monopoly, worth, I am told, not less than a million dollars, will be granted.

Now, what is the history of this claim for a day in court? In 1868 Rollin White applied to the Commissioner of Patents then in office, Mr. Foote, for an extension of this patent. The application was pending before him for two years, pressed by some of the most eminent counsel in the country. During all that time there was no other suggestion of these lost papers, as I see by the letter of the Commissioner in the seventy-ninth volume of the Globe, now before me, than that certain models and illustrations were lost. But the Commissioner here declares that the absence of those models in no way prevented his understanding the case; and he declares also that the ends of justice did not require any reconsideration of the case, and that his conclusion would not be changed by the evidence the inventor has claimed he could not then produce. After that a motion for rehearing was made before the Commissioner, the proper authority to consider it, just like a motion for rehearing before a court, and was by him refused. Later, in the spring of 1869, in the last hours of an evening session, a bill was rushed through without debate, authorizing a new application to the Commissioner. That bill was returned at the next session of Congress by the President with a veto message, in which he referred to the report of the Chief of Ordnance, who declared the interest of justice required that no further reconsideration of this application should be had; and after a great debate in this House between the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] who advocated the passing of the bill over the veto, and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Farnsworth,] then here, which every gentleman in this House will recollect, the motion to pass the bill over the veto failed by 168 nays to 12 yeas.

With that history I am cognizant, as I was then in the House. I was one of the members requested, on the night the bill passed, by one of the counsel for Mr. White, not to make any objection to defeat the bill; and I have not forgotten his representations of the merits of the bill; and since its subsequent veto that gentleman has not been able to impress me in respect of any matter before the Congress of the United States with any confidence in his judgment.

I repeat, that during the period of this application before the Commissioner of Patents, and after these papers are said to have been taken, Mr. White claimed only to have lost certain of his models, which the Commissioner writes did not prevent his understanding the case. The inventor then moved for a rehearing before the Commissioner charged with the consideration of these questions, and that rehearing was denied. Then he came to the Congress, and slipped through without objection, toward the close of a short spring session, a bill for a reconsideration of his case by the Commissioner. That bill having been vetoed, he now comes in, five years afterward, when great industries have established themselves, when these revolving arms have grown to be so considerable an article of export that our citizens send out every year hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of them to other nations, and again asks for yet another reconsideration; which, as certainly as it is granted, will, I believe, result in an extension which will give to this man or to those behind him a monopoly that will in the end reach even a million dollars.

I am opposed on principle, Mr. Speaker, to all extensions of patents. If during the fourteen years of exclusive right to the invention granted to the patentee formerly—now seventeen years—a man cannot make such use of his invention as to make it pay him a suitable return, that is his misfortune. The public interest then, at least, requires that he should give up his monopoly and let others try what can be done with the invention. There is no public policy or wisdom, as I think, in any further extension after that. But to those gentlemen who think otherwise, who are disposed to decide this case with reference only to its particular merits, I say the application for an extension of this patent has been heard and denied by the regular tribunal established for that purpose.

After that hearing an application for a rehearing has been denied. Yet after that a bill for a reconsideration of the application passed Congress and that bill was vetoed, and by an overwhelming majority of both Houses the veto was sustained. And now, five years after all that, the inventor comes once more to Congress and again requests an opportunity for a further rehearing of this case. For my own part I am utterly opposed to it. The application seems to me to be without a shadow of justice, and I should have failed in my sense of duty if I had not made my earnest protest against the adoption of this bill.

Mr. EAMES. The gentleman from New York said, as I understood, that the veto had been sustained by both Houses. I ask him if the veto was sustained in the Senate, the House in which the bill originated?

Mr. POTTER. I understood that the bill originated in the House.

Mr. McCRARY. The bill was passed by the Senate over the veto by a large majority, and then came down to this House. A personal controversy arose, in which the bill was lost sight of entirely, and the veto was sustained. That is the fact.

Mr. POTTER. In regard to the action of the Senate then I stand corrected.

Mr. CONGER. I yield now to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND.]

Mr. POLAND. I am not in the position of most of the gentlemen who have argued in reference to this bill. I know nothing of these under-currents. I know nothing in relation to the particular parties, individuals, or companies who are engaged in the manufacture of pistols. I do not know who is to be benefited or who is to be harmed by the passage of this bill. My views in relation to it and my judgment upon this case are based upon the record here. A great many gentlemen have taken occasion to say that they are opposed to the extension of any patents at all, and that they uniformly vote against all these bills that authorize the extension of patents or the application for extension. Now, Mr. Speaker, I cannot be governed by any consideration of that sort. The law gives every patentee the right to apply for an extension; it was a legal right which the statutes of the United States gave to every individual patentee who applied within the time provided for an extension of his patent. This is by no means a bill to extend this man's right; it is merely for the purpose of giving him an opportunity for the exercise of a right which he lost without his fault. He made his application within the time the law provided to have a hearing before the Commissioner of Patents, with a view to having his patent extended.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the only proper course for this House to take is to say that this man shall have a fair opportunity to avail himself of that privilege and that right which the law gave him, and whether we believe in the extension of patents or not is not a consideration that should influence the view of any man upon this subject. This Mr. Rollin White, just before the expiration of his patent, applied to the Commissioner of Patents for a hearing as to whether he was entitled to an extension of his patent, and just upon the eve of that hearing, I believe the very night before that hearing came on by the Commissioner, an important part of his evidence was stolen, and he had not anything to present before the Commissioner. I do not know who stole it. But almost everybody who steals is some one that has some interest in the thing stolen. I think it is a fair presumption that somebody that was interested to defeat his application for an extension was the thief; but whether it was somebody that stole it for the purpose of preventing him from having a fair hearing, or whether it was somebody that stole it out of mere wantonness and mischief, makes no difference as regards the effect on the rights of Rollin White.

Therefore, with only a part of his testimony in his possession, and in the absence of his models, he was obliged to go on with the hearing before the Commissioner of Patents. My old friend, Mr. Foote, who was then Commissioner of Patents, says he understood the case just as well without the evidence as with it. He says he does not think it would have made any difference in his judgment if he had had the testimony. And perhaps that may be so, but I do not think we should put so high an estimate on the judgment of Commissioner Foote or anybody else. I think this House has the right to say, and is bound to say, that a man shall not be deprived of a right which the laws gave him, the right of having a hearing, on account of somebody stealing his evidence.

The Commissioner decided against the application of Rollin White, who then came before Congress for the purpose of having a new trial granted to him before the Commissioner. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the only question for this House to decide is whether Rollin White has had a fair opportunity to test his case before the Commissioner, which was a right that the law had secured to him in the first instance if he had not been deprived of it. He made his application here and to the Senate. The bill passed both Houses, and it did not pass without very full discussion; and the subject was very well understood. The bill went up to the President and was vetoed, not upon any of these grounds which have been suggested here in the discussion to-day, but upon the grounds stated to the President by General Dyer, then the Chief of Ordnance, that the bill interfered with the rights of the Government; and upon this information given by General Dyer, very strangely as I think, the President refused to put his signature to the bill. I have only to say in reference to that that I think this matter of vetoes has greatly improved since that time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, several of the gentlemen who have spoken have talked about delay. There has been a long delay of five years.

They ask, Are we to allow a man after a lapse of five years to come in and ask for a hearing? I agree, if the man had himself been guilty of any laches in these five years we ought not to grant this. But Rollin White came here on his crutches at the earliest moment. Rollin White and his crutches have become as familiar to all of us as any object around this Capitol. Is, then, Rollin White to be taunted, or anybody who supports this bill to be taunted, on the ground that he has been guilty of laches?

Has he not prosecuted his case before Congress with the very greatest diligence? Is it his fault at all that this thing has not been determined before this time? But it is true that, whether rightfully or not, other persons have engaged in the manufacture of these pistols and have been using this patent; and in order that no injustice shall be done to anybody the committee have carefully provided that every man who has gone to any expense in this matter, who has built machinery for the manufacture of pistols, may still continue to manufacture them upon paying a royalty that they have fixed—a moderate royalty. They may continue the manufacture of pistols, and not be losers by the investment that they have made in this machinery.

Now, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] says there is great injustice in this bill, because it authorizes the Government to go into the manufacture and sale of these arms to everybody. If the gentleman will look carefully into the bill, he will see that it provides no such thing. It provides—and I suppose that provision was inserted to meet the objection stated in the veto message, the objection of General Dyer, that the Government shall have the right to manufacture these arms—it provides that the Government shall have the right to manufacture and use these arms, but not to sell them; shall have the right to manufacture such as may be desired for the use of the Government, but not for the purpose of selling to anybody.

It seems to me that the single question for us to determine is whether by the fraud of somebody, by some fraud or some accident, Rollin White has been deprived of that hearing before the Commissioner of Patents to which the law gave him a right. It has been said by some gentlemen, by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MERRIAM,] that the passage of this bill would be equivalent to the final and conclusive extension of the patent; that authorizing a man to go before the Commissioner of Patents and have a rehearing is equivalent to determining that his patent shall be extended. I say to the gentleman from New York, to the House, and to everybody, that the idea that the Commissioner of Patents is at all bound by the judgment of the House as to whether patents should be extended or not is not true. No Commissioner has ever acted upon any such theory or belief. This man will stand before the Commissioner, if we authorize him to have another hearing, precisely as he would have stood if he had had his hearing in the outset, without ever coming to Congress at all. The judgment of the Commissioner is left just as unbiased, and he is just as free to determine the question whether there ought or ought not to be an extension of this patent, as if this was the original hearing before him while the original patent was still in force.

Mr. CONGER. Before I call the previous question, I desire to say in the moment still allowed me that in all stages of this question, when it has been presented to Congress and a vote has been had upon it, uniformly a majority vote has been given in favor of allowing a rehearing of this case. And I want to say further, what is very much to the credit of the heart of my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] if not to his memory, that he is recorded as voting against the veto of the President; that his influential voice was given in favor of overriding that veto and allowing Mr. White a chance to be heard.

Mr. DAWES. I see I am so recorded.

Mr. CONGER. The friends of Mr. White thanked him then as I do now for his candor and sincerity. And the few good men who voted to sustain the veto——

A MEMBER. How many were there?

Mr. CONGER. There were twelve of them, who have long since been forgotten in the history of the country, as all who vote against it now may expect to be forgotten.

This is not a proposition to grant an extension of this patent by act of Congress. Long ago our committee informed this House that they would not bring in any bill to grant an extension of any patent whatever by act of Congress. We propose to remit Mr. White to the place he occupied when he had a right to a rehearing, and which place he lost without any fault of his own. We remit him to the Commissioner of Patents; and if under the rules and regulations and decisions of the Patent Office he is entitled in justice and equity to have his patent extended, the Commissioner will grant an extension; if not, he will not grant it.

It seems to me that this House should understand the temper of their Committee on Patents well enough to know that every individual man of them is determined as strongly as any member of the House may be against the extension of any patent whatever to the injury of the public. It is the unanimous and continued voice of the committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, to oppose every extension and every law which leads to the extension of a patent which may infringe upon the rights of the public. This case in its equities comes so far within that rule that the committee, composed of members of both political parties, unanimously recommend this House to grant this right to a rehearing to this poor, crippled man. He has received but a few thousand dollars, a paltry pittance, for an invention which has all over the world revolutionized the use of fire-arms. To-day he is wandering about the streets of this capital city in such poverty that he is unable to pay for his board from day to day, while men are in the enjoyment of untold millions of wealth and their representatives on this floor are refusing him the poor boon of a rehearing before the Commissioner of Patents upon the merits of his case. I stand, as I have ever stood in this House, the avowed opponent of every extension of a patent where the inventor has received a sufficient remuneration, or, if he has not received it himself, where the public have paid a sufficient remuneration for any invention whatever by any inventor.

Mr. POTTER. How much has Rollin White received? The Commissioner reports that he has received $71,000.

Mr. CONGER. I will tell the gentleman what Rollin White has received. Our committee report that he has received $70,899 and has expended $60,779, leaving about $10,000 as all that he has ever received for the ground-work patent of all these inventions, which extend through all the fire-arms of all the nations of the earth, as well as the arms used by amateurs and sportsmen throughout the land.

Mr. DAWES. My friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has stated how I voted when this case was up before; I wish he would tell the House how he voted.

Mr. CONGER. Was I a member of the House at the time?

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman voted against the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I presume it is likely I voted for the veto. I am opposed to extensions, and always have been, until convinced by overpowering evidence against my will that the extension ought to be granted.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will my friend answer one question? What new light has been thrown on this case since 1872, when we both voted against this patent?

Mr. CONGER. I was then a new member of this House.

Mr. KELLOGG. So was I.

Mr. CONGER. I was then ready to follow (which, I thank God, I have forgotten lately to do) these old members, upon whose judgment I thought I might rely with implicit confidence. I have learned since that time, as every member does who stays here more than one Congress, that I must depend on my own judgment more than that of even the best of my associates.

Mr. DAWES. What made you part company with me?

Mr. CONGER. Perhaps because I have no arms-manufacturing company in my district.

Mr. DAWES. I assure the gentleman that I have no acquaintance with the gentlemen manufacturing arms in my district, to whom he refers—do not even know them by sight.

Mr. CONGER. Then there is a gentleman in my friend's district who has control, I understand, of three hundred and seventeen voters; and yet my friend does not even know him by sight! I commend the example of my friend from Massachusetts to gentlemen on the democratic side, who say that republican politicians not only know every man that controls votes, but control the men themselves. The illustrious example of my friend refutes all these old charges of the democracy against the republican party.

Mr. DAWES. I know there are certain gentlemen in my district, very honorable men, engaged in this manufacture; but I never had the pleasure of making their acquaintance.

Mr. CONGER. I had hoped that my friend knew all the "honorable gentlemen" in his district.

Mr. DAWES. The inconsistency of my friend is that he accuses me of changing my vote when he himself has changed his vote.

Mr. CONGER. I changed my views on proper information, as I have no doubt the gentleman did.

Mr. DAWES. You converted me and I converted you!

Mr. CONGER. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 72, noes 94.

Mr. CONGER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 69, noes 79.

Mr. CONGER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 88, nays 128, not voting 74; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ashe, Averill, Barber, Begole, Bell, Bradley, Burrows, Carpenter, Coburn, Comingo, Conger, Crooke, Crutchfield, Darrall, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Freeman, Frye, Hagans, Robert S. Ward, Whitehouse, Whiteley, and Charles G. Williams—74.

So the bill was not ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

During the vote,

Mr. SENER stated that his colleague, Mr. SMITH, who was unavoidably absent, would, if present, vote in the negative.

Mr. COMINGO stated that his colleague, Mr. GLOVER, was detained from the House by illness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question. I desire to state to the House that the last Congress directed its Committee on Ways and Means to investigate a charge——

A MEMBER. This Congress, was it not?

Mr. DAWES. No; just at the close of the last Congress—a charge against the Pacific Mail Steamship Company that it had procured by corrupt means a subsidy from Congress. In pursuing the investigation the committee were unable to secure the attendance of the agent of that company who was here in Washington advocating the passage of the measure, and the investigation substantially fell through. It was just at the close of the last Congress. They were unable to find him. The present Congress at it last session ordered the Committee on Ways and Means to renew that investigation. They were unable to attend to that duty at the last session, but they took it up immediately on assembling at this session of Congress.

Our subpena was sent out under the order of this House for such witnesses, among others this agent, Mr. Irwin, to appear before the committee. They were unable to find him until last night. The examination of the testimony to-day shows that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company themselves have been for a considerable time unable to find him; that a few weeks since he returned from Europe and appearing before the officers of that company notified them he was about to resail for Europe on the following Saturday. They thereupon, in proceedings which had reference to this same matter, caused his arrest. He gave bail, and they have not known where he has been since. Last night our officer was able to find him and served a subpena on him. At ten o'clock last night I received a telegram from him in New York, which I propose to have read, in which he says he is not able, on account of pressing business, to be here before next Tuesday. The telegram was laid before the Committee on Ways and Means this morning, and a reply was sent to him by telegram that the committee could not consent to any delay. Since then a telegram has been received from our officer saying that Mr. Irwin is ill and unable to come. A reply from him to the telegram of the committee represents him to be so ill as to be unable to come before next Tuesday. I am instructed by the committee to lay the matter before the House, together with a resolution for his arrest. If these telegrams represent him exactly as he is, it would hardly appear he was in contempt; but the circumstances attending his arrest by the company on a matter pertaining to this very question now being examined by the committee, on notice from him that he was to sail for Europe next Saturday, and not seeing him since, and the fact of the telegram to me last night that the reason he could not appear was on account of pressing business—I say the circumstances of the case are such as to induce the Committee on Ways and Means to have some little want of confidence in these telegrams, and they choose if this witness shall escape and not appear before the committee—inasmuch as the whole investigation seems to pivot upon his examination—if he shall escape and not appear before the committee, they choose, the House, and not the committee, shall take the responsibility. I will, in order that the whole case may be before the House, send up the telegrams in their order that they may be read and spread upon the Journal; and then I will offer a resolution to bring him here and leave it to the House to decide whether they will cause him to be brought here on these statements or not, so the committee may feel if any miscarriage shall happen in this investigation it will not be the fault of the committee itself.

Mr. BECK. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means will further state that the investigation at the close of the last Congress was in great part defeated because this witness could not be found, and because the president of the company, Mr. Stockwell, then feigned insanity, or was really insane temporarily, and has now gone to Europe. It would seem from all the circumstances they did seek to avoid investigation.

Mr. DAWES. I intended to state and thought I had stated the fact of the absence of this witness from the examination during the last Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether this witness, Irwin, has not within the last two days been in this city?

Mr. DAWES. If that is so, it is a fact new to the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. The rumor on the streets says that is the fact.

Mr. DAWES. It is new to me. I have a telegram, purporting to come from him from New York, dated at 11.16 a. m. to-day. I now send to the desk and ask to have read a telegram received from him yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, December 10, 1874.

HON. HENRY DAWES:

I have important engagements to-morrow and Saturday, and cannot travel at night without serious injury. I therefore ask your indulgence until Tuesday, when I will, without fail.

Address Hoffman House.

RICHARD B. IRWIN.

Mr. DAWES. I now send up the telegram received by the Sergeant-at-Arms to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, December 11, 1874.

HON. N. G. ORDWAY,

Sergeant-at-Arms House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Found Irwin last night late. He will not be able to start before Monday on account of health. What shall I do?

A. BRADSHAW.

Mr. DAWES. On sending my message to-day, saying that the committee could consent to no delay, I received the telegram which I now send to the desk to be read. I understand the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] has some telegrams which ought to be read. I do not know what their contents are.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, December 11, 1874.

HON. HENRY L. DAWES:

Telegram received. I intend no disrespect to the committee or yourself, but it will be utterly impossible for me to start before Monday without increasing my illness to such an extent that my presence will be useless for weeks. I will positively appear on Tuesday.

R. B. IRWIN.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] may now send up whatever telegrams he may have.

Mr. PHELPS. The telegram which I send to the desk I have received since the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] began his remarks, and when the telegram has been read I should like, through his courtesy, to say a few words. Mr. Irwin, whose name has been mentioned, is, or rather has been a constituent of mine, and was tolerably well known to me.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, December 11, 1874.

WILLIAM WALTER PHELPS:

Please see DAWES. I am too ill to move before Monday; am confined to my room, unable to write and hardly able to speak audibly. If the committee's haste is anything more than pro forma it is simply brutal. I have assured them that I will attend on Tuesday without fail. If they want security beyond my word it is ready. What can I do more? As they worry me with hourly telegrams for nothing, I shall be dangerously ill. Please answer.

R. B. IRWIN.

Mr. PHELPS. As I think the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts have been calculated to do injustice to one who is absent, I take the floor in his behalf to do him justice. I have known Mr. Irwin for some years, and in all the relations in which I have met him he has so borne himself that it is right for me to say here that I have no reason to believe him to be other than an honest and trustworthy citizen. Many of the facts which have been alleged by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and which would, if true, show that my opinion of the honesty and trustworthiness of this man is unfounded, are, as I believe, incorrect.

Mr. Irwin is the victim of this powerful corporation whose servant he has been. I know that to shield themselves an administration of the Pacific Mail Company, which was turned out of power, brought an action against him. I know, on the information of his attorney, that he has been ready and eager to defend that action, and for that purpose has secured and paid the ablest counsel in the city of New York. I know that he has sought by every means within his power to force that trial to an immediate issue; and that, according to his own statement, he returned from Europe for the express purpose of contributing by his personal efforts to a more speedy trial of the cause. So much with reference to the accusations made that he is a fugitive from justice and seeks to escape the consequences of a civil action which is brought against him by the Pacific Mail Company. I repeat, so far is that from being the case that he has been eager to make his defense and has always sought to bring his case to trial. So, at least, Irwin himself has assured me. He is not a fugitive from justice, nor a wanderer in the world. He is a man of means, and he left for Europe only, as was the story of his friends and neighbors, for the purpose of rest and relaxation. He left word with his friends and with his counsel and with his father-in-law, who is a man of large estate and position, that he was to be summoned at any time for a proper cause; and there has never been one single moment when friend or foe, by going to the office of his counsel at 33 Wall street, or by seeking his father-in-law, at Englewood, New Jersey, could not have secured his presence in America at any time. Irwin has told me he is willing and ready to go before this committee; and any delay which now occurs must be due, I am bound to believe, to the fact he has stated in his telegram, that he is ill at home. This much I have stated from my own knowledge, derived in some cases from him and in other cases from his attorney.

Whether this man, in connection with the Pacific Mail, has done dishonorable things or not, I do not know; but, having known him for years, and having known these facts, for him, who had been a constituent of mine and left my district to discharge his duties in connection with the Pacific Mail Company, I have felt bound to state these facts, and to say that the House and the committee ought not to be prejudiced by these charges which the gentleman from Massachusetts, under his conception of the facts, has made.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not know anything of the facts here at all, but I suppose what is desired is to get this person to appear before the committee, and in the first place to see that he does not put himself beyond the reach of the House. Now, to-day is Friday, and he could not be brought here in time to deal with him before Monday morning.

Mr. DAWES. We will adjourn over to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And then Sunday intervenes. I was about to make this suggestion: Let an attachment issue against him, and instruct the Sergeant-at-Arms to take him in charge and keep him safely and then bring him up on Monday morning.

Mr. DAWES. That would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. PHELPS. My only objection is this: Why should he be treated as if he were a criminal? Why should we proceed as if he intended to escape or avoid the jurisdiction of this House, when he has shown no such intention, and when his illness is a sufficient excuse for his absence?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I want to answer that. It is urged that these telegrams are not sufficient. It can do this man no harm to be simply under surveillance; if he is honest in his intention to appear here it will only bring him here, and if he is not honest in that intention, then it will secure his attendance and no mischief will be done.

Mr. MAYNARD. In the last Congress, when I was a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, we had this matter of the Pacific Mail Steamship subsidy before us for investigation. I would ask the chairman of that committee [Mr. DAWES] if this is one of the witnesses that we tried to get and were unable to secure?

Mr. DAWES. He is.

Mr. MAYNARD. Has the gentleman satisfied himself—of course he examined the matter before bringing so serious a subject to the attention of the House—has he satisfied himself that this witness is endeavoring to evade the process of the House, and to avoid appearing before the committee to give testimony?

Mr. DAWES. I was just about to say in answer to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] that he did not correctly understand what I said. I made no such charge at all as he would seem to indicate. I was instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to submit this full statement to the House, in order that the House might take the responsibility if it should turn out that this witness was trying to evade appearing here. I know nothing of my personal knowledge of Mr. Irwin that would justify me in stating to the House that he desires to evade appearing here. But the impression left upon the minds of the committee this morning in connection with their efforts during the last Congress to obtain his presence here was such as to induce the committee to instruct me to make this motion and to submit this statement to the House. I have done it in as few words as possible. I know of no one fact that would justify me in saying that I believe or disbelieve that he was trying to evade appearing here. The committee have sought to put their own officer in the position suggested by my colleague, [Mr. BUTLER,] without bringing this matter before the House. But they ascertained that if they did so without the action of the House it would be entirely futile. It was their purpose, if the House granted the warrant, to do exactly as is suggested by my colleague, send an honorable officer there, and if he found Mr. Irwin really sick not to disturb him, but only to secure his attendance. If, however, upon these telegrams and the statements of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] the House shall think that it is right and proper to let this man be without any restraint, the committee will have discharged their duty by laying the matter before the House.

So much has been said, so grave accusations have been made against this company, and by this company hurled back upon the head of this Mr. Irwin, whether right or wrong; and whether the gentleman from New Jersey is right in his construction or the gentleman who appeared before the committee this morning is right, we have no evidence. All we desire is that the presence of this man should be secured. If he is really sick, but desires to appear here, it would be cruel to press him before he is able to attend.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] does he know why it was that Mr. Irwin evaded, appearing before the committee at the close of the last Congress?

Mr. PHELPS. In answer to the gentleman from Kentucky, I would say that I do not know any of the facts of Mr. Irwin's connection with the committee; I do not know that he tried to evade, or what evidence there is that he tried to evade, appearing before the committee. All that I know is that Irwin went abroad, was in Europe, and staid there. If the evidence is that he went there to escape the summons of the committee, then they should act as they propose. That fact warrants compulsion. But I do not understand there is any allegation made further than that when the committee wanted him they found he had gone to Europe.

Mr. BECK. We tried to get him, and we were unable to do so. Several of the European steamers sail to-morrow, and I for one believe that unless this man is put under some restraint to appear here, he will again leave. I do not want him brought here if he is sick; I only want to secure his attendance here. I have no faith in his appearing here voluntarily.

Mr. KASSON. I would ask the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] for his authority for stating that this man came back from Europe for the purpose of hurrying up this investigation.

Mr. PHELPS. It is this: Perhaps two weeks before I came here Mr. Irwin called upon me and complained of the injustice of his being made the scape-goat of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and said he insisted upon forcing them to try the suit they had brought against him for stock-jobbing purposes.

Mr. KASSON. My point is this: The evidence before the committee is that after he returned from Europe he said he was going back on the steamer that left the following Saturday. It was that statement that induced the company to bring an action against him. Clearly if the evidence before the committee is correct he cannot have returned from Europe for the purpose of having this investigation made. The further statement is made before the committee that up to this time he has failed to answer the allegations made in the suit brought against him. Upon these facts I desire to know if the authority of the gentleman is such as to induce him to believe that the evidence before the committee is incorrect?

Mr. PHELPS. I understood that this gentleman and his counsel had been eager to bring the case to trial; that they had been unable to do so heretofore, and were now anxious to press it. This I learned either from Mr. Irwin, or Mr. Chapman, his counsel, an eminent lawyer of New York, both of whom have spoken of the matter to me.

Mr. KASSON. Then there is a conflict of statements.

Mr. DAWES. I will state to the House that it was the intention of the committee, if a warrant should be granted, to use it in the manner suggested by my colleague, [Mr. BUTLER,] merely to prevent any escape, if there was the slightest intention of that kind.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I ask leave to call the attention of the House for one moment to the very bungling and awkward condition of the law in regard to this matter. There is not a justice of the peace in the country, there is not a United States commissioner, there is not the humblest magistrate authorized to verify facts by judicial examination, who has not authority, when a witness declines to appear before him, to issue process at once to compel his attendance. Yet, when the House of Representatives or the Senate has authorized a committee to investigate, with authority to send for persons and papers, and a witness refuses to appear, it is necessary to bring the matter to the attention of the House, thus interfering with its ordinary business, involving also great publicity and delay, which ordinarily facilitates escape if there is any such design.

Now, sir, it seems to me that the Judiciary Committee ought to be charged with the duty of preparing a general bill, under which, when a committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, either the committee itself or the Presiding Officer of the respective branch of Congress shall have power to issue a warrant for the purpose of compelling attendance of witnesses. Certainly it would be no interference with the liberty of a citizen to lodge in the Presiding Officer of the House or of the Senate the power to issue a warrant at once in such cases. I shall, therefore, as soon as this question is disposed of, ask unanimous consent to refer this subject to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. DAWES. I now offer the customary resolution. I leave it entirely with the House to take the responsibility in this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Richard B. Irwin was on the 10th day of September, 1874, duly summoned to appear and testify before a standing committee of this House on the Ways and Means, charged with the investigation of certain allegations against the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and has without sufficient cause neglected to appear before said committee pursuant to said summons: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Speaker issue his warrant, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms, commanding him to take into custody the body of the said Richard B. Irwin, wherever to be found, and to have the same forthwith brought before the bar of the House, to answer for contempt of the authority of the House in thus failing and neglecting to appear before said committee.

Mr. DAWES. Of course, if Mr. Irwin should come here under that warrant and the committee should be satisfied that he has not intended to treat them with contempt, they will come in and ask that he be discharged.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution is not in accordance with the suggestion of any gentleman who has spoken. There have been read in the hearing of the House telegrams to the effect that Mr. Irwin is sick, and therefore unable to appear; yet this resolution recites that he "has without sufficient cause neglected to appear." Furthermore, the resolution provides that he shall be "forthwith brought before the bar of the House to answer for contempt." It does not say "as soon as he is able to be brought here." He may be too sick to come; yet the resolution unqualifiedly requires his immediate attendance.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Under the resolution the officer charged with the execution of the warrant would have a discretion as to when the party should be brought here.

Mr. DAWES. I modify the resolution by striking out the words "without sufficient cause."

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. G. F. HOAR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be directed to consider the expediency of authorizing by the general law the Presiding Officers of the two Houses, or some other person, to issue proper process to compel the attendance of witnesses who have disobeyed the summons of either House.

HYGEA HOTEL, FORTRESS MONROE.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3915) to authorize the Secretary of War to give permission to extend the Hygea hotel, at Fortress Monroe, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPRINTING LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution, which I suppose must go to the Committee on Printing, although there is really a necessity that it should be adopted today:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives seven hundred copies of the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will move that the bill be reprinted, that will accomplish the object.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well; I withdraw the resolution, and make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES COURT IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be directed specially to inquire into the expenses of the United States court in Nebraska, with power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object. I am tired of this investigation of everybody.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman will not object to the reference of the resolution to the committee.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not object to the reference of the resolution.

The resolution was received, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

CLAIMS OF ALIENS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3916) to provide for the adjudication of the claims of aliens; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I move that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. BROMBERG. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to relieve P. U. Murphy and John A. Brown, of Alabama, of political disabilities.

Mr. MAYNARD. These things had better be brought in during the morning session.

Mr. BROMBERG. Petitions accompany each case, and I do not see any good reason why the bill should not be passed at this time.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the bill be brought in in the morning session I do not know that I will object.

PRESERVATION OF ARMY CLOTHING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of the board of officers to investigate the process of John A. Cowles & Co. for the preservation of clothing from moth and mildew; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY POST—CARLIN, NEVADA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the establishment of a new military post in the Department of California, near Carlin, Nevada; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PROPERTY BELONGING TO THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of July 15, 1870, an inventory of property belonging to the United States in his Department on December 1, 1874; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INSPECTION OF DISBURSING OFFICERS' ACCOUNTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the act of April 20, 1874, reports of inspection of disbursing officers' accounts; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with discretion to that committee to order the printing if they shall deem it necessary.

SAINT CLAIR AND CARONDELET BRIDGE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a report of the Secretary of War, on the Saint Clair and Carondelet bridge; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CONTINGENT FUND OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House, transmitting, in accordance with law, his annual report of the disbursement of the contingent fund of the House; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY ROADS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the bill (H. R. No. 2419) to provide for the construction of a military road in Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

P. U. MURPHY AND J. A. BROWN.

Mr. BROMBERG. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] withdraws his objection to the bill. I asked unanimous consent to introduce——

Mr. MAYNARD. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BROMBERG, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3918) to relieve P. U. Murphy and J. A. Brown, of Alabama, of political disabilities; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BROMBERG. A petition accompanies each case, praying for this relief.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed; two-thirds of the House concurring therein.

NICHOLAS H. LAMBDIN, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. O'BRIEN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3917) to compensate Nicholas H. Lambdin, assistant engineer United States Navy, for loss of effects on board of the Virginius at the time of the sinking of said vessel, September 26, 1873; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. KELLOGG, (at three o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BROWN: The petition of Alice Park, to be compensated for the use of her property by the United States authorities, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COBB, of Kansas: Resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, memorializing Congress to extend the time for payment of dues on public lands in Kansas to January 1, 1876, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, memorializing Congress to permit homestead and pre-emption settlers in Kansas to abandon their several claims for one year without detriment, on account of the grasshopper invasion and drought, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in relation to settlers on Miami Indian lands, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, recommending a change in the management of Indian affairs, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, memorializing Congress to postpone all payments on the Kansas Indian reserve and trust lands, on account of the ravages of grasshoppers, &c., and an unprecedented drought destroying the crops, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. COBURN: The petition of John S. Bishop, late first lieutenant Sixty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FRYE: The remonstrance of the National Association of Lumbermen against the so-called reciprocity treaty between the United States and the British North American provinces, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of Annabella Evans, widow of Morris Evans, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PIKE: The petition of Anna Butterfield, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THORNBURGH: The petition of Solomon Bogart, father of Columbus Bogart, deceased, for pay due his son as second lieutenant Fifth Tennessee Volunteers, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHITEHEAD: The petition of William S. Morris, of Lynchburgh, Virginia, to be compensated for the destruction of tobacco and other property by United States troops, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan: The petition of Mary Jordan, widow of Charles L. Jordan, formerly of Company K, Second New York Cavalry, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, December 14, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

Hon. THOMAS F. BAYARD, from the State of Delaware, and Hon. REUBEN E. FENTON, from the State of New York, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the petition of George W. Coffin, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Lorenzo P. Gudger, of Dalton, Georgia, praying compensation for property alleged to have been confiscated by the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORTON. I present a petition which, as it is short, I ask to have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens of the United States, and residents of the State of Indiana, show to Congress that they are men of color, who speak on their own behalf and that of 15,000 colored voters of said State, and protest against a recent decision of the supreme court of said State, by the force of which they are deprived of citizenship in said State and their children denied the equal privilege of education in public schools. And they represent that this decision involves a great public question, and overthrows rights established by the Constitution of the United States. That it is unfair and burdensome upon the colored citizens to compel them to incur the expenses of an appeal in this case.

Therefore, referring to a copy of said decision, they beg Congress to direct the proper law-officer of the Government to appeal said cause to the Supreme Court of the United States.

INDIANAPOLIS, December 8, 1874.

Mr. MORTON. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer the memorial of F. & J. Rives, proprietors of the Congressional Globe, and late publishers of the proceedings of Congress, praying that, in consideration of the large amount of property which they have invested in the publication of the debates of Congress, which publication has now been transferred to the Government Printing Office, Congress may purchase their building and materials. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of Francis J. Comstock, praying compensation for hay used by the United States Army in 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Peter O'Farrell, Frank H. Osborne, and James Whitlock, corresponding committee for the workingmen of Kansas, praying additional compensation for work required to be done by them in the military Department of the Missouri, in violation of what is known as the eight-hour law; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. INGALLS. I also present resolutions passed by the Legislature of Kansas, in special session, in September of the current year, asking for the extension of time for homestead and pre-emption settlers, and also for the extension of time of payment by certain settlers on Indian lands in that State. I move the reference of these resolutions to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT presented the petition of William D. Moore, praying an amendment of the act of February 14, 1871, so as to extend pensions to the widows of all soldiers of the war of 1812 where the marriage occurred before 1850; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Henry H. Robinson, of Fort Wayne, Indiana, praying Congress to reduce the salary of the President of the United States to $25,000 per annum; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented the petition of P. A. Krise praying an amendment to the act of February, 1871, giving pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of the Importers and Grocers' Board of Trade, of New York, praying a careful revision and simplification of the revenue and collection laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of H. W. Boardman, attorney in the matter of the petition of George H. Wellman, of Lowell, Massachusetts, asking leave to appear for certain parties before the Committee on Patents in opposition to the extension of the Wellman patent for stripping top-flats of carding-engines; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CAMERON presented two petitions of American merchant seamen of San Francisco, two petitions signed by 210 merchant shipowners and shippers of Louisville, Kentucky, and a petition of 100 American merchant seamen of New York, praying Congress to adhere to the present marine-hospital system; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Charles B. White, George M. Sternberg, and J. J. Woodward, assistant surgeons United States Army, praying for such legislation as will authorize their promotion to the rank of surgeon; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Thomas Westnedge, of Kalamazoo, Michigan, praying the passage of an act allowing him certain bounty for services as a volunteer soldier during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of the mutual insurance companies of New York, praying a repeal of the clause which excludes them from a share in the distribution of the Geneva award; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BAYARD presented the memorial of Captain H. S. Hawkins, Sixth United States Infantry, asking reimbursement for property lost on the Missouri River by reason of the sinking of the steamer Miner, at Yankton, Dakota, in May, 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. THURMAN. I present the petition of Madeleine V. Dahlgren, daughter, and Romaine de Overbeck and Vinton Goddard, grandchildren of the late Samuel F. Vinton, stating certain provisions in the will of Mr. Vinton, the effect of which is to jeopard to some extent a trust estate created by that will, and asking Congress to pass an enabling act giving to the courts jurisdiction to prevent by decree this destruction of the estate. The question is purely a legal one whether Congress is competent to grant this relief; and I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BOREMAN, it was Ordered, That Riley H. Smith have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate on leaving copies with the Secretary.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1002) declaring the effect of permits to purchase products of the insurrectionary States in certain cases granted by the President during the war of the rebellion; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I introduce that bill by request. I do not profess to understand the merits of it, and do not wish to be considered as indorsing it. I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1003) fixing a minimum price upon certain restored public lands; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1004) fixing a minimum price upon certain land in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1005) granting the right of way and depot grounds to the Oregon Central Pacific Railway Company through the public lands of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1006) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Great Kanawha River, in the State of West Virginia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1007) for the relief of James W. Long, late a captain in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1008) for the relief of John S. Wood, late first lieutenant Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1009) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1010) to amend "An act for the creation of a court for the adjudication and disposition of certain moneys received into the Treasury under an award made by the tribunal of arbitration constituted by virtue of the first article of the treaty concluded at Washington the 8th day of May, A. D. 1871, between the United States of America and the Queen of Great Britain," approved June 23, 1874; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1011) for the relief of Asa J. Merrow; which was read twice by its title, and, with accompanying affidavits, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1012) for the relief of the district judge of Vermont; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1013) explanatory of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1874; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I move that that bill be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, because the clause in the Army bill, in the way we have of sticking everything into an appropriation bill, relates entirely to judicial officers.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1014) to amend an act entitled "An act regulating proceedings in criminal cases and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1865; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1015) amending the law granting pensions so as to remove the disability of those who, having participated in the rebellion, have since its termination enlisted in the army of the United States and become disabled; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1016) granting a pension to Sarah E. W. Elderkin; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1017) for the relief of Ana M. Rolas y Robaldo, widow of Francisco Robaldo, deceased; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1018) for the relief of John Cleghorn, late register of the land office at Sioux City, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STEVENSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1019) to make an appropriation for public buildings at Covington, Kentucky; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1020) for the relief of John Fletcher; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1021) to refer to the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court the determination of the rights of the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company under existing laws; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. INGALLS. As the Committee on the Judiciary have already reported adversely to this bill, I shall not ask its reference, but that it may lie on the table and be printed; and I desire now to give notice to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] that when he calls up this subject on Friday next, I shall move to substitute this for the bill now on the Calendar reported by him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table and be printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1022) to provide for the government and to promote the civilization of Indians; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 12) to provide for a writ of error from the supreme court of Indiana to the Supreme Court of the United States in a certain case involving the rights of colored citizens; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases, be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 605) for the relief of settlers on railroad lands, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to; the subject-matter having been embraced in a previous bill.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 201) to create an additional land district in the State of Kansas, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Susan Roberts, of Humboldt County, California, praying compensation for lands taken and used by the Government of the United States for public purposes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

Mr. HARVEY. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the bill (S. No. 965) for the relief of certain settlers upon the public lands in the State of Kansas; the bill (S. No. 967) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in the State of Nebraska, and the bill (S. No. 978) for the relief of homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands, have had the same under consideration, and have directed me to report them back with a recommendation that they be indefinitely postponed, and also to report a bill for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands as a substitute for those bills. I ask the present consideration of the bill now reported, for the reason that the situation is such (as will be evident to the Senate when the bill is read) that there is a necessity for its early passage if it is to accomplish the relief sought.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills recommended to be indefinitely postponed will be so postponed if there be no objection. The bill reported will be read the first time.

The bill (S. No. 1023) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands was read, and ordered to a second reading. The bill was read a second time by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read at length. The first section provides that it shall be lawful for homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands, whose crops were destroyed or seriously injured by grasshoppers in the year 1874, to leave and to be absent from said lands until July 1, 1875, under such regulations as to proof of the same as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe; and where such grasshoppers shall reappear in 1875, to the like destruction of the crops of settlers, the right to leave and to be absent as aforesaid shall continue to July 1, 1876.

The second section provides that during such absence no adverse rights shall attach to such lands, but the settlers are to be allowed to resume and perfect their settlement as though no such absence had been allowed.

The third section extends the time for making final proof and payment by pre-emptors, whose crops have been destroyed or injured, for one year after the expiration of the term of absence provided for in the first section.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether this bill applies to the Union generally?

Mr. HARVEY. It applies to the public lands wherever these ravages have been suffered. That was the object in preparing this substitute for a number of bills which had been introduced on the same subject, and which applied only locally or to particular cases. This bill provides for wherever the condition of affairs is such as to make it a necessity. It has been submitted to the Commissioner of the Land Office, and he approves of the object aimed at.

Mr. THURMAN. One thing in the bill which strikes me as a little singular is that an invitation is extended to the grasshoppers to come next year. I think that provision of the bill had better be stricken out. I think the bill is right enough so far as the cases that have already occurred and of which we can have knowledge are concerned; but I do not know that the spirits have been consulted and have foretold with absolute certainty that we shall have a grasshopper plague next year.

Mr. HARVEY. The Senator misapprehends the facts when he speaks of this as an invitation for the return of the grasshoppers. He will no doubt recollect that last spring a bill of like nature was passed for the relief of certain districts in Iowa and Minnesota, which contained a provision exactly the same so far as it referred to those particular districts; and the fact was that they did return, and no law provided for the relief of those who happened to live in other districts upon public lands of the United States; and hence the necessity for the same relief being afforded wherever the same circumstances exist.

Mr. THURMAN. Then the provision ought to be that whenever the grasshoppers eat up the crops of a man who has settled on the public lands, he may leave those lands for a season. It ought to be general. The mere mention of such a bill in Congress last year, it seems, made the grasshoppers come this; and if we put it in this year, they will come next, and I do not know when they will stop coming. I think the best way is to strike out that part which relates to the year 1875; and I move that that be done.

Mr. HARVEY. If the Senator from Ohio will stop to consider, he will see that the bill only provides for so far ahead as Congress can safely go, leaving the future to be provided for by a future Congress if it shall become necessary. The difficulty with the former bill was that it did not provide, as it might have done, for the condition of affairs which we find now; and this bill has to relate back to the ravages committed by these insects last summer. I hope the Senator from Ohio will withdraw his motion to amend in that respect. The provisions of this bill were fully considered in the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I heartily approve of the object of this bill, but it seems to me it is very latitudinarian. There is no place specified where this law shall be applicable, except wherever the grasshoppers may have seriously interfered with the crops. This will leave it entirely to the discretion of the Department to say where this law shall apply and where it shall not. It seems to me that Senators may as well here and now define the localities where this bill is to be made to apply as to leave it to the discretion of the Department officers; for who can say how much the grasshoppers may destroy to make this bill applicable or not? I certainly think it ought to be limited to certain States or to particular counties, rather than to be left general in its application all over the country.

Mr. HARVEY. The Senator from Vermont may remember the fact that the bill passed last winter for this object provided for certain districts in certain States, and this year the ravages have been elsewhere in numerous other districts in other States and Territories. Already on the Calendar of the Senate there were three bills providing for different localities, and a number of others were being prepared; while in the House as many bills on the same subject had been prepared, each specifying a locality. This was the situation when the committee considered the subject. It would occupy the time of the Senate and House a good portion of this short session to provide for each district separately by a bill. The matter having been considered in the committee to whom all the bills on this subject that were introduced into the Senate were referred, the conclusion of the committee was that it was better to provide a bill that should meet the case wherever such a condition of affairs existed. That was the object in view in the preparation of this bill. That is why it was prepared as a substitute for other bills essentially the same in their provisions, but applying only to different localities. I hope gentlemen will be able to see the necessity for the early passage of such a measure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 1 by striking out the following words:

> And where such grasshoppers shall reappear in 1875 to the like destruction of the crops of settlers, the right to leave and be absent as aforesaid shall continue to July 1, 1876.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Mr. President, one word as to the amendment. My distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is a far-seeing man. I like him for it; I like his vigilance; and, sir, the idea has occurred to me in all probability that if the grasshoppers were to visit the country again next year, as he has a hope the democracy will, the country will not be able to stand both these plagues. [Laughter.] I think he is very prudent, and advises, perhaps, well upon that subject. Both of them could not be withstood by this mighty nation. Therefore I am disposed to look well to the grasshoppers in the first place, they being presented to us now for our action, and will in due time give my friend consideration upon the other branch of the subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. That would be nothing but a return of the kindness with which the democracy of Texas have taken care of my friend. [Laughter.] They have looked after him, and it is perfectly right that he should look after them. But I do not think, Mr. President, that we shall have many more plagues in this country after a few years. I think we are going to be free from all sorts of plagues, either of the grasshopper kind or the political kind.

But, in all seriousness, I do not want to anticipate that these grasshoppers are to come next year, and that we are to disarrange the whole homestead system of the public lands by a provision like that. What has taken place we know, and we can legislate upon it, and I am in favor of the bill if you strike out that provision in relation to the future; but if we shall make it a standing provision that when grasshoppers return—without saying how they are to return, what damage they are to do, and without any computation of the extent of damages but in the mere general language of the bill that if grasshoppers return next year—then the settler is to have until July, 1876, to be absent from his possession, it does seem to me to be overturning the homestead law. I am quite serious about this matter. There is no certainty about it. What is meant by grasshoppers returning? They return every year more or less, perhaps, in every State in this Union. What is meant by the language of the bill that, if grasshoppers return next year, then the settler may abandon his possession for eight months, or nearly a year, and yet that that year shall count for him although he is not in possession at all? This is a serious matter, Mr. President. I hope that the Senator from Kansas will agree that that part shall be stricken out, and then we can pass his bill.

Mr. HARVEY. I think if the Senator from Ohio will consider the matter he will see that if a provision of that kind had been made at the last session and the bill then passed had been general in its application, no necessity would have existed for the passage of this bill now. I am perfectly certain that had the Senator been within any of the districts affected by this plague he would not now insist upon his amendment. He may or may not be aware of the fact that in a certain portion of this continent these grasshoppers, or as they are more properly called locusts, are generated year after year, and it is impossible to anticipate in legislation where their ravages may be committed. One year they may come to one section or district, and the next year to another. It is therefore best and perfectly proper that this bill should pass as it is. Otherwise in many sections in many States and Territories those people who are living upon the public lands, enduring many hardships and contending against many other difficulties, would be discouraged and absolutely compelled to leave and return permanently to their former homes. These settlers are a worthy class of people. They were lately, many of them, your own immediate constituents; they have gone on the public lands in the new States and Territories in the hope of building up new homes. As I have said, they encounter many other difficulties. Certainly it is as little as the Congress of the United States can do to afford this relief, that they may in those sections where the crops have been utterly destroyed and none of their neighbors are able to give them employment be permitted to go away for a few months to more fortunate sections where employment and subsistence can be procured until they are able to return and perfect their settlements.

I sincerely hope that the Senator from Ohio will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY. Let the Senate vote it down.

Mr. HARVEY. I hope the Senate will vote it down if it is insisted on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the bill and amendment be read. I do not know that I fully understand them yet. I was not in when the bill was taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill and amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill and amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to know whether the phraseology of the bill is "where grasshoppers return next year" or "when grasshoppers return."

Mr. HARVEY. "Where."

Mr. CONKLING. "Where grasshoppers return."

Mr. HARVEY. The Senator from Massachusetts will remember that in committee that question was raised, and I suggested that the word should be "where." Probably the Senator from Ohio may have misapprehended the reading of the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, or the member who reported the bill, whether the bill is intended to provide that the time of absence mentioned in it shall be counted as so much occupancy under the homestead law; or whether the term of occupancy required by the homestead law must actually take place, and this only prevents the occupancy from being forfeited by this temporary lapse?

Mr. SPRAGUE. It is the latter.

Mr. THURMAN. It is only to obviate the necessity of continuous occupancy?

Mr. SPRAGUE. Certainly; the time is to be the same as under the present law.

Mr. THURMAN. The settlers are to continue to occupy precisely as at present; and the bill only relieves them from continuous occupancy. Is that it?

Mr. HARVEY. That is the object. It is only that adverse rights may not attach by reason of this permitted absence of the settler.

Mr. THURMAN. It is all right, then, on that point.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECEPTION OF KING OF SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Mr. CAMERON. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration:

> Resolved, That a joint committee of two from the Senate and three from the House of Representatives be appointed by the Chair to take measures for the proper notice of the presence at the capital of His Majesty Kalakaua, the King of the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. CARPENTER. What Chair is to make the appointment?

Mr. CAMERON. The President of the Senate will of course appoint two and the Speaker of the House will appoint three. The phraseology can be changed.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that he say the "Presiding Officer of each House."

Mr. CAMERON. Very well; let it be so altered.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I think the resolution had better lie over one day.

Mr. CAMERON. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will not object to the immediate passage of the resolution. If we are to do anything, we had better do it at once.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that be strike out the words "by the Chair," and add at the end "the Senators to be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate and the Members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker of the House."

Mr. CAMERON. I was about to take the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, which is shorter, and say "be appointed by the Presiding Officers of the respective Houses."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification will be made.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest also that it ought to be in the form of a concurrent resolution. "Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring.")

Mr. CAMERON. Very well

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That modification will be made.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3572, with a view to appoint a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3572) to amend existing customs and internal revenue laws, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments, and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the tax-bill of the last session, pending on a request for a committee of conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A customs or an internal-revenue bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Both. "The little tariff bill," it was called.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "The little tariff bill." I know it by that name.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, that the Senate further insist on its amendments to this bill and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to; and, the VICE-PRESIDENT being authorized by unanimous consent to appoint the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and Mr. COOPER were appointed.

BULK OF THE RECORD.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Printing be directed to inquire whether the volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD cannot be reduced in bulk without impairing its value as a record of the debates and proceedings in Congress.

REPORT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. SARGENT. During the last session the Senate passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of the Report of the Smithsonian Institution for 1873. The resolution went to the House of Representatives and was there passed with an amendment, the difference between the two Houses being that the House amendment somewhat increased the number of copies to be printed, assigning a portion to the House and a portion to the Senate. The Senate concurrent resolution simply provided for printing seventy-five hundred copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution. I ask that that resolution be considered, for the purpose of concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Senator from California moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution relative to printing the report of the Smithsonian Institution.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the condition of the question.

The CHIEF CLERK. On the 27th of February, 1874, the Senate passed the following resolution:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That seventy-five hundred additional copies of the Report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1873 be printed for the use of the Institution: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages of said report shall not exceed four hundred and fifty, and that there shall be no illustrations except those furnished by the Smithsonian Institution.

On the 15th of May following the House of Representatives passed the resolution with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "That" and insert:

Ten thousand five hundred copies of the Report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1873 be printed, two thousand copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, one thousand for the use of the Senate, and seventy-five hundred for the use of the Institution: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages of said report shall not exceed four hundred and fifty, and that there shall be no illustrations except those furnished by the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendment was concurred in.

LIBRARIAN'S REPORT.

Mr. HOWE. I submit the annual report of the Librarian of Congress, and move that it be referred to the Joint Committee on the Library, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. In that connection I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That five hundred extra copies of the annual report of the Librarian of Congress for the year 1874 be printed for distribution by the Librarian.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing under the rules.

TWENTY-FIRST JOINT RULE.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to consider and report upon the expediency of repealing or modifying the twenty-first joint rule of the two Houses of Congress.

OVERFLOWED LANDS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. HOWE. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3339.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3339) relating to the disposition of certain lands to be reclaimed in sections 14, 23, and 26 in township 16 north, of range 20, in the county of Sheboygan, in the State of Wisconsin, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that so much of the bed of the marsh or pond in sections 14, 23, and 26, in township 16 north, of range 20 east of the fourth principal meridian, in the county of Sheboygan, in the State of Wisconsin, as shall or may be reclaimed by draining the water from the same, shall be owned and held, so far as any rights or interests of the United States are concerned, by the owners of the lands abutting upon the marsh or pond, and draining the same to the center or thread thereof, and divided among the several owners adjoining and abutting the marsh or pond, according to the rules of law upon payment by the adjoining owners into the Treasury of the United States of $1.25 per acre for the amount of land that has been or may be so reclaimed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senate ought to have upon record some reason for this bill. Is there a report in the case?

Mr. HOWE. There is no written report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the Senator state the circumstances.

Mr. HOWE. There are parts of these three sections which were returned by the surveyors "covered by water," and never surveyed. The adjacent owners propose to deepen the outlet and drain off that water, and they propose to pay $1.25 an acre for so much of this unsurveyed swamp as they may recover from water. That is all there is of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why was not this land ceded to the State as swamp land?

Mr. HOWE. Simply because it was not surveyed by the surveyors; but accompanying the bill there is an act of the Legislature of Wisconsin transferring the right of the State. So that is all clear.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then there can be no conflict between the settlers and the State?

Mr. HOWE. None at all.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. BOREMAN was, on his motion, excused from further service on the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 3827) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in certain portions of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 3907) repealing section 3 of the act making appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government, and for other purposes, approved February 22, 1873; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3918) to relieve P. U. Murphy and John A. Brown, of Alabama, of political disabilities.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 11) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3822) making an appropriation to enable the Postmaster-General to carry into effect the law requiring the prepayment of postage on newspapers, approved June 25, 1874.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House in reference to the binding of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution in reference to the distribution of the reports of the Commissioner of Agriculture; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

DISTRICT BOARD OF AUDIT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the special order, which is the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Subject to the special order, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. R. No. 119) to continue the board of audit to examine and audit the unfunded or floating debt of the District of Columbia, have instructed me to report it back and recommend its passage, and I ask for the present consideration of the resolution, as it seems to be important that the duties of the board should be entered upon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that matter had better go over until to-morrow. I want to look at the joint resolution. My friend from Maine has no objection to its going over till to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had directed him to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes, recalled from the Senate for clerical correction.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the resolution of the Senate to appoint a joint committee to take measures for the proper notice of the presence at the capital of His Majesty Kalakaua, King of the Hawaiian Islands; and had appointed Mr. GODLOVE S. ORTH of Indiana, Mr. E. ROCKWOOD HOAR of Massachusetts, and Mr. SAMUEL S. COX of New York, the committee on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 3822) making an appropriation to enable the Postmaster-General to carry into effect the law requiring the prepayment of postage on newspapers, approved June 25, 1874; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3743) to reimburse the city of Boston for certain expenses incurred in the improvement of Chelsea street, (formerly Charlestown,) in connection with the United States navy-yard.

REPORTS OF COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That one-third of the reports of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the years 1872 and 1873, printed upon the appropriation of $50,000 by the act of June 23, 1874, be delivered to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, and that two-thirds of the said reports be delivered to the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, for distribution among the people by Senators and Representatives.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 3827) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in certain portions of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and Kansas—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (H. R. No. 3907) repealing section 3 of the act making appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government, and for other purposes, approved February 22, 1873—to the Committee on Appropriations.

A bill (H. R. No. 3918) to relieve P. U. Murphy and J. A. Brown, of Alabama, of political disabilities—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE STEAMBOAT LAW.

Mr. SCOTT. House bill No. 1588, which has just been returned from the House of Representatives, we are informed was sent for by them for clerical correction. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and at his request, I move that, instead of that bill going to the committee, it be now restored to its place on the Calendar, as it was simply returned to the House to correct a clerical mistake.

The motion was agreed to.

RECEPTION OF KING OF HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. CAMERON and MCCREERY as members of the joint committee on the part of the Senate to take measures for the proper notice of the presence at the capital of the King of the Hawaiian Islands.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY.) The special order is the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read a second time by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to have this bill first read at length, and after that, if it shall be the pleasure of the Senate, I will make some explanation of its features.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and having occupied two hours and a half in reading fifty-two sections—

Mr. ANTHONY. It is time to adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In a moment. I am advised by the officers of the document-room that the demand for this bill by those who are specially interested in it in the District has outrun the supply very much, and that it will be a convenience if a larger number of the bill could be printed, say some three or four hundred copies. I would not propose more than that. I move that three hundred additional copies of the bill be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is, with the understanding that this bill retains its place on the Calendar for to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at three o'clock and thirty-three minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 14, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference and printing. The morning hour begins at ten minutes after twelve o'clock.

ABRAANNA DUNN.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3919) for the relief of Abraanna Dunn; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT JUDGE OF VERMONT.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3920) for the relief of the district judge of Vermont; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SAINT ALBANS RAID CLAIMS.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, also presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Vermont, in relation to the so-called Saint Albans raid claims; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ISAAC H. TOWER.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3921) for the relief of Isaac H. Tower, of Dedham, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH BALLISTER.

Mr. HOOPER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3922) for the relief of Joseph Ballister; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH WARREN MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. PIERCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3923) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver certain condemned ordnance to the Joseph Warren Monument Association, of Boston, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RUDOLF EICKEMEYER.

Mr. EAMES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3924) to enable Rudolf Eickemeyer to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of letters-patents for a machine for stitching linings into hats; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

STONINGTON HARBOR, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. STARKWEATHER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3925) for continuing the improvement of Stonington Harbor, Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

STAMPS ON CHECKS, ETC.

Mr. STARKWEATHER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3926) to repeal all acts requiring stamps on checks, drafts, and orders for the payment of money; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TORNADO OF JULY 4, 1874.

Mr. KELLOGG introduced a bill (H. R. Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4023) for the relief of the heirs of Abraham Livingstone, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

MICHAEL NASH.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4024) for the relief of Michael Nash, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGETOWN AND TENALLYTOWN RAILROAD.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4025) to incorporate the Georgetown and Tenallytown Railroad, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4026) to amend an act entitled, "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

He also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4027) for the government of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The States and Territories having been called through for bills and joint resolutions on leave for reference only to their appropriate committees, the next business in order is the call of States for resolutions. Heretofore the more usual practice has been at the commencement of a second or subsequent session of Congress to begin the call at the beginning of the list of States. The Chair thinks that a fair interpretation of the rule, in conjunction with the taking up the call of committees where it ended at the close of the last session, is to have the call of States for resolutions begin with the State where the call rested at the close of the session. Although that is a new ruling, the Chair will venture to make it now in connection with the ruling made the other day. The call, therefore, rests with the State of Georgia.

SOUTHERN MAILS.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Under this call, I introduce a bill authorizing the settlement of certain accounts in the Post-Office Department.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman offered a bill before under this call?

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I have.

The SPEAKER. Then it requires unanimous consent for the gentleman to offer a second bill.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the accounts now audited by the proper officers of the Government, for carrying the mails of the United States previous to April, 1861, provided that not more than the sum of $200,000 be paid out.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I raise the point of order that this bill, making an appropriation, should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, and the bill will be so referred.

Accordingly, the bill (H. R. No. 4028) was received, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

PAYMENT OF DUTIES ON IMPORTS IN LEGAL-TENDERS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4029) authorizing the payment of one-half of the duties on imports in legal-tenders or national-bank notes instead of gold; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order that this bill, relating to a tax or charge upon the people and affecting the revenue, should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill will be so referred.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole, and ordered to be printed.

AFFAIRS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. CALDWELL submitted the following resolutions, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to furnish to the House a detailed statement showing the number of United States troops stationed in the State of Alabama on the 3d day of November, 1874, and their distribution, whether in regiments, companies, or squads, and the places at which said troops were located, and whether said troops acted independently or as a posse of the United States marshal.

Resolved further, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to furnish to the House a detailed statement of the manner in which he has executed the provisions of joint resolution passed at the first session of the Forty-third Congress authorizing the President of the United States to issue Army rations and clothing to the destitute people of the Tombigbee, Warrior, and Alabama Rivers, in the State of Alabama, showing the amount and kind of provisions distributed, the times at which, the places where, and to what persons said provisions were distributed; and also such further information as he may be in possession of respecting the distribution of said provisions by persons not in the military service of the United States.

Mr. GARFIELD. The law of last session requires just such a report as this resolution proposes to call for.

The SPEAKER. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 61, noes 89.

Mr. CALDWELL and Mr. FINCK called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KASSON. Is it too late to make the point of order that this resolution, being a call for executive information, must, under the rule, lie over for one day?

The SPEAKER. The point of order would be too late even if it were good. The previous question having been seconded and the main question ordered, the House must dispose of the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I was under the impression that the rules required a delay of one day in acting upon resolutions calling for executive information.

The SPEAKER. They do; and that point would have been enforced if it had been made in time.

Mr. POTTER. Would it apply to a resolution offered under a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. This resolution is not offered in the form of a motion to suspend the rules. The point would have been good if it had been made in time; but it cannot be made after the previous question has been seconded. The Chair gives notice to gentlemen that the business of Monday morning will bear close watching if they want to save their points of order.

Mr. CONGER. Is not this resolution divisible?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. CONGER. It embraces two distinct subjects.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is operating upon the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I am inclined still to press my point, owing to the fact that while the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] was on the floor, as he will remember, I made (though I presume I was not heard by the Chair) the point that the resolution must lie over one day. I think that this is the proper course; not that I am not perfectly willing to obtain all proper information, but the resolution calls for what I believe it will be impossible to furnish—the name of every person to whom relief has been given.

Mr. RANDALL. If it is impossible to furnish that information the Secretary of War can say so when he comes to answer.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Iowa did make that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that he submitted quite as deliberately as is the habit in the morning hour of Monday the question whether the previous question should be seconded, and it was seconded nem. con. and the main question was considered as ordered. It was quite within the power of the vote which viva voce refused to pass the resolution to refuse to second the previous question, in which case the resolution would not have been before the House. The Chair heard no point made in time; and the previous question being seconded, it is the duty of the Chair to rule that the point, being made afterward, comes too late. The resolution is therefore properly before the House. On its passage the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I make that motion for the purpose of moving a reference of this resolution to an appropriate committee.

Mr. RANDALL. How did the gentleman from New York vote upon ordering the main question?

The SPEAKER. That cannot be told; there is no record.

Mr. RANDALL. It is very well understood how he voted.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It seems to me that the gentleman from New York ought not to insist on smothering this resolution. That is evidently his purpose. Why should we not take a vote now upon the resolution? The information proposed to be called for is valuable.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point that debate is not in order.

Mr. COX. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BECK. Is it in order now to insist upon the point that the gentleman from New York not having voted with the prevailing side, cannot move to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. O, no. It has been ruled times without number that, where there is no record of a vote, the right of any member to move a reconsideration cannot be called in question, even though he may have been recognized by everybody in the House as having voted against the prevailing side.

Mr. RANDALL. Still the fact that the gentleman from New York did so vote is worthy of passing notice.

The SPEAKER. That may be, but it is not a matter for the Chair.

Mr. BECK. The gentleman from New York will not say that he did not vote against ordering the main question.

The SPEAKER. That does not affect the question. The rule is well settled that only upon a recorded vote can a question be raised as to the inability of a member to make a motion to reconsider. The gentleman from New York is quite in order in making his motion. The question is upon ordering the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 93, nays 138, not voting 59, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Averill, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Begole, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Roderick R. Butler, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Coburn, Conger, Corwin, Crocker, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Farwell, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hyde, Lansing, Lewis, Lowndes, Lynch, Maynard, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, McNulta, Moore, Myers, Negley, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Packard, Packer, Isaac C. Parker, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Rainey, Ray, Richmond, Sawyer, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, St. John, Strait, Strawbridge, Christopher Y. Thomas, Todd, Tyner, Wallace, Marcus L. Ward, Whiteley, Wilber, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, and William Williams—93.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barber, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buffinton, Burrows, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Danford, Davis, Dawes, DeWitt, Durham, Eames, Eldredge, Field, Finck, Fort, Foster, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Joseph R. Hawley, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hunter, Hunton, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Lamison, Lawrence, Lawson, Leach, Loughridge, Luttrell, Magee, Marshall, James W. McDill, McJunkin, McLean, Merriam, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morey, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, Orr, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Phillips, Pierce, James H. Platt, jr., Potter, Randall, Read, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Milton Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloan, Sloss, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Stanard, Starkweather, Stephens, Stone, Storm, Swann, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tremain, Vance, Waddell, Waldron, Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodworth, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—138.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Barnum, Biery, Bradley, Buckner, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Chittenden, Freeman Clarke, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Cotton, Creamer, Crooke, Darrall, Eden, Freeman, Eugene Hale, Harmer, Harrison, Havens, Hays, Hendee, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hurlbut, Hynes, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lamport, Lofland, Lowe, Martin, McCrary, Mitchell, Niles, Parsons, Pelham, Poland, Purman, Ransier, Rapier, Rice, William R. Roberts, Ross, Rusk, Henry B. Sayler, Sener, Sheldon, George L. Smith, J. Ambler Smith, Standeford, Stowell, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Walls, and Jasper D. Ward—59.

So the House refused to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. CALDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM F. CORBETT.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of William F. Corbett, late an employé of the House, a sum equal to his pay for three months and his proper funeral expenses.

Mr. RANDALL. More than a passing word is due to this officer. He came here in the Thirty-fourth Congress, and therefore has been here nearly twenty years. During the whole of that period he has proved to be a faithful, upright officer; and in offering this resolution, which is the usual one in like cases, I have thought it due to his memory, and as some satisfaction to his friends, to thus publicly acknowledge his fidelity to the duties assigned him during his long period of public service.

Mr. GARFIELD. Did he die in the service?

Mr. RANDALL. He died last night in this city while in the service of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

MILITARY ASYLUM FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. WHEELER moved to suspend the rules and adopt the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be so suspended that when the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the next fiscal year shall be under consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union propositions may be submitted for the consideration of the committee for changing the mode of appropriations to any public objects now recognized by law; and, if such change shall be made, for appropriations in said bill in conformity therewith.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that resolution is very far from being clear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York desires to make a brief explanation. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SPEER. There must be some words omitted in the resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. The simple purpose I have in view is to save the Government an annual expenditure of $100,000 in one single appropriation, and that is that the Congress of the United States shall appropriate money for a certain object, which I will not name now, instead of its being appropriated through the machinery of one of the Departments of the Government.

Mr. SPEER. Does the resolution accomplish that purpose?

Mr. WHEELER. The committee will accomplish the purpose if it is accomplished at all. I simply propose to get the right to submit the proposition.

Mr. SPEER. Is there not some omission in the language of the resolution?

Mr. WHEELER. I think not. Let the Clerk report the resolution again.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman from New York will allow me, I would say that I think the language he employs in his resolution is broader than should be adopted under a suspension of the rules. Almost anything, it seems to me, could be brought in under that language.

Mr. WHEELER. The case I have referred to is exceptional. There is no case in this Government except this particular one where an appropriation is made by a Department.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The difficulty is that under this anything may be brought in.

Mr. HOLMAN. The resolution is too broad in its language.

Mr. WHEELER. I will state to the House what I want. The appropriations for the military asylum for the disabled volunteers of this country are made through the Second Auditor's Office instead of being made through the Congress of the United States; and my sole object is to so change the law as that the money shall be directly appropriated in an appropriation bill. I desire that the committee, if this should be assented to, shall have the right to appropriate directly for this purpose in the legislative bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no doubt the whole House would be ready to grant the gentleman's request; but I would not be willing to word the resolution in that broad way.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] will modify his resolution so as to meet the precise case he has in view, he will be recognized at a later period of this day's proceedings.

Mr. WHEELER. I have modified the resolution so that it will refer to this particular appropriation only.

Mr. NEGLEY. I desire to make an appeal to the gentleman from New York to withhold the resolution until General BUTLER, who is president of the commission, shall be present.

Mr. WHEELER. This has nothing to do with General BUTLER, or with the organization of the asylum. It simply respects the appropriation of this money. It does not affect the organization at all. It is not intended to reflect upon the administration of the institution at all. It only goes to the mode of supporting this institution, which costs this Government now $100,000 for simply useless office machinery, whereas the aid given to it should be by a direct appropriation.

PAVILION HOSPITAL AT HYANNIS, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. BUFFINTON. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution asking for information:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to the House his opinion as to the feasibility and expense of the erection of a pavilion hospital as Hyannis, Massachusetts.

Mr. CONGER. Let that resolution go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BUFFINTON. It is merely a resolution asking for information.

Mr. CONGER. The committee has that subject under consideration now, and the resolution should be referred to it.

Mr. BUFFINTON. I hope the gentleman will not insist on having the resolution referred.

The resolution was adopted.

PROTECTION OF LIVES OF PASSENGERS.

The SPEAKER. Last week the House, in order to correct an error in enrollment, requested the Senate to return the bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to security of life on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes. The Clerk advises the Chair that the correction in enrollment has been made, and an order of the House is required to send back the bill to the Senate. If there be no objection the bill will be sent back to the Senate correctly enrolled.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REVISION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SPEER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Rules, and ordered to be printed;

Resolved, That the Committee on the Rules be directed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a rule limiting the time during which any remarks delivered in the House may be withheld from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for revision.

JURISDICTION OF CRIMINAL COURT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PHELPS. In pursuance of notice given on Monday last, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for present consideration a bill to amend an act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the criminal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1874.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the second section of an act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the criminal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1874, be, and hereby is, so amended as to read:

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the thirty-third section of the judiciary act of 1789 shall apply in all cases, except in proceedings for libel, to courts created by act of Congress in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill now.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I object.

Mr. PHELPS. Then I move that the rules be suspended, in order that this bill may be now considered.

Mr. McKEE. Voted upon or considered?

The SPEAKER. If the motion prevails, it leaves the bill open for debate.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. For how long?

Mr. PHELPS. If the motion should prevail, it was simply my intention to take three or possibly five minutes in which to state the simple scope of the bill, and then move the previous question, unless it appeared that there were other members of the House who wished to discuss the question. In that event I shall yield the balance of my time to members who wish to prosecute the discussion, and at the end of the hour shall take the floor to move the previous question, and that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the House will not enter upon anything that will consume the entire day. There are some important motions to be made to suspend the rules needed for the appropriation bills to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. If this motion is not seconded, such motions will be in order.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I beg to say a single word, and it is this: that I made the objection to the consideration of this bill for the reason that I think all such legislation should go to an appropriate committee, and for that reason I hope the House will refuse to suspend the rules.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from New Jersey to waive his motion, so as to allow me to make a motion for a suspension of the rules in regard to the appropriation bill that comes up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. A great many gentlemen are pressing for a suspension of the rules, and the Chair took up this motion because there was a notification that it would be offered, which he could not disregard.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Is this the bill which was proposed last Monday, and which applies solely to civil proceedings, and not to criminal proceedings?

Mr. PHELPS. It applies to criminal proceedings.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. That bill did not.

MILITARY ASYLUM.

Mr. WHEELER. I have now modified my resolution, and I ask its adoption in a form to which I think there will be no objection.

The resolution, as modified, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be so suspended that when the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the next fiscal year shall be under consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union a proposition may be submitted for consideration by the committee for changing the mode of appropriation to the military asylum for disabled volunteers; and if such change shall be made, for appropriations in that bill in conformity therewith.

LIBEL CASES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. PHELPS to suspend the rules.

Mr. McKEE. Would it not be as parliamentary for the gentleman from New Jersey to move to take up this question to-morrow, and not to occupy Monday, when there are so many other motions to be made?

The SPEAKER. The House can do whatever it chooses by a suspension of the rules.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman from New Jersey will urge the immediate passage of this bill. It ought to be passed before we do anything else.

Mr. McKEE. I wish to offer a resolution concerning the troubles in Vicksburgh, where men are being slaughtered, and which is a matter quite as important as libel suits in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PHELPS. We might have passed the bill by this time.

Mr. COX. Every one knows what is in the bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I hope the gentleman will move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. PHELPS. I am quite willing.

Mr. POLAND. I protest against any proceeding of that sort. I think every gentleman in this House will say that a bill of this sort, under the circumstances attending it, ought not to be passed without opportunity being afforded to the Committee on the Judiciary and to myself, who reported the original bill, to make some explanation on the subject and state some views in reference to it. I would ask the gentleman from New Jersey that he have his bill referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. We are to be called within a very few days. There are only one or two committees before the Committee on the Judiciary on the call. A bill has already been introduced this morning for a modification of this law by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TREMAIN,] and I have prepared another that I will submit to the committee, and I will agree to an early report on this subject, in some form, as soon as the committee is called; or, I have no objection to the committee being allowed to report at any time. But after all that has been said on this subject, and some slight allusion that has been made to me in relation to it, I think every gentleman on this floor will see that I ought to be entitled to say at least a few words in regard to it.

Mr. SPEER. I thought the gentleman had made his explanation before the country.

Mr. POLAND. I never had the opportunity.

Mr. COX. Is it in order for me to move to put the bill upon its passage?

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules is not amendable. The gentleman has a right to state the motion which he desires to offer; but the pending motion is that the rules be suspended and the bill brought before the House for consideration.

Mr. BECK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does not this motion throw the subject open to debate indefinitely?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] indicates his purpose to call the previous question at furthest at the end of one hour, and he will be entitled to the floor; but if the House does not sustain that motion, of course the bill will remain before it until disposed of, during the entire session, and will be ahead of all other matters.

The question now is upon seconding the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey to suspend the rules that the bill offered by him may be brought before the House for consideration.

Mr. COX. And if that motion be voted down will I have an opportunity to move to suspend the rules and put the bill upon its passage?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman having addressed the Chair and stated his desire so to do, he will be entitled to the floor.

Mr. MAYNARD. And if the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey should be voted down, could I have the floor to move to refer the bill to the proper committee?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York spoke first.

The question was taken on seconding Mr. PHELPS's motion to suspend the rules; and on a division there were—ayes 57, noes not counted.

So the motion was not seconded.

Mr. COX. I move to so suspend the rules as to pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is the same bill as that just submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. PHELPS.]

Mr. POLAND. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] should be voted down, will it be in order for me to move to suspend the rules and refer this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, or the Revision of the Laws?

The SPEAKER. It might be in order for the gentleman to introduce a bill and move such a reference, but this bill will not be before the House unless the motion to suspend the rules shall be adopted.

The question was taken on seconding the motion of Mr. COX; and upon a division there were—ayes 76, noes 87.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. COX and Mr. MAYNARD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 68, noes 110.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

Mr. MAYNARD. I now introduce the bill which has been submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] and which I hold in my hand, and move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman to amend his motion so as to give the committee leave to report upon the subject at any time.

Mr. POLAND. The committee will report promptly.

Mr. SPEER. The effect of the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] as submitted by him will be to kill the bill, if that is not his purpose.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will accept the suggestion, as it comes from both sides of the House, and move to suspend the rules and refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman to except the appropriation bills; that is, that the bill shall not interfere with the appropriation bills. I will keep out of his road as far as I can; but I do not want any committee to have the right to stop our work on the appropriation bills.

Mr. POLAND. That is right.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not know that I will object to that.

The SPEAKER. A great many of these exceptions are made, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] will observe, when they really have no significance. For example: if the Committee on the Judiciary should report back this bill at any time, and it should be under consideration, the majority of the House can go into Committee of the Whole on the appropriation bills.

Mr. MAYNARD. Then let the motion stand as I have modified it, to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. That will leave the majority of the House to control its own business.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded. The rules were suspended; and the bill (H. R. No. 4030) referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with leave to report at any time.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the rules be so suspended as to make in order certain clauses and provisions in the legislative appropriation bill as printed. I will say to the House that these clauses are all in the interest of economy, as gentlemen will see when they are read. I ask the Clerk to read them.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerks to committees, $30,000; and hereafter clerks of committees of either branch of Congress (except those whose salaries are fixed by specific appropriations) shall be paid not more than five dollars per day, and during the session only. [Pages 4, 5.]

Mr. SPEER. The effect of that will be to reduce the pay of the democratic clerks of the next House from what is now paid to the republican clerks.

Mr. GARFIELD. It raises the pay of the House clerks and decreases the pay of the Senate clerks. The ungracious remark of the gentleman leads me to say that the provision does exactly the opposite from what he intimates.

The Clerk read the following:

Provided, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1875, the fees on money-orders shall be, for orders not exceeding fifteen dollars, ten cents; exceeding fifteen and not exceeding thirty dollars, fifteen cents; exceeding thirty and not exceeding forty dollars, twenty cents; exceeding forty and not exceeding fifty dollars, twenty-five cents; and no money-order shall be issued for a sum greater than fifty dollars. [Page 21.]

Mr. GARFIELD. This is restoring the old rate. It was reduced, and the reduction has brought the Money-Order Department into debt; that is, it does not pay expenses, and we propose to restore the old rate.

The Clerk read the following:

And so much of the act entitled "An act to provide for the better organization of the Treasury, and for the collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public revenue," approved August 6, 1846, and of all other acts and parts of acts authorizing the office of assistant treasurer of the United States at Charleston, South Carolina, is hereby repealed from and after the 30th day of June, 1875. [Pages 30, 31.]

And hereafter all public or official printing of laws, journals, and other official documents for the territorial governments, now done at the expense of the General Government, shall be done only at the Government Printing Office, Washington, District of Columbia. [Page 38.]

Provided, That hereafter no payment shall be made as salaries to clerks of class one, two, three, or four in said Department out of appropriations made for other purposes. [Page 64.]

Provided, That the provisions of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, approved June 16, 1874, which prohibit the allowance of mileage to persons holding employment or appointment under the United States, shall not be so construed as to apply to the legal traveling fees of United States marshals or deputy marshals. [Page 69.]

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the heads of the several Executive Departments, and of other officers authorized or required to make estimates, to furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury, on or before the 1st day of October of each year, their annual estimates for the public service, to be included in the Book of Estimates prepared by law under his direction. [Pages 74, 75.]

Mr. GARFIELD. With the permission of the House I will say that these several provisions, seven in number, are all in the direction of economy, as the House will see when we come to the discussion of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Except the first, which I believe increases salaries.

Mr. GARFIELD. No; the Senate clerks now get from $7 to $7.50 a day, and are employed all the year round. Almost every committee of the Senate has a clerk, and almost every Senator. The House clerks are paid about $4.80 a day, except those that are on an annual salary. We wanted to find one rate that should apply to committee clerks in both branches; and as five dollars was the nearest sum to our figure, and as it would bring down the Senate clerks two dollars at least, and make a total considerable saving and at the same time equalize the salaries, we thought it fair to put it at that figure.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman to include in the clause relating to marshals' fees the district attorneys' fees.

Mr. GARFIELD. That will be in order as a germane amendment. The subject is made in order by this clause.

Mr. CONGER. If this would be in order as an amendment, very well; but I think it might properly be inserted now.

Mr. GARFIELD. I could not, of course, undertake to amend the bill here now.

Mr. CONGER. But the gentleman might amend his proposition.

Mr. GARFIELD. But the proposition is in print in the bill. I ask unanimous consent that these propositions be made in order. If there be objection I shall move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing these propositions to be considered in order when the bill shall be before the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object, inasmuch as the proposition is simply to allow the matter to come before the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That is the whole proposition.

There being no objection, the motion of Mr. GARFIELD was agreed to.

SAFE BURGLARY CONSPIRACY.

Mr. BECK. I ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution which I send to the desk. If objection be made, I shall move to suspend the rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five members of the House be appointed by the Speaker to inquire whether any officer or official of the Government of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or person or persons in the employ of the Government of the United States or of said District, or other person or persons, has or have used any means to obstruct the administration of the law in said District, and especially with reference to the recent trial and other proceedings in the so-called "safe burglary conspiracy;" that said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during the sessions of the House; shall report what, if any, action is necessary to be taken by the House in the premises aforesaid and in regard to said case, and shall have leave to report at any time.

Mr. BECK. It is proper I should say in advance that of course I do not desire to be chairman of this committee, if it should be appointed. I concede that the position would belong to the majority side of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the adoption of the resolution?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. BECK. Then I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.

The question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 89, noes 67.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question then recurred on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. KELLOGG. Why not provide that this investigation shall be conducted by the District Committee, instead of a special committee?

Mr. BECK. Because a report ought to be had on this matter immediately; and it can be had.

Mr. KELLOGG. Why cannot the Committee on the District of Columbia make the investigation?

Mr. BECK. They cannot do it properly. There are too many men in this District involved in this matter. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 88, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Caldwell, Cannon, Cason, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crittenden, Crocker, Crossland, Crutchfield, DeWitt, Dobbins, Durham, Eames, Eldredge, Farwell, Finck, Fort, Giddings, Glover, Gunckel, Hamilton, Hancock, Benjamin W. Roberts, Ross, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sheldon, George L. Smith, John Q. Smith, Standiford, Stephens, Sypher, Waldron, Walls, and Wheeler—64.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 1023) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 3339) relating to the disposition of certain lands to be reclaimed in sections 14, 23, and 26, in township 16 north, of range 20, in the County of Sheboygan, in the State of Wisconsin.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 3572) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws and for other purposes, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and Mr. COOPER.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the resolution of the Senate providing for printing additional copies of the Report of the Smithsonian Institution for 1873.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a resolution (in which the concurrence of the House was requested) for the appointment of a joint committee, on the part of the two Houses, to take measures for the proper notice of the presence at the capital of His Majesty Kalakaua, King of the Hawaiian Islands; and had appointed as such committee, on the part of the Senate, Mr. CAMERON and Mr. MCCREERY.

TROUBLES IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. MCKEE. I ask unanimous consent to submit for adoption the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Speaker to proceed to Vicksburgh, in the State of Mississippi, to investigate and report all the facts relative to the recent troubles in that State, and especially in Warren County; the committee to have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and leave to report at any time.

Mr. KASSON. Let me ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether there is not now a committee having charge of that general subject, and a committee appointed at this very session of Congress?

Mr. SPEER. The word "political" should be inserted in the resolution before the word "troubles."

Mr. KASSON. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi that the investigation should be done by the already-existing committee to which I have referred, or by a sub-committee of that committee, instead of multiplying committees of investigation in this way.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Speaker, as one of the Representatives of the State of Mississippi, I desire to say that I hope the House will adopt the resolution which the gentleman has just offered. I will take further occasion to say, sir, that the citizens of Vicksburgh, in Warren County, the county specified in that resolution, do not shrink from that investigation there proposed; that they court it, and are only anxious that all the facts connected with that transaction, as well as the causes which produced it, shall be fully exposed to the country.

Mr. MCKEE. It was under the inspiration of the eloquent words of my colleague in his Sumner oration—"My country, know one another and you will love one another"—that I offered the resolution. I know they will fall in love with my constituency, and therefore I have submitted the resolution.

Mr. NIBLACK. Is not this a local and not a national matter? I do not, however, make any objection to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. LAMAR. I hope my friend from Indiana will not object to the resolution.

Mr. NIBLACK. I am not making objection to the adoption of the resolution, but merely suggesting this is a local and not a national matter.

Mr. MCKEE. My colleague and I agree that we want all the facts to go before the country. Perhaps it is a local matter, and perhaps it is a national one.

Mr. NIBLACK. I do not object to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Is the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MCKEE] who offered the resolution ready to answer how he voted on the proposition to investigate the affairs of South Carolina? Did he not then consider that was a subject beyond the jurisdiction of Congress?

Mr. MCKEE. There has not been any question about affairs in South Carolina since I have been in the House to-day.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi to allow me a single word. I hope for one this matter will be investigated. A portion of the people of this country thinks that these murders are exaggerated. If they are, let us know it; but do not call the murder or killing of fifty men in the peace of the United States a local affair. That is not a local affair. It is an affair we ought to investigate and provide proper punishment for, whoever has done the wrong; I do not care who it is.

Mr. ELDREDGE. A murder in Mississippi is not any worse than a murder in Massachusetts, and not more local than a murder in Massachusetts. A murder in Pennsylvania is not less local than a murder in Mississippi or anywhere else they have recently occurred.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Wherever there is a murder of citizens of the United States I, for one, am for investigation.

Mr. RANDALL. And, also, investigation as to who prompted the troubles.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No matter who prompted the troubles, let the investigation go on. Is not this quite as much a national affair as the safe-burglary resolution which has just been voted on? Is not this as much of a national affair as that?

Mr. RANDALL. The difference between this and that side of the House is, that while we voted for the adoption of that resolution you voted against it, and against any investigation into the facts of the safe-burglary business.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I voted against a matter which is now before the courts.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. BECK. As the safe-burglary business has been referred to in this debate, I desire, Mr. Speaker, to say a word. I expect to vote for this resolution relative to Mississippi, as I have done for others of a like character. The wrongs done by officials in the District of Columbia in reference to this safe-burglary conspiracy are as well known to gentlemen who voted against the adoption of my resolution as they are to me or to any gentleman who voted for the adoption of it. They know that the investigation I proposed would reach high officials of this Government; and they know that it was for that reason Mr. Riddle was dismissed by Attorney-General Williams from the further prosecution of the case before the courts. These facts are well known, and therefore it is the other side of the House refuse to adopt my resolution, in order to hide these outrages from public knowledge.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The courts have the subject before them now.

Mr. BECK. The fact is just the reverse. The Government has abandoned the prosecution. It was before the courts, but the Attorney-General of the United States discharged Mr. Riddle, the special prosecuting attorney in the case, and stopped all further prosecution of the accused in the safe-burglary conspiracy, and for no other reason anybody can discover than to prevent the guilty parties from being discovered and exposed to punishment.

Mr. MOREY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this investigation, but do not want unnecessarily to multiply the committees of the House. We have now a committee charged with the consideration of that portion of the President's message which refers to southern outrages; and I think that that committee, created for that purpose, can either itself or by some sub-committee of that committee, investigate this matter.

Mr. NEGLEY. And report to this Congress? It is not possible, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOREY. Therefore I offer what I send to the desk as a substitute for the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MCKEE] yield for that?

Mr. MCKEE. I yield to have the resolution read, reserving the right to object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee on outrages in the Southern States be authorized to visit such points in the South, as a committee or by sub-committees, as they may deem proper, in pursuing the investigation of the subject with which they are charged, and said committee are hereby authorized to send for persons and papers and to summon witnesses.

Mr. MCKEE. I object to that, because the committee will have enough to do at Vicksburgh to be able to report in short order. Besides, we want this kept distinct and separate from other investigations.

Mr. SENER. I object to further debate.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) and Mr. MCKEE's resolution was adopted.

KING OF THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. ORTH. I ask consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the concurrent resolution received from the Senate in reference to the King of the Hawaiian Islands.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, December 14, 1874.

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That a joint committee of two from the Senate and three from the House of Representatives be appointed by the Presiding Officers of the respective Houses to take measures for the proper notice of the presence in the capital of His Majesty Kalakaua, the King of the Hawaiian Islands.

Ordered, That Mr. CAMERON and Mr. MCCREERY be the committee on the part of the Senate.

There being no objection, the resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and concurred in.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair names as the members of the committee just ordered Mr. ORTH of Indiana, Mr. E. ROCKWOOD HOAR of Massachusetts, and Mr. COX of New York.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3743) to reimburse the city of Boston for certain expenses incurred in the improvement of Chelsea street, (formerly Charlestown,) in connection with the United States navy-yard; and

An act (H. R. No. 3822) making an appropriation to enable the Postmaster-General to carry into effect the law requiring the prepayment of postage on newspapers, approved June 25, 1874.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. PARSONS. I ask unanimous consent to make a very brief personal explanation.

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to an editorial in the New York Tribune of Friday last, imputing to me a knowledge of the alleged improper disposition of a large sum of money by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, to influence the action of Congress in granting the subsidy to that company. I desire to deny in the broadest manner this insinuation. I have no knowledge that any money or other consideration was paid to any member of Congress to procure the passage of that bill, and I was not a member of the Congress which passed it.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question, whether he was paid any money in connection with that bill?

Mr. PARSONS. I was, as the attorney of the company.

THE ROLLIN WHITE PATENT.

Mr. KELLOGG. I rise to a question of privilege. I ask a single moment to make a statement in regard to the debate of Friday last. I was not in the House when a portion of the remarks of my friend from New York [Mr. HALE] were made; and I ask that the following paragraph be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

I say, and I make the assertion upon my own responsibility, that corrupt expenditures of money have been made by the parties opposing the passage of this bill to an extent that should have the thorough investigation of this House, and when the facts appear should be met with due and proper punishment.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is all I ask to have read. I did not hear this remark of the gentleman from New York, as I was called out for a moment, or I should have called the attention of the House to it at the time. I find from the report in the RECORD that my friend from New York said that in making this statement he did not refer to the present Congress. Now, that bill has been pending here in the last three Congresses; and I ask the gentleman now if he makes a charge that anybody has corruptly used money in Congress in opposing it, or if there has ever been corruption in opposing that bill in any one of those three Congresses?

Mr. HALE, of New York. I am happy to answer the gentleman from Connecticut by reiterating in its length and breadth every word I uttered in that debate; and I do not propose to be cross-examined by him on this floor as to anything outside of that.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then, with the consent of the House, I desire simply to say that the gentleman from New York, having made that charge, ought to prove his charges, or he will stand before the House and the country as having made a libelous charge, and one without any foundation in fact. He said distinctly when he made the charge that he did not mean the Remingtons of New York. The only other opponents were leading manufacturing corporations from my own State, whose officers and agents are men of high honor and integrity. I know of none from my district opposing it in this Congress, but men of the highest integrity in my State have opposed it in this and previous sessions of Congress. And I say here and now that I do not believe one penny has ever been used corruptly. And I call upon the gentleman from New York, and challenge him here and now, if he has such facts as he claims, to move for a committee of investigation. He may be the chairman of it for aught I care if he wishes, and I will unite in asking that he be made the chairman of it. And I will demand of him to make good before such committee what he has stated on his own responsibility, or stand before the House and the country as having made a libelous charge without the slightest foundation in fact.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Amen!

Mr. HALE, of New York. I trust the House will give me a minute to answer the one gentleman from Connecticut, who moves this, and the other gentleman who seconds with his pious ejaculation of "Amen." They are not to dictate to me the course I shall pursue as a member of this House. Every word I uttered on Friday I repeat, and I aver it on my own responsibility to be susceptible of proof. In my own good time and way I promise the gentlemen they shall have proof to their entire satisfaction.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. You will not be allowed to forget it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I only referred to the matter because it was charged on the responsibility of a member of this House. We all know the gentleman from New York, and how very good tempered a gentleman he is. We know he does not lose his temper. But he once before made a similar charge on the floor of this House without the slightest foundation in fact, and he has done the same thing in the same temper now.

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR MONDAY NEXT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] obtained permission to bring before the House to-day for one hour a bill from the Committee on Commerce. He now asks that instead of bringing it up to-day, the privilege be accorded him for Monday next. If there be no objection, the order will be made.

Mr. COTTON. I wish to object to that order if it will interfere with the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. It cannot interfere with the business of that committee.

There being no objection, the order was made.

CHANGES IN TARIFF RATES.

Mr. WOOD. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Ways and Means the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform this House whether any, and, if so, what changes have been made or ordered to be made in the rates or subjects of duties collected at any port of the United States because of any provision in the revision of the United States statutes as passed at the first session of the Forty-third Congress; and if such changes have been made, to report what they are in detail, with reference to the section of the revision or law under which each was made; and if any such change of duties has been made or ordered since that revision by new construction of the law, to communicate to this House a copy of the order or ruling under which the rate was so changed.

Mr. POLAND. Do I understand that this resolution is reported back from the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. WOOD. It is a substitute for the resolution referred to the committee, and is reported back unanimously.

Mr. POLAND. I have no objection to the resolution at all.

The resolution was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN IOWA.

Mr. MCCRARY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, When the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill shall be under consideration in Committee of the Whole it shall be in order to offer an amendment thereto providing for conferring upon the district court of the United States for Iowa circuit court powers.

SUBSIDIES, APPROPRIATIONS, ETC.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House, in the present condition of the financial affairs of the Government no subsidies in money, bonds, public lands, or by pledge of the public credit should be granted by Congress to associations or corporations engaged or proposing to engage in public or private enterprises, and that all appropriations from the public Treasury ought to be limited at this time to such amounts only as shall be imperatively required by the public service.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the rules be suspended and the resolution adopted.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Indiana has made his resolution a very sweeping one. I approve of its general object, but I think he will see himself that it is open to objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is as limited as possible.

Upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules, tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. HAGANS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 70.

So the motion was seconded.

The question recurred upon the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. ARCHER. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. What would be the effect of the adjournment upon the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The resolution would come up on Monday next, the first thing after the morning hour.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let us have a little time to think of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the House will not adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts; and on a division there were—ayes 124, noes 40.

So the motion was agreed to; and the House (at three o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials. petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 15, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SCOTT presented the petition of Louis A. Godey, publisher of Godey's Lady's Book, praying that the unjust discrimination in the new newspaper postage law against periodicals, requiring them to pay one cent a pound higher than newspapers, be remedied; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DENNIS presented the petition of Joseph H. England, H. C. Bell, and others, praying for the abolition of the tax on matches; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WASHBURN presented the petition of William Giles Dix, a citizen of Peabody, Massachusetts, praying the adoption of a national constitution; which was referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States.

Mr. McCREERY. I present the memorial of Butler, Miller & Co., together with the affidavit of R. H. Gardner and H. B. Buckner, and the affidavit of J. A. McAlister. I move the reference of these papers to the Committee on Claims, to be used as additional evidence in the case of Anderson, White & Co.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, presented the petition of Albert Small and others, citizens of Washington County, Maryland, praying for the abolition of the tax on friction matches; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Luther R. Smbot, praying reimbursement of the sum of $11,084.60, now in the Treasury of the United States, and which he claims belongs to him, arising from the sale by the Government of two locomotive-engines; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STEVENSON presented the petition of Mrs. Rachel E. Turner, widow of James H. Turner, deceased, late adjutant of the Twenty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, praying for arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the memorial of Frederick Fraley, president, and in behalf of the National Board of Trade, asking for the organization of an additional executive department, to be called the department of commerce; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the petition of Elmira E. Cravath, widow of Isaac M. Cravath, late captain Twelfth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORDON presented the petition of the Medical Association of Georgia, praying for such legislation as will promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the memorial of the trustees of the American Seaman's Friend Society, calling attention to the need of a merchant-marine hospital at the port of New York, and praying legislation in that direction. Although this memorial in one sense belongs perhaps to the Committee on Commerce, I suggest that it had better go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I move its reference to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also the petition of N. A. Cowdry, of the city of New York, reciting the indebtedness of this District to him in a large sum of money, for which he is unable to obtain anything except a bond worth, as he says, less than 70 per cent., and which he is unable to sell or hypothecate even for that. Accompanying this petition is a bill which, although not in order at this moment, I speak of only to say that I have not examined it or felt called upon to examine it, but I comply with his request, not knowing whether I shall support the bill myself or not, to introduce it and ask its reference to the special committee having charge of the affairs of the District of Columbia. I move the reference of this petition to that committee and, if no objection be made, I ask leave to introduce the bill in order that it may go with the petition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the appropriate committee, and the bill will lie on the table until the introduction of bills shall be in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that the special committee to which the Senator alludes has been discharged.

Mr. CONKLING. I know it was a special committee, but it has been recognized at this session, and now has charge of a bill pending.

Mr. SHERMAN. The select committee of the last session has been discharged, I think.

Mr. CONKLING. When bills are in order, I shall ask the reference of this bill.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the papers on the files of the Senate in the matter of the application of Eliza Rankin, mother of the late Oliver S. Rankin, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the case of Sam Houston be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask that the following order be made:

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Patrick O'Donnell, a citizen of South Carolina, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has there been an adverse report?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I think there has been.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I think the rule provides that they shall not be sent back to the committee unless there is additional evidence furnished. I do not know or care anything about this particular case; but it is a very wholesome rule to observe in respect to all claims.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The claimant has additional evidence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He ought to file it before the papers are sent back.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont object to the resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I dislike to object; but I object for the time being. The application can be renewed when the additional evidence is ready to be furnished.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order will lie over.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 845) for the relief of Major Junius T. Turner, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 968) for the relief of all persons suffering from the ravages of grasshoppers, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALCORN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1024) in relation to the compensation of persons acting as commissioners under special acts of Congress; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1025) to consolidate the debt of the District of Columbia and to issue the bonds of the United States in exchange for the bonds of the District; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CONKLING. In introducing that bill I wish to say that it was not draughted by me, nor have I examined it. I introduce it by request of the citizens of my State, by whom it is sent. I move that it be printed, and referred to the special joint committee having charge of the subject of devising a new government for the District.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1026) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Abraham Livingston, deceased; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1027) relating to the rank of officers in the Army; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1028) for the relief of W. W. Handlin, of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOGY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1029) for the relief of Albert C. Widdicombe; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1030) limiting the time in which applications for bounty lands shall be received and disposing of suspended cases after a certain date; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1031) to incorporate the Mutual Protection Fire Insurance Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1032) to provide for the appointment of special agents, superintendents of railway postal service, and other officers of the Post-Office Department; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1033) providing for a survey of Raiford's proposed inland route of water communication between the Mississippi River and the harbors of the Atlantic; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask leave to introduce a resolution proposing certain amendments to the Constitution of the United States; which I ask to have read.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 13) proposing certain amendments to the Constitution of the United States; which was read at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representotives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following amendments to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the States for their ratification:

ARTICLE —.

SEC. 1. The President and Vice-President of the United States shall be elected by direct vote of the people and by ballot. They shall hold their office for the term of six years, and the President shall be ineligible to a re-election.

SEC. 2. Every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years and upward, residing in each State, District, and Territory thereof, who shall not have been convicted of felony, shall, after registration, be a competent voter at all elections for President and Vice-President of the United States.

SEC. 3. The election for President and Vice-President shall be held at the same time in each State, District, and Territory of the United States, and it shall require a majority of all the votes cast to elect to either office. If no person shall receive such majority, another election shall be held, at which the two persons who shall have received the highest vote for either office at the previous election shall alone be voted for; and all votes cast for any other person shall be null and void.

SEC. 4. The returns of all elections for President and Vice-President shall be sealed up and transmitted to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. That court shall open and canvass said returns; they shall hear and determine all questions arising thereon; they shall ascertain and declare the result of the election, and grant a certificate accordingly to the persons elected.

SEC. 5. The Congress shall have power to pass all laws necessary and proper to carry into effect the provisions of this article.

Mr. WRIGHT. The amendments proposed were not draughted by myself, but sent to me by a very intelligent citizen of the country, and I present them by request. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And have it printed.

The joint resolution was read the second time by its title, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask leave to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the extent and meaning of the act of June 22, 1874, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the criminal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," and particularly whether, under or by its provisions, persons charged with or indicted for libel or any crime in the said District of Columbia can be brought from a State or other place within Federal jurisdiction to said District to answer therefor, and to report thereon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not know that I have any objection to that resolution, but I wish to state to the Senate that the Judiciary Committee did inquire into the extent and effect of that law when they reported it last spring and when it was passed. They thought they understood it then, and I presume they understand it now; but I do not propose to make any objection to the resolution. If there is any member of the Senate who, on looking at the statute of 1789 and this act, still supposes that it has any possible legal or other effect upon anybody who writes or speaks malicious slanders against anybody, then I must confess I have not the largest possible respect for the amount of study he has devoted to the subject. But if any Senator desires to have the Judiciary Committee report upon this subject again, I certainly shall not make any objection.

Mr. WRIGHT. If the specific question that may be involved in this resolution was considered, or at least if a report bearing upon it was made by the Judiciary Committee, I trust there will be no objection to the adoption of the resolution, that the inquiry may be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not make any objection.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask that the conclusion of that resolution be read again.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And particularly whether, under or by its provisions, persons charged with or indicted for libel or other crime in said District of Columbia can be brought from a State or other place within Federal jurisdiction to answer therefor, and report thereon.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to amend by inserting before the words "and report thereon" these words: "and also whether said act has any application to prosecutions or indictments for the crime of libel in any case."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. Do I understand this resolution to be directed to the Committee on the Judiciary that they shall inform the Senate what is the effect of the language of a certain bill not now a law?

Mr. WRIGHT. It is already an act, passed at the last session of Congress; and this resolution instructs the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the extent and meaning of that statute.

Mr. BAYARD. I should suppose the best interpretation of the words used in an act of Congress would be a judicial interpretation; that the courts, who are to administer the laws, would be the proper tribunals to give interpretation to them. Declaratory acts of the meaning of Congress are a very unusual form of legislation and not particularly valuable or authoritative. I do not know that there is any objection to having the opinion of the gentlemen composing the Judiciary Committee on this subject, but it seems to me that their opinion must have been given to Congress when they reported the bill in question and when it was passed at the last session, although, as I understand, there was no explanation of the measure nor debate upon it, and consequently it escaped notice at the time of its passage. I had confused it in my mind with an objectionable section of another bill which passed the Senate, and which contained provisions similar to those of the act now referred to, and which is still in the House of Representatives. However, I do not object to the reference of the question. I only desire to make the point upon its being, in my opinion, an unusual form and unprecedented to call for the opinion of a committee upon the meaning of the language of an act of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

RULES AS TO INTRODUCING BILLS.

Mr. MORTON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to consider the propriety of so amending the rules as to dispense with the useless formality of asking leave to introduce a bill without giving previous notice, the actual repetition of which takes the time of the Senate and encumbers the Journal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend that resolution by striking out the word "useless" before "formality," because that commits the Senate to the declaration that it is a useless formality. We know from the history of the country that, although generally this is a useless formality, it sometimes is quite the reverse. We have had one instance since I have had the honor to be in this Chamber, on a joint resolution proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. MCCREERY,] respecting removing the bones of the soldiers from Arlington, where the Senate refused to grant leave to bring in the resolution at all. While I do not object to the inquiry, I suggest that we should not be asked to vote now that this is a "useless formality;" and the phraseology of the resolution requiring us to affirm that it is when we direct this inquiry, I move to strike out the word "useless" before "formality."

Mr. MORTON. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that I do not propose to dispense with the rule relative to the effect of an objection to the introduction of a bill, but simply to dispense with the constant repetition of "I ask leave to introduce a bill without having given previous notice." That is put upon the Journal one hundred times in the course of a day sometimes, costing a good deal of money in the course of a session, being of no possible use and taking the time of the Senate. The President of the Senate repeats the words sometimes fifty times in a morning. I would still leave the rule so that an objection may have the effect it has now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is very easy to accomplish that, as the Senator says; but the point to which I am now speaking is that, as I understand the resolution, it declares that this asking leave to bring in a bill without previous notice is in and of itself a "useless formality." My motion is simply to strike out the word "useless" before "formality."

Mr. MORTON. Very well; I have no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

DELINQUENT OFFICERS—IMPROVEMENT GRANTS.

Mr. DAVIS. I give notice that to-morrow morning, after the morning hour, I shall call up the resolution offered by myself about a week ago, in relation to delinquent officers and improvement grants.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, the Senate will resume the consideration of the unfinished business; being the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the reading of it will be resumed at the point where it was stopped yesterday.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There was a joint resolution reported from the Committee on Appropriations yesterday, which was laid over until to-day, at the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont. If there is no objection, I should like, subject to the pending order, to have the Senate proceed to the consideration of that resolution at the present time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that will not be taken up just now. I have not had time to look at it. I presume I shall have no objection to it, but I have not had time to look into it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then let us go on with the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of Senate bill No. 963.

The Chief Clerk continued and concluded the reading of the bill.

DISTRICT BOARD OF AUDIT.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that this bill may be laid aside informally, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 119, to continue the board of audit to examine and audit the unfunded or floating debt of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SCOTT in the chair.) The Senator from Maine asks that by unanimous consent the pending bill be laid aside informally, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution indicated by him. The Chair hears no objection; the pending bill is laid aside, and the joint resolution reported by the Committee on Appropriations is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution continues the board of audit constituted by section 6 of the act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, until otherwise provided by law, with all the powers and duties specified in that section, and with compensation to the members of the board at a rate proportioned, according to time, to that granted in that act, and payable as therein provided. The time for presenting claims is extended for the period of thirty days from this date; and persons having sustained damages to real estate, but failed to present the same to the board of public works, may present them for audit and allowance within the time thus limited, as specified in the seventh class of claims mentioned in the sixth section of the act; but when the title to claims evidenced by certificates of the auditor of the board of public works is involved in suits now pending in any court of competent jurisdiction, such court shall not be ousted of jurisdiction in respect of such question of title; and after the board of audit shall have ascertained the amount, if any, due upon any such claim, the certificates of the board shall be issued and be convertible in favor only of the person finally adjudged in such suit to be entitled thereto, and when the party may by law have execution of such judgment or decree.

The board of audit is to proceed forthwith to examine and audit the accounts of the treasurer and auditor of the late board of public works according to the provisions of the act of June 20, 1874, as required by that act, and to specifically report whether the accounts of the treasurer were so kept from day to day as to show his payments of currency or bonds, to whom paid, and on what authority; whether or not the moneys and other assets which were received by him or were under his control have been properly accounted for by him; and what, if any, of such moneys or other assets have been paid out or disposed of by him without auditor's warrants or certificates therefor; what, if any, payments were made without evidence that the same were made for or on account of the public improvements in the District of Columbia made by the board of public works; what, if any, payments were made upon illegal or irregular warrants, accounts, or vouchers: and what, if any, amount remains in the hands of the treasurer; and to this end, and to enable the board of audit to complete the duties assigned thereto, it shall have all the powers and perform all the duties in the act set forth, and shall make report of its proceedings herein and pursuant to that act, together with all oral testimony hereafter taken by it, to Congress, at the present session thereof, not later than the 15th day of February, 1875.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senate desire to hear a statement of this resolution I will give it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, and others. It is not necessary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If nobody desires it, I suppose I need not make any statement.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask for the following order:

Ordered, That Mrs. A. E. Dixon have leave to withdraw her memorial and accompanying papers from the files of the Senate.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Has there been an adverse report?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not think there has been any report at all. The object of withdrawing the papers is to refer them back to the committee.

The order was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Several executive messages were received from the President of the United States, by Mr. BABCOCK, his Secretary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at three o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 15, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to offer the following resolution, on which I demand the previous question:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, the 23d instant, they adjourn to meet again on Tuesday, the 5th day of January next, at twelve o'clock noon.

On seconding the previous question, there were—ayes 122, noes 45.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered.

The question was upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 128, nays 122, not voting 40; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Beck, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bromberg, Brown, Burchard, Caldwell, Carpenter, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clements, Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cotton, Cox, Crittenden, Crocker, Crossland, Darrall, Davis, Dawes, DeWitt, Durham, Finck, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Giddings, Gunter, Robert S. Parker, Parsons, Pendleton, Perry, Pierce, Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Potter, Purman, Randall, Read, Richmond, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Henry J. Scudder, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloan, Sloss, H. Boardman Smith, William A. Smith, Southard, Speer, Stanard, Stephens, Stone, Storm, Swann, Taylor, Vance, Waddell, Waldron, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, Willie, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—128.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Barber, Barrere, Bass, Begole, Bell, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Clayton, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Corwin, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Eldredge, Farwell, Field, Fort, Gooch, Gunckel, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Havens, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hunter, Hunton, Hyde, Lamport, Lawrence, Lawson, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Luttrell, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Negley, Orr, Orth, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Phelps, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Pratt, Rainey, Ray, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Scofield, Sener, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Snyder, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, and Woodworth—122.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Averill, Barnum, Barry, Biery, Buckner, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Conger, Creamer, Crooke, Crounse, Eden, Glover, John T. Harris, Hersey, Hynes, Kendall, Knapp, McNulta, Mitchell, Niles, Nunn, O'Neill, Pelham, Phillips, Ransier, Rapier, Rice, William R. Roberts, Ross, Isaac W. Scudder, George L. Smith, Sprague, Standiford, Strawbridge, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Walls, and Ephraim K. Wilson—40.

So the resolution was adopted.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. BARRERE said: My colleague, Mr. MCNULTA, is absent to attend the funeral of his mother.

Mr. ARCHER. My colleague, Mr. ALBERT, has been detained from the House from the beginning of the session by severe illness.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have voted in the negative. I desire to change my vote to the affirmative, in order to move a reconsideration.

After the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say a word.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have not yielded the floor, and I believe the motion to reconsider is debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is debatable within very narrow limits.

Mr. GARFIELD. I propose to debate it within those narrow limits.

Mr. DAWES. Is it debatable, the previous question having been ordered?

The SPEAKER. It would not be debatable under the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I only want to say that the Committee on Appropriations have not had a word to say on this subject, nor had an opportunity for one. I hope this vote will be reconsidered, so that we can have a word.

The question was upon laying on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. GARFIELD. Upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 128, not voting 42; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Beck, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bromberg, Brown, Burchard, Caldwell, Carpenter, Chittenden, John B. Smith, Standiford, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Walls, Wheeler, John M. S. Williams, and Ephraim K. Wilson—42

So the motion to reconsider was not laid on the table.

Mr. DAWES. On consultation with the Committee on Appropriations and others, I move to postpone the further consideration of this question till next Monday immediately after the morning hour.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the motion to reconsider will be regarded as agreed to pro forma; and the question recurring on agreeing to the resolution, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] moves that its further consideration be postponed until next Monday after the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

Mr. WHITE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4031) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to protect all citizens of the United States in their civil rights and to furnish the means for their vindication;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to House bill No. 2521, authorizing the construction of bridges across the Ohio River, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WAR DEPARTMENT PROPERTY IN PITTSBURGH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the property belonging to the War Department, no longer needed for military purposes, in the city of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DEMPSEY & O'TOOLE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation to pay to the firm of Dempsey & O'Toole $588.66; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting, in compliance with the act of June 25, 1868, a statement of all judgments rendered by said court for the year ending December 7, 1874; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY WAGON-ROAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the bill (H. R. No. 2854) for the location and construction of a military wagon-road from Green River City, Wyoming Territory, to the Yellowstone National Park, and to Fort Ellis, Montana Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the commissioners of claims, transmitting their fourth general report; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

FREEDMAN'S SAVING AND TRUST COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the commissioners of the Freedman's Saving and Trust Company, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of December 11, 1874, their report.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and that, together with the report of the Comptroller of the Currency on the same subject, with the documents which accompanied it, it be printed, all in the same document.

The motion was agreed to.

SUFFERERS BY OVERFLOW OF THE LOWER MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the amount of clothing distributed to sufferers by the overflow of the Lower Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The papers were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 781) for the relief of James L. Pugh; and

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 11) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

REORGANIZATION OF CLERICAL FORCE IN GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Mr. TOWNSEND, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with accompanying documents, concerning the bill (H. R. No. 1060) to reorganize the clerical force in the General Land Office; which were ordered to be printed and recommitted.

EPISCOPAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4032) for the relief of the trustees of the Episcopal Theological Seminary of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES W. TANSILL.

Mr. HUNTON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 127) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the accounts of James W. Tansill, late commissioner and quartermaster under the commission to run the boundary between the United States and Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EAST PASCAGOULA, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. LYNCH, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 128) authorizing the entering and clearing of vessels at East Pascagoula, in the State of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask unanimous consent that that committee have leave to report at any time.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I object.

C. F. JOHNSON.

Mr. TREMAIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4033) for the relief of C. F. Johnson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. PHILLIPS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4034) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle and pay certain accounts, between the United States and the various States, arising from the appropriation of certain public lands in such States to permanent Indian reservations, and from the sale of certain portions of public lands in such States for the use of certain Indian tribes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS ON ABSENTEE SHAWNEE LANDS.

On motion of Mr. COBB, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, a bill (S. No. 650) explanatory of a resolution entitled "A resolution for the relief of the settlers on absentee Shawnee lands in Kansas," was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

TWENTY-CENT SILVER PIECE.

On motion of Mr. HOOPER, by unanimous consent, a bill (S. No. 648) to authorize the coinage of a twenty-cent piece of silver at the mints of the United States was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

ROBERT COLES.

On motion of Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, a bill (S. No. 214) for the relief of Robert Coles was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

THEODORE D. WAGNER.

Mr. RAINEY. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for consideration at this time a bill to remove the political disabilities of Theodore D. Wagner, of Charleston, South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there a petition?

Mr. RAINEY. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. It has not been the habit during the last two sessions to entertain any bills for relieving political disabilities unless they are accompanied by petitions from the persons asking relief.

Mr. RAINEY. I have assumed myself the responsibility of introducing this bill. This gentleman told me that his disabilities had not been removed, and I have taken the responsibility of asking the passage by the House of a bill to remove them. He says the political disabilities of other men who had been in the service of the southern confederacy had been removed, and he did not see why his should not be removed also.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair has already stated, it has been the custom during the last two sessions, which has almost grown into a rule, not to pass any bill removing political disabilities unless it is accompanied by a petition.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

WILLIAM MILLS.

Mr. WHITELEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4035) for the relief of William Mills; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EZRA B. BARNETT.

Mr. PACKER, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads the bill (H. R. No. 3871) for the relief of Ezra B. Barnett, postmaster at Norwich, in the State of New York; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee on printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed five thousand additional copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the years 1872 and 1873; one thousand copies to be for the use of the Senate, three thousand for the use of the House, and one thousand for the use of the Commissioner.

MAJOR J. W. NICHOLS.

On motion of Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 769) for the relief of Major J. W. Nichols, paymaster United States Army, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RECONSIDERATION OF REFERENCES.

Mr. SPEER. I move to reconsider the several votes by which bills, &c., have been referred to-day; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD FROM LAKE ERIE TO MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. McCRARY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4036) chartering the Forty-first Parallel Railroad Company of the United States of America, from Lake Erie to the Missouri River, and to limit the rate of freights thereon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

He also, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of the Toledo and Grand Rapids Railway Company, and others, on the subject of the construction of a narrow-gauge railroad from Lake Erie to the Missouri River; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

PROSECUTION OF LIBELS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. POLAND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4037) regulating the prosecution of libels in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENTAL STAMPS FURNISHED POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to inform the House of Representatives under what contract, if any, the departmental stamps are furnished to the Post-Office Department, at what rate they are supplied, and generally all information in reference thereto not actually inconsistent with the public interest.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does this resolution come from a committee?

The SPEAKER. It is offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL. I am submitting it in my own right, from my own place.

Mr. KELLOGG. I insist on its being referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman had listened to me for one moment he would have known that I only offer it for the purpose of reference.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes. And, pending that motion, I move that all general debate on the legislative appropriation bill be limited to five minutes.

Mr. BECK. I understand the committee was not very full when the bill was prepared, and I would be glad to have the gentleman from Ohio state his views on it with some degree of fullness.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the motion wholly in the interest of saving time. I will answer any questions which gentlemen may desire to address to me in the five minutes, or as we proceed with the consideration of the bill. I can state in five minutes all that I wish to say before we proceed to the consideration of the bill by paragraphs. I prefer, if it be agreeable to the House, that what general remarks I may have to make shall be made on the whole bill at the close, rather than at the beginning of its consideration. Therefore, in order to facilitate business, I hope we will go right on with the bill, paragraph by paragraph; and I shall, of course, be ready to give what explanations may be called for as the paragraphs come up.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the first reading of the bill been dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. That, of course, must be done by the Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken on Mr. GARFIELD'S motion to close debate, and it was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. GARFIELD that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the legislative, &c., appropriation bill, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By a vote of the House general debate upon this bill is limited to five minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. SPEER. Had not the bill better be read?

The CHAIRMAN. The first reading of the bill has been dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPEER. I was sitting here all the time, and I did not hear any such suggestion made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not responsible if the gentleman did not give attention to what was going on.

Mr. SPEER. It is very difficult to understand what is going on in the confusion which prevails here.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will only say a word, in order that the committee may be informed what are the changes which have been made in this bill from the ordinary course of legislation; and I will say that they were all pointed out by me yesterday on the motion I then made to suspend the rules on seven clauses, scattered through the bill in different parts, which involved legislation making changes which we believed in the interest of economy. There is in connection with this bill legislative report No. 1—a small document of twenty-eight pages, which gentlemen can get by sending to the document-room. That document shows the amount of decrease in the present bill as compared with the corresponding bill of last year. It shows a decrease of about $1,000,000.

I have held the floor long enough to enable gentlemen to get their bills, and I now ask that the Clerk read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and read as follows:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the Senate, namely: Secretary of the Senate, $4,320; officer charged with disbursements of the Senate, $576; chief clerk, $3,000, and the additional sum of $1,000 while the said office is held by the present incumbent, and no longer; principal clerk, principal executive clerk, minute and journal clerk, and financial clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, at $2,592 each; librarian and seven clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, at $2,220 each; five clerks, at $2,100 each; keeper of the stationery, $2,102.40; one messenger, $1,296; assistant keeper of the stationery, $1,800; Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper, $4,320: Provided, That hereafter he shall receive, directly or indirectly, no fees or other compensation or emolument whatever for performing the duties of the office, or in connection therewith, otherwise than as aforesaid; assistant doorkeeper, $2,592; acting assistant doorkeeper, $2,592; postmaster to the Senate, $2,100; assistant postmaster and mail-carrier, $1,728; two mail-carriers, at $1,200 each; superintendent of the document-room, $2,160; two assistants in document-room, at $1,440 each; superintendent of the folding-room, $2,160; three messengers, acting as assistant doorkeepers, at $1,800 each; twenty messengers to be appointed and removed by the Sergeant-at-Arms, with the approval of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, at $1,440 each; secretary to the Vice-President, $2,102.40; clerk to the Committee on Finance, $2,220; clerk to the Committee on Claims, $2,220; clerk of printing records, $2,220; clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, $2,220; clerk to the Committee on Commerce, $2,220; one laborer in charge of private passage, $804; one special policeman, $1,296; Chaplain to the Senate, $900; chief engineer, $2,160; three assistant engineers, at $1,440 each; assistant engineer in charge of the Senate elevator, $1,440; two firemen, at $1,095 each; three laborers, at $730 each; and one female attendant in charge of ladies' retiring-room, $720; telegraph operator, $1,200; making, in all, $140,336.80.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer an amendment, in lines 71 and 72, to strike out the words "one thousand two hundred," and insert the words "at the rate of one hundred dollars per month, seven hundred."

This is in accordance with the law fixing the salaries of these operators. I ought to say, however, that the House last year, in the sundry civil bill, made an appropriation, which was put in as an amendment, giving them $100 per month during the vacation. It was a question with the Committee on Appropriations whether we ought to put them at the rate of $1,200 a year, in obedience to the suggestion of that appropriation, or to put the salary at the rate of $100 per month while employed, in accordance with the original law creating the office. I offer the amendment, and the action of the committee will determine the question. I do not care about it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery and newspapers, (including $5,000 for stationery for committees and officers of the Senate and $100 for postage-stamps for the Secretary of the Senate,) $14,250.

Mr. HEREFORD. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether any report has been made to the committee as to the stationery and newspapers provided for by this $14,250? Has any report been made as to what has been done with this sum of money?

Mr. GARFIELD. The House has never had anything to do with the expenditures of the contingent fund of the Senate. Whether the Senate publish reports of that expenditure or not I do not know. A report of the contingent expenditures of this House is generally published, but last year by some oversight it was neglected. This year the report was brought in a few days ago, and was referred to the committee, and I suppose it will be in print in a short time.

Mr. HEREFORD. Well, if that report is not in print, so that we may know what disposition is made of these thousands of dollars, it seems to me premature to consider the bill, and that we ought not to consider it unless all the information is before us to enable us to vote intelligently on it, and it does not seem to me to be a proper answer to say that the Senate never ordered any report as to what is done with this contingent fund of that body.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not say that.

Mr. HEREFORD. Were it otherwise, we might as well pass over all the appropriations for the Senate without saying ay or no. For one, before I vote this sum of $14,250 here for stationery and newspapers, I would like to know what is the necessity of such a large appropriation. I would like to see what has been done heretofore with like sums. If the appropriation be absolutely necessary I am willing to vote it, but I want to be informed upon the subject.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will respond to the gentleman, although there is nothing before the committee. The gentleman will remember that by law $125 is awarded for stationery to each Senator and Member. Of course he can very readily figure up and see what that amounts to. In addition to that, there is specifically appropriated here $5,000 for stationery for committees and officers of the Senate. There are thirty-five committees of the Senate, and the gentleman can judge whether that is an extravagant sum for that purpose.

Last year the Committee on Appropriations reduced this contingent appropriation considerably. This year it is somewhat larger than last year, on account of the fact that we are now appropriating for the long session of Congress, not the short session. We are appropriating for the seven months' session as against the present session of three months. The increase which the gentleman will observe in some of these items over similar appropriations last year is in part, indeed wholly, due to the number of months of the average length of the long session.

Mr. COX. I move to strike out the last word for one purpose only. At the beginning of our examination and consideration of these appropriation bills I would like to have full confidence in the Committee on Appropriations, and especially in the distinguished chairman of that committee. We have to take a great many things for granted, and we must have faith in the committee. I want to ask my honorable friend why it was that at the end of the last session of Congress he said that he was under obligations to the members of this House for their confidence; that he was proud of the way they had treated him and his bills; and he added that there was less by $25,000,000 appropriated last year than the year before, not counting the unexpended balances. Now, was that statement correct?

Mr. GARFIELD. It was.

Mr. COX. There was no mistake about it?

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir.

Mr. COX. No little difference of some ten or fifteen million dollars?

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir.

Mr. COX. Well, that will be developed in the course of time. I would like to hear my friend on that subject, because I desire to have full faith and confidence in his statements here. But I think the reports of the expenses will not bear out the statements he made at the last session.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will find, when we come to the discussion of that subject, that my remarks were very fully borne out, more fully than I hoped they would be in the short time we had for the consideration of the bills.

Mr. COX. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the word "appropriations" in the clause "except those whose salaries were fixed by specific appropriations." I do this for the purpose of calling the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the phraseology made use of—"And hereafter clerks of committees of either branch of Congress (except those whose salaries are fixed by specific appropriations) shall be paid not more than five dollars per day, and during the session only." I think that provision is a very important one, but I think the word "law" should be used instead of "appropriations." The appropriation bills should not go upon the assumption that any appropriation is made except in conformity with law. I therefore move to strike out "appropriations" and insert the word "law," so that it will read "whose salaries are fixed by specific law."

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that will not be done, for the reason that the salaries to which the gentleman refers have all been fixed in regular appropriation bills and not by any definite law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. RANDALL. The appropriation bills are laws.

Mr. GARFIELD. They are hardly treated as standing laws by the accounting officers of the Treasury. If we should fail to appropriate for these clerks at all, I do not think they could bring suits in the Court of Claims to recover their salaries, because the court would find that their offices were not offices created by specific, permanent statutes. Of course, as long as the appropriations for their salaries are contained in the appropriation bills from year to year, that has the force and effect of a statute. It is for that reason that we use this language. We would not like to use language that, under a construction that might be given at the Comptroller's Office, would cut out all these clerks whose salaries are fixed in the annual appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my amendment. But I protest against the practice which has grown up so recently of disregarding what should be the fundamental principle of our appropriation bills; not a dollar should be appropriated in them except in conformity with law.

The Clerk read the following:

Capitol police:

For one captain, $2,000; three lieutenants, at $1,600 each; twenty-seven privates, at $1,400 each, $37,800; and eight watchmen, at $1,000 each, $8,000; making in all $52,600, one-half to be paid into the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and the other half to be paid into the contingent fund of the Senate: Provided, That whenever a member of the Capitol police or watch force is suspended from duty for cause, said policeman or watchman shall receive no compensation for the time of such suspension if he shall not be reinstated.

Mr. RANDALL. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will remember that last year an effort was made to reduce the number of Capitol police; in fact, I think we did make a partial reduction.

Mr. GARFIELD. A reduction in salary, not in number.

Mr. RANDALL. I am of the opinion that there are now too many employed on the Capitol police. We may as well commence here to reduce them for the next year. I therefore move to reduce the number of privates from twenty-seven to twenty. That will not affect anybody now in office or those likely to be employed, but rather those who will come in with the next Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD, This is the only thing that will not come under control of the next House.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee will observe that while there is joint action, so far as the appointment and payment of these police is concerned, yet each House has the control of its own officers.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, yes; each House has control of its own officers; but there are three persons who control the Capitol police.

Mr. RANDALL. I was last year of the opinion (and I have not changed my view) that twenty men are sufficient for this force. I therefore move to amend by striking out "seven" after "twenty."

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whether, contrary to all his lectures to the House, he now intimates beforehand that under the new administration of the House there will be any changes by turning out efficient officers to put in new men?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; but it is very manifest that the policy of the next House, if I know any of the probabilities as to that, will be to make a very large reduction of force in and around this House. This certainly will strike some that are in.

Mr. CONGER. Not, I hope, by changing those already familiar with the business.

Mr. RANDALL. No public interest will be allowed to suffer.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say a word in regard to all this portion of the bill relating to the organization of the next House. It was my purpose last year to endeavor to restore some matters in reference to which changes were then made against the wishes of the Committee on Appropriations. There were four or five clerks in this House whose pay was considerably raised by the action of the House, and raised, as it seemed to me, unjustly in reference to other employés of the Government. It was with much difficulty that the House committee secured a conference report on that subject, the Senate feeling that it was wrong for the House to put up the pay of its own employés and not allow the Senate to do the same with theirs. It was with a good deal of difficulty that that matter was at last compromised. But the Senate conferees gave notice that this year they intended that those officers should be restored to their old rates.

In view of the political change that has occurred with reference to the organization of this House in the next Congress, I thought it would be indecorous in me to inaugurate changes which would in the main refer to another House and another organization. We therefore resolved (and in this I speak the unanimous sentiment of the Committee on Appropriations) that in no instance would we cut down the salaries of the employés of this House or reduce their number, because we had last winter made an increase in some places, although we had made a reduction in others. As it would be so short a time before another organization would have control of this House, we thought it better to report the bill in that way. This Capitol police, I may remark, is the only organization connected with the official management of this House that, under the natural order of things, would not be subjected to changes by reason of the political change that has occurred.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I wish the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would state whether or not he thinks this force ought to be reduced.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not. That question was very fully discussed last winter; and I took the position that we could not, with these large public grounds and the large building upon them, get along with a smaller number of persons than we now have on the Capitol police force. But I was willing to consent to cutting down their salaries; and that we did very considerably.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I only asked the question because I do not wish to recognize as a correct principle that as because there is to be a change of administration—because the political minority is to become the majority—there is good reason for not cutting down expenses. If there are expenses that ought to be cut down, the fact that there is going to be a political change is no reason for not cutting them down now.

Mr. GARFIELD. I agree with the gentleman as a matter of justice. But yesterday, when I made a motion to suspend the rules to make in order an equalization of the pay of committee clerks, limiting their compensation to five dollars a day, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SPEER,] it will be remembered, made a sort of sneering remark that it was "a nice time to cut down officers of the House when the democrats were about coming into power."

Mr. SPEER. The "gentleman from Pennsylvania" made no remark about its being "a nice time" to do such a thing. He simply inquired whether that would not be the effect of the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not pretend to quote the remark accurately, but that was its spirit.

Mr. KELLOGG. Would not the effect be to raise the pay of the House clerks under the new administration, and to cut down the pay of the Senate clerks continuing under the same administration?

Mr. GARFIELD. I so stated yesterday. That is precisely the effect. I agree with my friend from Indiana, and I will not vote against any decrease of pay simply on the ground I have stated; but as a matter of courtesy toward those who are so soon to have the responsibility of controlling the affairs of this House, I make this explanation. If gentlemen move a reduction in any of these matters and if the reduction is to be made general throughout the bill, I will consider with them fully the equity of the proposition and act accordingly. As to this particular case, as we cut down the total amount of the pay of the police force very considerably last year, I do not believe that we ought now to reduce the number. I said so then, and I say so now. Still I submit the question to the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not in favor of cutting down salaries, and made no such proposition.

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not say so.

Mr. RANDALL. But, sir, I believe there are too many policemen here; that the number provided for is larger than is required to do the duty of watching this building. I therefore think this the proper time to move to reduce the number of these policemen—not to reduce their salaries—because when the next House will assemble, unless this number is reduced, it will find itself with twenty-seven of these places provided for by law, and under the circumstances it will be very difficult to avoid filling them. When it assembles, if the places are provided for by law, of course it will have to fill them, whereas if only twenty-two be provided for, then the majority in the next House of Representatives will only have twenty-two places to fill.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. RANDALL. I will withdraw my amendment, and the gentleman can renew it.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Very well; I renew it. I wish to say in reply to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said that if this force needs to be cut down—I do not know whether it needs to be cut down or not—I should be in favor of cutting it down at once, and that would give our friends on the other side an opportunity of increasing it if they want to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have always insisted that this force was unnecessarily large, and I differ from my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] only in one respect. I think the salaries, as well as the number of these employés, are too large. I think the condition of public sentiment in the country, in regard not only to the number but to the salaries of these officers, requires a very heavy reduction in both respects. I have called the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations frequently to the fact that not long ago only fourteen watchmen were required to look after this building. Now the number of watchmen is fixed at eight, and the number of privates in this quasi-military organization, called the Capitol police, at twenty-seven, with three lieutenants and a captain, causing the appropriation to swell from some $14,500 to $52,600. I think it would be a measure of reform that would do injustice to no person—that certainly would be impossible—and that would still provide for the proper performance of the duties of this branch of the service, to abolish all these officers except the watchmen, and to increase the number of watchmen from eight up to twenty-one; abolishing the three lieutenants entirely, leaving only a captain. If that could be accomplished I do not know that I would complain so much of the salary which is fixed. Only a few years ago, however, the most expensive of the employés in that service received only $950 a year, while now these privates have a salary of $1,400 each. I should like to submit a motion that the number of watchmen be increased to twenty-one, because it is said these watchmen are on and off duty in squads a third of the time, leaving only seven to be employed on duty at a time. I would dispense with the three lieutenants entirely, and increase the number of watchmen to twenty-one. This arrangement with the salaries fixed would be a saving of about one-half the appropriation.

These amendments, however, I believe, cannot be presented in one motion; and I will therefore move now, in order to accomplish the purpose I have in view, that the number, twenty-seven, be stricken out, and that only twenty-one watchmen be provided for.

Mr. SPEER. The gentleman can accomplish his purpose by moving to amend the pending paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out all after the word "dollars," in the one hundred and fourth line down to and including the word "dollars" in the one hundred and seventh line; that is, to strike out "three lieutenants, at $1,600 each; twenty-seven privates, at $1,400 each, $37,800;" and to strike out the word "eight," in the one hundred and seventh line, and insert "twenty-one," so it will read: "For one captain, $2,000; and twenty-one watchmen, at $1,000 each."

Mr. RANDALL. I will withdraw my amendment for the present, intending to move it again hereafter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say a word in reply to my colleague. I sincerely trust the suggestion made by him will be carried out fully; that the reduction in the number of officers and amount of salaries, so far as it can be effected by this House, will not be suspended for a moment on account of any change hereafter to occur in the political complexion of the majority here. I hope, for the purpose of determining the question whether the new sentiment which has grown up here is a sincere and honest one, and in order to inaugurate that policy of economy which the country expects at our hands, all these expenditures will be reduced at this session of Congress to the lowest possible point, not only in reference to the number of employés, but also as to the salary to be paid. There is no misunderstanding the public sentiment. It demands a heavy reduction of the force employed by the Government and a large reduction of the compensation paid to them; and there can be no respect shown to that public sentiment which was so recently displayed throughout this entire country unless there be some more radical movement toward reform than is indicated by these paragraphs in the bill. There is a reduction of the appropriation in this bill as it now stands of a little rising $1,000,000 upon the law as it passed this House at the close of the last session of Congress, and every one fully understands that on that basis this legislative appropriation bill will pass the House, ultimately appropriating a much larger sum of money than was appropriated for the same purpose last year.

Mr. KELLOGG. Before my friend takes his seat I wish to ask him a question. I do not wish to debate the amendment, but I do wish to understand, before a vote is taken, what will be the operation of the gentleman's amendment. He provides for twenty-one privates, to do duty in three squads of seven hours each. He also dispenses with the three lieutenants, leaving only one captain. Does he intend that the captain shall be on duty the whole twenty-four hours? He is the only one who is left in charge of the twenty-one privates, and no one has provided for relieving him during the whole twenty-four hours.

Mr. HOLMAN. My answer to the gentleman is that there is really no necessity for this captain.

Mr. KELLOGG. Why not strike it out, then?

Mr. HOLMAN. He is a mere ornament to this organization.

Mr. KELLOGG. But you propose to retain that ornament in the force.

Mr. HOLMAN. But still there seems to be some reason for retaining a head to this organization. Retaining the captain would leave the number twenty-two.

This organization is quasi-military. I know that in other governments it is common enough to have military forces about their capitals, and this is a mild approach to that. I propose to go back to the old order of things as nearly as possible.

The question being taken on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment, there were ayes 53, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. There must now of course be an amendment in the provision made for the compensation of this force. I presume a change in the figures can be made by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will correct the figures in accordance with the amendment.

Mr. SPEER. I offer the following amendment: In line 115, after the word "suspension," strike out these words, "if he shall not be reinstated;" so that it will read:

Provided, That whenever a member of the Capitol police or watch force is suspended from duty for cause, said policeman or watchman shall receive no compensation for the time of such suspension.

Why should a member of the Capitol police or watch force, suspended for cause, receive compensation, if reinstated, for a period of time during which he rendered no service? According to the very terms of the proviso he is "suspended for cause." It may be, perhaps, that the cause was not sufficient for his removal; but why, even if the cause proves to have been insufficient, should he be paid for services which he never rendered to the Government, and for a period of time, too, during which, as far as this section goes, he may have been actually employed and paid by some other corporation? He may be off duty for one month or two months. He may be employed at a hotel or a store in this city, or by some railroad company, and yet, on being reinstated by the law as proposed to be enacted here, he would be entitled to compensation for the one, two, or three months for which he was off duty.

I move to strike out these words, "if he shall not be reinstated." This will leave the law to be that he shall not be paid for the time for which he has been suspended, when suspended for cause. I think my amendment should prevail.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this is the law now. It was not of any particular importance to put it in here. It is simply repeating the law.

Mr. SPEER. Was it not put in the language of the bill last year for the first time?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly, and it is now the law. We need not have put it in here. It is merely a repetition of the law. But the gentleman must see that if a man is suspended for cause, and then on examination it is found that the cause is not sufficient, it is not right that he should be denied his pay during the time of his suspension. If a man is tried on articles of impeachment, and at the end of the trial is not convicted, then, of course, he ought to receive that portion of his salary which has accrued during the trial.

Mr. SPEER. Not at all. The Government has the same rights as a private employer, and should not be compelled to pay for services not rendered. We are under no obligations to restore these gentlemen, and under no obligations to pay them after they are restored.

Mr. GARFIELD. We always pay an officer of the Army who is put upon trial, if the result of the trial be that he is acquitted.

Mr. SPEER. These are not officers of the Army.

Mr. GARFIELD. They are officers of this House.

The question being taken on Mr. SPEER'S amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

House of Representatives:

For compensation of members of the House of Representatives, and Delegates from Territories, $1,550,000.

For mileage, $100,000.

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the House of Representatives, namely: Clerk of the House of Representatives, $4,320; officer charged with disbursing the contingent fund, $576; chief clerk and journal clerk of the House, while such positions are held by the present incumbents, and no longer, $3,600 each; two reading clerks, assistant journal clerk, and tally clerk, $3,000 each; four assistant clerks, at $2,592 each; one assistant clerk, at $2,520; eight assistant clerks, including librarian and assistant librarian, at $2,160 each; four assistant clerks, at $1,800 each; one chief messenger in the office of the Clerk of the House, at $5.76 per day; superintendent of document-room of the Clerk of the House, $1,800; three messengers, (including one messenger in the House library,) at $1,440 each; one engineer, $1,800; three assistant engineers, at $1,440 each; six firemen, at $1,095 each per annum; for clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means, $3,000; messenger to the Committee on Appropriations, $1,314; clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means, $1,314; clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, $3,000; messenger to the Committee on Appropriations, $1,314; clerk to the Committee on Claims, $2,160; clerk to the Committee on War Claims, $2,160; clerk to the Committee on the Public Lands, $2,160; clerk at Speaker's table, at $5.76 per day; private secretary to the Speaker, $2,102.40; Sergeant-at-Arms, $4,320: Provided, That hereafter he shall receive, directly or indirectly, no fees or other compensation or emolument whatever for performing the duties of the office, or in connection therewith, otherwise than as aforesaid; clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms, $2,500; paying teller for the Sergeant-at-Arms, $1,800; messenger to the Sergeant-at-Arms, $1,440; Doorkeeper, $2,592; first assistant doorkeeper, $2,592; Postmaster, $2,592; first assistant postmaster, $2,088; fourteen messengers, seven at $1,500 each, and seven at $1,200 each; Chaplain of the House, $900; five official reporters of the proceedings and debates of the House, at $5,000 each; two stenographers for committees, $5,000 each; superintendent of the folding room, $2,160; superintendent and assistant superintendent of the document-room, at $2,160 each; document-file clerk, $1,800; eleven messengers, five at $1,800 and six at $1,440 each; twelve messengers during the session, at the rate of $1,440 each per annum, $10,080; fifteen laborers, at $720 each; seven laborers, during the session, at the rate of $720 each per annum; one laborer, at $820; and Henry Douglas, laborer's pay, as fixed by act of March 3, 1873, $917.50; and for one female attendant in ladies' retiring-room, $600; making, in all, the sum of $228,490.70.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to direct the attention of the committee, and especially of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to what I think is a mistake in this paragraph of the bill, and certainly is an injustice. The portion of the paragraph I allude to is that which has reference to the compensation of the paying-teller for the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House. I was a member of the committee of conference between the two Houses which had the legislative appropriation bill of last year under consideration; and it was agreed that the pay of this officer should be equal to that of the corresponding officer in the Senate; whereas in transcribing the bill his pay was fixed at $1,800, and the Senate officer who holds the corresponding position has $2,100. I do not want to go back to correct that as regards the past, but I do think that this officer, considering the nature of the services he renders, having to keep the accounts of three hundred and two members, while the corresponding officer in the Senate keeps the accounts of seventy-six, should manifestly receive the increase as determined upon in the committee of conference, and which was only left out of the bill by mistake. The clause I refer to is at line 168. I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will corroborate what I have stated.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have not any doubt that what the gentleman from Pennsylvania states is true, that the officer who has charge of this business of disbursing a very large sum of money does not receive pay relatively equal to the pay of other persons doing the same work.

Mr. RANDALL. You must consider also the responsibility attaching to having the custody of so large an amount of money.

Mr. GARFIELD. In this connection I wish to remark that there are but two places where the committee have made a change in connection with the officers of the House. One was a change in relation to the pay of the assistant postmaster, who by some oversight was last winter cut down below every other corresponding officer of the House. His compensation is restored. The other change is in regard to the clerks of the Committees on Ways and Means and Appropriations, whose salaries are now put as the House put them by a vote last year. Those are the only changes.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not offer my proposition as being in the nature of a change. I want to correct what was clearly a mistake in the transcription of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Offer an amendment, then.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will move to make the salary of this officer whatever is the salary of the corresponding officer of the Senate.

Mr. GARFIELD. While the gentleman from Pennsylvania is looking to that matter, I will offer an amendment which I am instructed to offer by the Committee on Appropriations. It is in lines 188 and 189, to insert after the word "dollars," where it first occurs, the words "one telegraph operator, at the rate of $100 per month."

That corresponds with the amendment made on the Senate side.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the object of paying a telegraph operator for each month in the year?

Mr. GARFIELD. This only pays him for seven months. Perhaps the words "beginning with the next session" might be added; but that is the law now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to inquire who controls these appointments, and why an operator might not be appointed in July next?

Mr. GARFIELD. Because the law that creates the office provides that the person holding the position shall be paid at the rate of $100 per month during the session.

Mr. HOLMAN. It might be safe to insert the words "during the session of Congress."

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection to that amendment; but that is the law.

The amendment of Mr. GARFIELD, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I find that the corresponding officer in the Senate to the paying teller for the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House receives a salary of $2,100. I move, therefore, to amend in line 167 by striking out the words "one thousand eight hundred," and inserting in lieu thereof "two thousand one hundred."

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has fallen into the error which seems to be radical in our legislation, and that is, that we are never to consider the question whether a salary is reasonable in itself or not, but only whether some one is getting higher pay. I have never known an increase of salary that passed the House in the last ten years that did not result from this alleged inequality of pay, taking the pay of some other officer as the basis of an increase, and I never knew a gentleman to propose to reduce a salary in order to reduce an inequality and equalize compensation. You take a particular salary and use it as a fulcrum to move a whole mass up together. I hope that, while it may be true in this particular case that this officer does not receive the same salary as the corresponding officer in the Senate, my friend will devote his efforts to decrease the salary of the Senate officer and not to increase the salary of the officer of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I want it to be understood, Mr. Chairman, that I am not in favor of reducing salaries below a proper amount. I am in favor of paying adequate salaries to every officer, and I want economy as to the number of officers employed, not as to the pay of those employed. I hope my friend from Indiana will reserve his heavy artillery until some more proper time than a question of increasing the salary of an officer of this House which has been reduced by a mistake. He ought now to receive the sum of $2,100 a year, the same salary paid to a similar officer of the Senate. A million and a half of dollars pass through his hands annually. He keeps three hundred and two accounts and has to keep them accurately, and I do not think myself that the salary I propose is a dollar too much.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Has he not to be here throughout the entire year?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; throughout the entire year.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Is he the paying teller?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. What is the corresponding officer of the Senate?

Mr. RANDALL. I find on information and inquiry that he is one of five clerks who receive $2,100 a year.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Can the gentleman tell us where we can find the appropriation for the corresponding officer of the Senate?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; in line 26 of the bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does the gentleman know that the officer of the Senate performing these duties is one of the five clerks provided for in that case?

Mr. RANDALL. I am so informed, and so believe, or I certainly would not state it.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It ought to be a matter of certainty.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the information we had in the committee of conference last year.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let me say one word before the gentleman from Pennsylvania takes his seat. I desire to ask him if the paying teller of the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House does not have a much larger amount of money pass through his hands than the corresponding officer of the Senate?

Mr. RANDALL. Why, certainly; as in the proportion of 76 to 302.

Mr. HOLMAN. The provisions in this paragraph for the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms are, for the Sergeant-at-Arms, $4,320; clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms, $2,500; paying teller for the Sergeant-at-Arms, $1,800; messenger to the Sergeant-at-Arms, $1,440. Now, every one of those officers had his salary increased within a comparatively short period of time. The fees formerly received by the Sergeant-at-Arms, of course, have been cut off; but his salary has been increased. I do not think this is a time to increase salaries, and I must still insist that a salary of $1,800 a year for this officer is a reasonable salary, and it has commanded up to this time the services of a very upright and efficient officer. I do still regret that any gentleman has thought it necessary to come forward with a proposition to increase this salary. I repeat that it is no time to increase salaries now, when the whole country is absolutely suffering from the weight of taxation imposed upon it.

It is not a single office, sir, that is in question. The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows that you cannot increase this salary without increasing others. One salary is made to correspond with another which has been increased. You are always raising salaries. There is never any pressure in the other direction. I think a sound public sentiment demands a reversal of the rule; that there shall be a reduction of compensation in all public employments. I regret that this proposition to increase salaries should be made. I know the young gentleman very well who fills this office, and he performs his duty faithfully and well. But he has received heretofore a salary of $1,800, which has been deemed sufficient. I do think that when a salary is sufficient to command the services of an intelligent, competent, and honest officer, it should be regarded as high enough. Any proposition to increase it, in view of the present condition of our affairs, is almost criminal.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. RANDALL; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the one hundred and twenty-ninth and one hundred and thirtieth lines of this bill. They relate to the chief clerk and the journal clerk of the House. Their salaries are fixed at $3,600 each, "while such positions are held by the present incumbents, and no longer." No provision is made for the salaries of such officers in case of a change. Should there not be some provision for fixing the salary when the office is held by others than the present incumbents?

Mr. GARFIELD. They will then fall back to the old salary which was before fixed by law.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I move to amend the clause relative to the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means, so as to reduce his salary from $3,000, as here proposed, to $2,592. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is mistaken in supposing that at the last session the House increased the salary of these clerks. I have before me the bill which passed the House and went to the Senate, and which fixed the salary of the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means and the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations at $2,592. There was an attempt to increase it to $3,000, but it failed in the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. My recollection was that the bill in that form passed the House. I have done my duty in presenting this, and the House may do what they see fit in regard to it.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I would inquire why the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means and the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations are given higher salaries than the clerks of any other committees?

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman, perhaps, will recognize the fact that the clerks of these committees are clerks who are reqnired to be in daily attendance. The Committee on Appropriations is a committee that meets every secular day almost without exception. It frequently meets, as it did this year, a month before the beginning of the session. The clerk of that committee during the vacation is engaged in getting up material for the coming session. From the organization of these committees it has been conceded that the work required of them was far in excess of that required of the clerks of any other committees of the House. I believe that they always had a salary much larger than the salaries of other clerks. I have answered the gentleman's question in regard to the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I will say that I propose to follow this motion with a like motion in regard to the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. SMITH, of Ohio, and it was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I now move a similar amendment, in regard to the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, to reduce his salary from $3,000, as here proposed, to $2,592. That will make the salary of the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, the same that we have just made that of the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. I move to amend the clause in regard to fourteen messengers, by striking out $1,500 for each of seven messengers, and inserting $1,728. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if the pay of these fourteen messengers is not regulated by law?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is only fixed from year to year by appropriation bills.

Mr. PRATT. Will the gentleman inform me what has usually been the salary of these messengers, prior to the last appropriation bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before last winter one set of these messengers received much larger pay than the other. It was believed by the Committee on Appropriations that the second set, who performed nearly the same class of duties as the first, although not quite so important, should receive more compensation and the first set less than before, so as not to increase the total appropriation for that purpose. We therefore scaled down the one class part way and brought the other up part way and left them where they are now. That was believed to be the more equitable arrangement.

When the service was organized the mail-boys who belonged to the second grade were those who went with the wagons and delivered the packages; the others were responsible for making up the packages and assorting the mails. Sometimes those duties were done interchangeably. But we thought there was too great a distinction between the two classes, and therefore we made the compensation as it now stands. It seems to us to be a more equitable arrangement than to have the great difference there was before.

Mr. PRATT. I would call attention to the fact, as I understand it, that by the bill known as the salary bill, passed by the Forty-second Congress, the pay of these messengers was fixed at $1,978. By the repeal of that law their pay was left at $1,728, which was the amount they were entitled to receive by law. The last appropriation bills, however, gave them but $1,500. If that statement is correct, it seems to me there is no reason why these messengers, who perform very laborious services, should not be restored to the pay they were entitled to under the previous law. It seems to me to be better to have the pay of these employés fixed by general law rather than by the annual appropriation bill from year to year.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. PRATT, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I observe in lines 128 and 129 this provision: "officer charged with disbursing the contingent fund, $576." I would like to know what officer this is and what salary he gets.

Mr. GARFIELD. He is the Clerk of the House. His salary is $4,320. He is allowed this in addition as disbursing officer.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Why not put it in his salary directly?

The Clerk read as follows:

For postage-stamps for the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Clerk, and the Postmaster of the House of Representatives, each $100, $300.

Mr. HOLMAN. There seems to be a good reason for providing for postage-stamps for the Sergeant-at-Arms, and possibly for the Postmaster. But I can see no reason why there should be an appropriation to furnish postage-stamps to the Clerk of the House. I am not aware that he has any official correspondence requiring such an appropriation.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Clerk is required by law to send out large masses of documents, as the gentleman knows. He has the folding-room under his care.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the sending out of those documents is not paid for out of this appropriation. Members determine for themselves how they shall be sent.

Mr. GARFIELD. Besides, the Clerk of the House, as the gentleman very well knows, must necessarily have large duties in the way of official correspondence. If the gentleman wants to strike out this appropriation for postage of the Clerk I have no objection; but that officer has made a special application for such an appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. This appropriation cannot be put on the ground of expenses incurred in distributing public documents, for they are distributed under the direction of members themselves.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not mean that the Clerk pays the postage on those documents; but I suppose the gentleman is aware, from his own experience, that the Clerk uniformly—I think without exception—writes to each member, inquiring where and how he will have his documents sent, whether by express or in some other way. I presume there is not a gentleman here who has not received during the course of a year one or more such official communications from the Clerk of the House. Besides that, he receives the credentials of members; he has charge of that whole matter; and I suppose we would not require him to carry on correspondence of that kind without providing for paying his postage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will state the object I had in calling attention to this matter. This is the first appropriation of this kind within my knowledge; and it is very certain that if we now fix the amount too high, it will be much more difficult to reduce it hereafter than to fix the proper amount now. It does seem to me that if any appropriation is to be made for this purpose, (and perhaps a small appropriation is necessary,) the amount should be very small. I do not think that any such amount as $100 is required. The Sergeant-at-Arms, for whom the same amount is proposed to be appropriated, has infinitely more official correspondence with members than the Clerk of the House can have.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course this is a matter of judgment. We cannot tell how much will be required. If the gentleman thinks that the amount ought to be cut down, let him move to reduce it.

Mr. HOLMAN. This appropriation does not go into the contingent fund. It will be observed that it is an absolute addition to the salary of this officer.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let me ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether the bound documents to which members are entitled are not all sent through the Clerk.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly; but they are sent by express.

Mr. KELLOGG. All the correspondence in regard to those is carried on by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment before the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by making the appropriation for postage-stamps for the Clerk of the House and the Postmaster fifty dollars each.

A MEMBER. Why not include the Sergeant-at-Arms?

Mr. HOLMAN. The Sergeant-at-Arms has constant correspondence with members.

Mr. GARFIELD. The amendment, if adopted, ought to make the paragraph read in this way:

For postage-stamps for the Sergeant-at-Arms, $100; for the Clerk and the Postmaster of the House of Representatives, $50 each.

Mr. HOLMAN. Or so much thereof as may be required.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly. Perhaps the gentleman would require these officers to give bonds as a security that they will not swindle the Government in this respect.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was not agreed to, there being ayes 20, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For newspapers and stationery for members of the House of Representatives, officers of the House and committees of the House, including $6,000 for stationery for the use of the committees and officers of the House, $43,750.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend the clause just read by striking out "newspapers and." I think that the word "newspapers" was inserted inadvertently. I ask also that a corresponding change be made in the appropriation for the Senate. Of course, if a member chooses to order newspapers out of the $125 allowed him for stationery he can do so. But we ought not in this bill to make an appropriation to pay for newspapers.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this amendment will be considered as agreed to, and a corresponding change will be made in the appropriation for the Senate.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of superintendent and assistant in Botanic Garden and green-houses and two additional laborers, under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, $12,146.

Mr. GARFIELD. The chairman of the Committee on the Library has called my attention to what he thinks is an error in lines 257 and 258. In accordance with his suggestion, I move to amend the clause just read so that it will read as follows:

The pay of superintendent and assistants in Botanic Garden and green-houses, and laborers, under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, $12,146.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. How many assistants are employed?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know; I think the number is not regulated by law. The superintendent is allowed so much money to disburse for assistants, &c. I think there are some twenty laborers employed a part of the year, making an average of perhaps ten the year round.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Then this matter is in the discretion of the superintendent?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that amendment will be better understood than it is before the vote is taken.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. GARFIELD. As amended it provides for the pay of superintendent and assistants in the Botanic Garden and Green-house, and laborers, without saying how many; the amount of the appropriation being left at $12,146, to be expended under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, which is charged with the care of this matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. You do not propose to change the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to object to the amendment, but I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether this appropriation has not been increased from year to year?

Mr. GARFIELD. This appropriation has been the same for many years. We have put in special appropriations for the improvement of the grounds, but this item has continued for many years to be the same.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will say in addition that once or twice I tried to do something in the House to curtail expenses in this direction; but I have always run against the poetry of flowers and some historical reminiscences which the House seems to cherish. In 1845, I think it was, Admiral Wilkes, who made an expedition almost around the world, if not quite around it, brought home with him, as did Commodore Perry about the same time, from the East, some rare exotic plants, which were temporarily turned over to the Committee on the Library, who had a sum of money appropriated to enable them to take care of them. We authorized the taking of a piece of public ground at the foot of the hill on which the Capitol stands, where they planted these exotics. That, sir, was the beginning of the Botanic Garden, as it is called. They were nursed next year by an additional appropriation, and so on, until finally this grew into a permanent green-house and garden. With the adornments of the grounds we have what is now called, as I have said, the Botanic Garden. It has stood for the last twenty-nine or thirty years. It is a beautiful adornment of the Capitol. I would not by any means overturn or destroy it, but at the same time I have felt it is not the kind of expenditure which could be defended as well as some others. I think it is conducted with great economy and skill by the very efficient man who has had charge of it. I believe he allows himself to be paid but $1,800 a year because his hard Scotch sense tells him if there was a larger salary his place would be eagerly sought after by others. I have admired the man for his judgment in never asking an increase of his salary—for not going up where the wind blows fiercely. For the pay of superintendent and assistants in the Botanic Garden and Green-house and laborers under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress for six or seven years the appropriation has been substantially as it is in the present bill, that is, $12,146.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word. I do not think the fact of this historical reminiscence has as much to do with this Botanic Garden as that it furnishes the bouquets and boxes of flowers and plants which are sent out each session to members of Congress. Those things are much more taken into the account, I think; and although there are many other expenditures which might be better dispensed with on some accounts as matters of taste, I have never yet believed there was any good public ground upon which this Botanic Garden could be defended. The only reason why it has remained intact up to this time is that adverted to by the gentleman from Ohio so admirably, not only the intelligence and efficiency of the superintent of the Botanic Garden, but his good sense in not provoking jealousy or causing struggles to be made for his position. I recollect my attention was attracted to the appropriation for this purpose when only $5,000 was provided for the actual expenditures for the Botanic Garden, including the salaries of the superintendent and the persons employed by him. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will discover, I think, that within a comparatively few years there has been an increase in this item. I know there have been appropriations for large amounts to enlarge and improve the garden, but those, however, were merely temporary; but in reference to this permanent appropriation, so far from remaining intact, it seems to me there has been an increase in the amount. I do not, however, make any motion. I will only say in conclusion that if this institution is to be kept up at all, I do not think it can be better managed than it is at present.

Mr. HOSKINS. I move to strike out, from line 259, "$12,146," and insert "$10,000." I do this for the purpose of testing the sense of the committee whether they want to reduce the appropriation or not.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to say a word in reference to this appropriation. I admit that I find in this appropriation bill, in the salaries paid to a large number of men, in my judgment gross extravagance. I say it is gross extravagance to pay a simple messenger in the post-office $1,500 a year. I say it is gross extravagance to pay police officers $1,800 a year each, and a police captain over $2,000 a year. The extravagance in this bill is right where the employés are in the immediate presence of members of Congress. The moment you get into the Library department, where they are removed from the House, you find Mr. Spofford there, in charge of that immense Library, with all the qualifications necessary for the position, receiving only $4,000 a year. The salaries of his assistants range from $2,500 down to $1,000; and they are required by the very necessities of the place to be acquainted with from four to six different languages. All of them are graduates of colleges. They work all the year round. They are not absent one single day; and yet your police officers employed around this Capitol receive more pay for kicking their heels on the marble floor down stairs than these men who have charge of this Library.

Now, let us take the case of this Botanic Garden. You have a man in charge there who is entirely competent, and yet he receives only $1,800 a year, and he works every day the year round; while your messenger, who only opens a door to let you in, and that for only ten months out of twenty-four, receives the same pay, or nearly the same pay.

His assistants receive $1,000 a year, his laborers $700 a year, and the necessary labor employed of the assistants and laborers in that Botanic Garden takes up every dollar of the $12,000 appropriated.

Now, sir, I do not concede that this Botanic Garden is of no use. It is of use to have those pictures around this Hall, and yet they bring no money to this House and no money to this country. They are things useful to this country, in regard to which you cannot calculate the exact percentage of profit in money to be derived from them. There is beauty in those pictures; there is beauty in statuary; there is beauty in flowers; and all the beauty we find in all these things is necessary to educate the people of this country.

Why, sir, I would give more for a boy brought up in the presence of a library, sitting under its shelves, and looking at the books on them, than I would for a boy brought up without that privilege. He will show the benefit which those books have conferred upon him all through his life; he will show every day and hour of his life that he has derived strength and culture, and everything that makes life pleasant, from his association with books. And so we grow better men and better women by beholding beautiful pictures and beautiful flowers, and all objects of that character.

I hope the appropriation will not be cut down; but that the Library Committee will be allowed to continue this work, as it has done heretofore.

Mr. BECK. When the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations rose to bring this bill before the committee, I desired him to make some explanation of it. Of course I have been unable to see it till this morning, and have only been able to glance over it and the pamphlet accompanying it, which speaks of very great reduction. I desired him, when he was making some general remarks on the bill some moments ago, to explain how it is and what is the reason that the amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations in this bill, being as it is $20,031,712.99, is more than a million in excess of what the same committee recommended to us in the corresponding bill on the 16th of February last. I hold the two bills in my hand. The total amount then recommended was $18,977,326.30. Now it is twenty millions and a fraction.

Mr. GARFIELD. I can answer the gentleman from Kentucky in a word. When I reported the bill of last year, there was a very large item, an estimate of $2,000,000 of judgments of the Court of Claims, that we had not inserted in the bill, for the reason that we wished to take time to consider it; and when we came to pass the bill we cut that down to one million, and put it in the bill. The bill as reported, therefore, was short two millions of the estimates; but later in the session we added a million on that particular item alone. Now we have brought in all that we expect to bring in for the Court of Claims in this bill.

Mr. BECK. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that the estimate for the Court of Claims in this bill is only $435,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. And the amount appropriated last year in the corresponding bill is $1,000,000.

Mr. BECK. I am speaking now of the difference between the total amounts submitted by the committee in the bills of last year and this year.

Mr. GARFIELD. And I have answered that we did not submit the estimate for the judgments of the Court of Claims in the first print of the bill, because we wanted to take more time to consider that item and to hear from that court. This is the reason why the amount of the bill as originally printed was smaller last year than it is this year.

Mr. BECK. That only accounts for a fraction less than $400,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. It accounts for a million dollars.

Mr. BECK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I am calling attention to the amounts reported in this bill by the Committee on Appropriations. Last year the amount for the Court of Claims was $38,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman does not understand me. We appropriated for the Court of Claims judgments $1,000,000.

Mr. BECK. I hope I can make myself understood. The bill, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations to the House, by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] himself, in February last, amounted to $18,977,000, and contained $44,000 for the Court of Claims. The bill reported now contains $435,000 for the Court of Claims. Where, then, is the reduction you have made?

Mr. GARFIELD. I answer the gentleman again, that I did not refer to the payment of the judges of the Court of Claims, which he has correctly reported; but to the fact that the judgments of the Court of Claims, which were $1,000,000 in the bill of last year, were not reported in the first bill at all, which he now holds in his hand, for the reason I have stated, but were brought in subsequently, after the Committee on Appropriations had had time to consider them, and that added a million dollars to the bill as reported last year.

Mr. BECK. But the whole amount now put in for the Court of Claims is $435,000, against the lesser sum last year.

Mr. GARFIELD. Well, the gentleman has made the explanation himself.

Mr. BECK. Now, allowing $400,000 for the judgments of the Court of Claims, there is still remaining $600,000 of excess over what was voted last year, in spite of all the statements of the committee of a reduction of expenditures.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now, I will make another statement to the gentleman. As he will remember, also as a matter of history, when the bill was introduced last year, it was stated that when we came to consider the appropriations for the War Department, it was intended to change the mode of appointment in the clerical force; that at that time a large sum of money, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars, was paid to the clerks of the War Department, who were in what was known as the general service, and they were paid under the Army appropriation bill. After reaching that portion of the bill, on the recommendation of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] the whole of the appropriations for the War Department was stricken out, and an amendment was put in that left out of the service all the general-pay persons and appropriated for them in terms. That swelled the amount of the bill by several hundred thousand dollars, but it decreased the bulk of payments by decreasing the payment of the Army. That makes a further difference.

Mr. KELLOGG. My friend from Ohio will remember that it decreased the actual expense some $200,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir; that is true. Let the gentleman from Kentucky compare the bill, item by item, with the bill of last year, and let him point out, if he can, the items that are increased.

Mr. BECK. One question. Is there any possible way of arriving at the details of the amounts expended in each Bureau of the Departments? Is it not customary to vote an aggregate to each Bureau, and is there any way of telling what items that money is expended for?

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is not correct in saying that a Bureau is allowed a large sum of money.

Mr. BECK. A Department, then.

Mr. GARFIELD. Nor a Department.

Mr. BECK. A Department is.

Mr. GARFIELD. A Department can pay only the amount appropriated for it, and they cannot, under a ruling of the Secretary of the Treasury recently made, pay a clerk of one class out of an appropriation made for another.

Mr. BECK. When was that order made?

Mr. GARFIELD. Some time during the season when Mr. Bristow was in office.

Mr. BECK. I am glad to hear it; it was not the rule before.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to correct a mistake made relative to these salaries. I have information that the superintendent of the Botanic Garden receives only $1,650, and he has six assistants at $800.

Mr. GARFIELD. I thought he received $1,800. He ought to.

Mr. FRYE. Only $1,650.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For watchman at Rawlins Square, and one at Pacific Place, at $540 each; in all, $1,080.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations again, and it is why is it necessary to have watchmen at each one of these squares? There are squares all about the city, and watchmen are paid to take care of each of them. I think that perhaps the largest part of them may need a watchman; but there are five or six squares which are not as large as this room, and surely no watchman is needed there.

Mr. GARFIELD. Which one of these squares is not as large as this room?

Mr. BECK. There is a little one, I believe, near Massachusetts avenue and Fourteenth street which is just about the size of this room.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will notice he will see that the squares for which watchmen are granted are squares of large size, with trees and other things in them; such squares as La Fayette and Franklin and others. Of course the gentleman will agree that in such squares watchmen are necessary. Then there is Lincoln Square, where they are planting a large number of trees, which must be cared for. Then Rawlins Square has been added—a small square—the smallest in size; but there during the summer there has been erected a bronze statue to General Rawlins, and of course it is indispensable to have an officer to protect it from injury.

Mr. BECK. There is a square at the intersection of Massachusetts and Vermont avenues.

Mr. GARFIELD. There they have a fountain and shrubbery and seats, and unless they are taken care of the fountain might be injured, and the small shrubbery must be cared for.

The gentleman will notice that the compensation for a place of that sort is but $540. A crippled soldier is placed there, who lives in the near neighborhood, and he is paid only about half, or a little more than half, the ordinary wages of a common laborer. In that way we get service done without paying even the full pay of a laborer. I think gentlemen will find, if they will go through all these items, that they have been put down to not more than a reasonable basis for the proper protection of the public property.

Mr. BECK. I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I notice that there is a distinction in these salaries. Some get $720 and others but $540.

Mr. GARFIELD. Some of these squares are larger than others, and the watchmen in them are laborers as well.

Mr. RANDALL. How about Washington circle? Is it that circle on Pennsylvania avenue?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is; and where that horrible statue of Washington is. And as the wind blows to-day about the tail of that horse, my only fear is that any person appointed there at a smaller salary than $540 a year would be utterly demoralized, at least in regard to matters of art. I do not know but, as a matter of protection to American genius and mind, we ought to increase the salary of that man so that he may fortify himself by reading works of art.

Mr. SPEER. Are the people in that neighborhood disposed to attack that statue?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. The gentleman ought to move to strike out——

Mr. GARFIELD. The statue?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. No; the appropriation for the watchman for that circle; for if the watchman is withdrawn the boys would knock off the horrible tail he talks about.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then we would have to re-tail the horse.

The committee rose informally.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their Clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 119) to continue the board of audit to examine and audit the unfunded or floating debt of the District of Columbia.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, and proceeded with the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The Clerk read the following under the heading "Department of State:"

For six chiefs of Bureaus, (consular, diplomatic, accounts; rolls and library, statistics, and indexes and archives,) and one translator, at $2,400 each, $16,800.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend the paragraph just read by adding the following:

And the chief of the Bureau of Accounts may be appointed by the head of the Department disbursing clerk of the Department of State.

The Secretary of State requests this change in order to enable him to have the disbursements of the Department properly made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The following was read:

For additional force required for the new building to be occupied by the Department, namely: Captain of the watch, $1,200; two lieutenants of the watch, at $1,000 each; eight watchmen, eight laborers; chief engineer, $1,200; one assistant engineer, $1,000; four firemen, at $720 each; in all, $19,800.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to insert before the words "four firemen," &c., the words "conductor for an elevator, $720." The Secretary of State writes to the committee that an elevator has been added in order to give rapid communication between the several stories of that building, and he asks for this appropriation for a person to take charge of it.

Mr. RANDALL. This whole paragraph seems to me to be entirely new matter. It is in relation to the new State Department building, is it not?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is all for the new building.

Mr. RANDALL. We should know how far we are going in this matter.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. It seems to me that there are altogether too many officers provided for this new building. There is a captain of the watch at $1,200, and two lieutenants of the watch at $1,000 each. I move to strike out the provision relating to two lieutenants of the watch.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say that this portion of the bill relating to this additional force was under the special charge of my honorable colleague from Maryland, [Mr. SWANN.] I ask that he be allowed to answer any question that may be asked in regard to the additional force required for this new building.

Mr. RANDALL. As this is the commencement, I thought it the proper time to cut it down as low as possible.

Mr. SWANN. I will say in regard to this force which is required for the new State Department building, and which will go into operation now in the course of a very short time, that the subject has been duly considered by the Secretary of State and by others who have communicated with him especially in this matter. In regard to the elevator—an institution which is provided for this new building—it is utterly impossible to have it properly managed without an engineer to take charge of it. It is necessary to have a skilled engineer who understands the operation of the machinery connected with that elevator. I believe it to be utterly impossible to provide for the safety of the Department in all its parts and communications, considering the number of persons who resort there, without an elevator and without a proper person to take charge of it. I consider it not only as necessary, but as indispensable; and it will be found that the amount asked for is very limited. I consider it absolutely necessary, involving as it does a very small expense, and being an important consideration in connection with the safety of the lives of the number of persons who resort to that Department from day to day in the transaction of business. It is a new office, and one which is indispensable.

In regard to the other offices here asked for, the watchmen who are placed in charge of the building, the House must know that that building is very much divided or separated; that there are a great many doors that require to be guarded. It is utterly impossible to have them properly guarded unless you give the additional force which is asked for by the Secretary of State. I believe that he has looked very carefully into this matter, and I believe this force which he asks for is indispensable in order to properly guard that building.

I believe that the Secretary of State has asked for nothing more than is necessary. The committee has cut down the appropriations for his Department to what I believe to be the lowest practicable sum, in view of the size of the building and the large force necessary to give it proper protection. Without an increase of force to the extent asked by the Secretary of State it will be utterly impossible to give that protection necessary for properly conducting the business of the Department. This is not only my own judgment, but also that of others who have looked into the wants of the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] proposing to insert "conductor for the elvator, $720."

Mr. HOLMAN. Even if this officer be necessary, it seems to me that the salary should not be higher than $540, the amount named for a number of other employés in this bill. I do not propose to antagonize the amendment; but it does seem to me that the salaries might be made a little more reasonable. No special qualifications will be required in this employé. I move, therefore, to amend by fixing the salary at $540.

Mr. KELLOGG. All officers of this class have their salaries now fixed by law at $720. That is the rate of pay all through the Treasury Department, and in other Departments.

Mr. HOLMAN. That that is not the case is manifest, from the fact that within the last half hour we have passed appropriations providing for paying a number of employés $540. I will not, however, press my amendment. I withdraw it.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GARFIELD, it was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by striking out these words: "captain of the watch, $1,200; two lieutenants of the watch, at $1,000 each." Now, it will be observed that we are providing for new officers, new employés; and to have a captain and two lieutenants for a force of eight men is ridiculous. I never heard of such a thing before.

Mr. GARFIELD. This subject has been very fully discussed already. I desire merely to call attention to what is wanted here. The Government is now about to enter upon the occupancy of one wing of what will be perhaps (with the exception of this Capitol) the largest of all the public buildings in the United States. We are now about to organize whatever police force that building is to have for its care and protection. In the Treasury Department there are sixty people employed to watch and take care of the building. One wing of the State Department building—probably one-fourth of the whole—being substantially completed, we are asked to provide for three officers, (a captain and two lieutenants,) with eight watchmen, for the police of that Department, and also eight laborers for keeping the building cleanly and for doing whatever labor of that kind may be required. We were also asked to allow two assistant engineers and five firemen. We have struck out the provision for one engineer and one fireman, and have proposed to allow the Department the other employés asked for. Possibly we might leave off one lieutenant for the present; I do not know but that would be fair. But to say that we shall have a force of watchmen with nobody in command of them, except one of their own number at laborer's pay, or something like that, is absurd. For the head of the police force about a great building of that character we need a responsible man, with such a salary as will secure for the office character and standing. The gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. SWANN,] who has charge of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, went over this ground very thoroughly, and I rely very much on his judgment. I think he has made a satisfactory statement, and I am surprised that my friend from Pennsylvania should undertake to resist all that has been said on this subject.

Mr. RANDALL. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the first paragraph provides for four watchmen, who will be under the control of the Secretary of State; and there is also provision for nine laborers. Now, I think that when the new building is occupied, these men should be transferred to it.

Mr. GARFIELD. They will be.

Mr. RANDALL. It is proposed to expend $30,000 in watching and keeping clean that building. This strikes me as one of the grossest instances of extravagance I have seen in a bill of this kind.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman turn to the appropriations for the Treasury Department and say what he thinks of sixty watchmen for that building?

Mr. RANDALL. It is all wrong. I have said so heretofore.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will move to strike out the two lieutenants of the watch, I will consent. Perhaps with this reduction the force will be sufficient for the present; and as more wings of the building are completed, additional force can be authorized. Perhaps that would do. I wish to go as far as he will go to adjust this to an economical basis.

Mr. SWANN. If the gentleman will go and examine that building and see the number of openings requiring to be guarded—if he will look at the situation of the building and the places to be protected, he will find all these officers are necessary. They are necessary for the safety of the archives of the Government. They are needed for the protection of the other valuable property of the Government there. If you take into consideration the price which is paid in our great cities where elevators are used to the conductors who manage them, I am sure the gentleman will be satisfied the sum provided for in this bill is not too large.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have yielded that point.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Chairman, by the first part of the paragraph there are four watchmen provided for this State Department. The part we are now considering provides for eight watchmen, which is an additional number, making twelve in all. These twelve watchmen will be divided into four squads of three each, each squad serving six hours on duty. It will put three watchmen into a squad, and for that squad of three watchmen this Committee on Appropriations propose to provide one captain and two lieutenants! Would it not be most laughable for members of Congress to go down to the State Department and see parading through that building a company of three private watchmen commanded by three officers, one captain and three lieutenants! The very statement of such a proposition is most ridiculous, and the wonder is that my learned and able and eloquent friend from Maryland [Mr. SWANN] could be brought, with all his devotion to the public service and care for the public interest, to consider favorably for one moment a proposition so absurd. It is not surprising, therefore, that the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, when this part of the bill was reached, very graciously and kindly handed over its management to the gentleman from Maryland. It was a labor from which I have no doubt he was pleased to be discharged, and the assumption of which was enough to break down even the strong constitution, physical and political, of my learned friend from the city of Baltimore.

I hope, however, Mr. Chairman, this committee will not be guilty of any such ridiculous folly as to provide in the capital of the nation, but a few years after we have disbanded the real soldiers of our Army, a paper brigade in this magnificent new State Department building now being erected. We are asked to provide four companies, each consisting of three privates, and each to be commanded by three officers, only to march up the hill and then march down again! It is so absurd on its face, it is so unnecessary for every proper purpose and every proper use, that this committee, I trust, will adopt the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. RANDALL,] and start out properly and economically in making appropriations for this new State Department building.

Mr. KELLOGG. The gentleman ought to provide also for having a Gatling gun at each corner of the building for its protection.

Mr. SPEER. Yes; as my friend from Connecticut suggests, there ought to be a Gatling gun at each corner of the building—a Gatling gun manufactured in the district he represents, upon the patent of his friend Rollin White.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I had for a moment drifted away from my loyalty to the committee, deeming we might allow some of the force to be cut down, until I listened to the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He says they will be divided properly into squads of three, for duty of six hours each. If he supposes a building like this, with so many avenues from it, as the gentleman from Maryland has well remarked, with perhaps two or three hundred men at work on the construction of the new part of it—if he thinks it safe to allow that to go on in any part of the day or night without at least some one in command of whatever care is taken of it, I think, then, he makes a great mistake. He cannot expect to have each one of these officers up during the whole of the day and night and on duty the whole twenty-four hours. I say if he wants three or four separate groups of men——

Mr. SPEER. What orders or commands are to be issued by these captains or these lieutenants? What kind of drill are they to be put through?

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can better tell.

Mr. SPEER. What is the manual of drill they are to go through with under my friend's programme?

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield the floor now to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. SWANN.]

Mr. SWANN. I am very much indebted, Mr. Chairman, to my friend from Pennsylvania for the very handsome compliment he has been disposed to pay me. I am here in the interest of the Government, and for no other purpose. I am here as a practical man. I have been accustomed heretofore to deal with practical subjects. I have visited the city of Philadelphia, which is the pride of my worthy friend from Pennsylvania. No doubt he has been a good deal there, and he knows the operation of business in that city.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I cannot hear a word that is being said.

Mr. SWANN. I have only a few words to say, and I do not trouble the House often. I am merely returning my thanks to my friend from Pennsylvania for the very complimentary manner with which he has thought proper to notice my name.

I stated here that I had no object in my conferences with the State Department but to protect the public property. I believe the public property to be exposed there to an extent greater than in any other Department, perhaps, under this Government. That Department is just getting into operation. It is a new Department. They are in need of offices for the first time, and if my honorable friend will go and examine for himself he will see that the public property is exposed even at this time while labor is being employed to complete the necessary arrangements for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of State to take charge of it. He will find that it is not only exposed now, but that from the nature of the construction it will be exposed hereafter. It contains a great many valuable archives, the abstraction of which in any way would be a loss to the Government. And therefore it is that I looked with very great anxiety and solicitude to the way in which that State Department was to be protected hereafter. My honorable friend will find that there are a great many openings which require to be guarded, and which require to be guarded by proper means.

Why, sir, if you take the city, a portion of which the gentleman represents here, the chief city of his State, you will find that these things are looked after perhaps more scrupulously even than with us. You will find that there is not a hotel in the city of Philadelphia where they have not employed skilled mechanics, men who know how to make proper provision for the protection of the lives of the people. And in several instances they have thrown around them such guards and protection as we are claiming here for this great State Department, which is the leading Department connected with the operations of this Government.

I have asked no more than the gentleman must know exists in his own city and in his own State in regard to the protection of the property of the State. And I say to him that when he comes to look a little more closely than he has done into these matters, and to examine more in detail the practical suggestions which we make in regard to the organization of this State Department, he will find that it is necessary not only to pursue the course which has been recommended and suggested here, but to open his mind to a view a little more liberal of what is needed in carrying on the great operations of this Government; and I refer him to what he has seen in his own city of Philadelphia, where they have been cautious to throw around valuable property all the guards which we are claiming here for the protection of the public property.

Mr. SPEER. I move to amend the amendment by adding these words:

For one brass band, $1,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. SWANN.] The gentleman has alluded to hotels and the mode of watching them. Now, the largest hotel in my city is watched during the night by a single man. He travels through all parts of the hotel during the night, having to strike a certain number of bells every half hour. And here you are to pay for watching the State Department $20,000. It is ridiculous.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us have a vote now.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. SPEER. Did the Chair rule my amendment out of order? I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment these words:
For one brass band, $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that amendment out of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer my amendment in all seriousness. I should like to have it read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 344, 345, and 346 strike out these words:
Captain of the watch, $1,200; two lieutenants of the watch, at $1,000 each.

The question being taken on Mr. RANDALL'S amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following amendment:

In line 345, strike out the words "eight watchmen" and insert "one superintendent of the watch at $1,000, and seven watchmen at $750 each."

Mr. GARFIELD. Seven hundred and fifty is an unusual figure. Better have it $720.

Mr. HOLMAN. For myself I would rather put it at $540. I accept, however, the gentleman's suggestion, and make it $720; so that it will read "one superintendent of the watch at $1,000, and seven watchmen at $720 each."

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman had better reduce the number to six.

Mr. HOLMAN. Other gentlemen suggest that I should make the number five, and I modify my amendment accordingly.

Mr. GARFIELD. Cannot you come down another cat?

Mr. HOLMAN. In this connection I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to explain why it is that while provision is made here in the bill for eight watchmen there is no statement of what their compensation is to be?

Mr. GARFIELD. The amount is $720. There is an omission there, and I intended to remedy it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the Clerk again report my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 346, strike out the words "eight watchmen" and insert "one superintendent of the watch at $1,000, and five watchmen at $720 each."

The question being taken on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the committee to allow us to reach the portion of the bill relating to the Treasury Department, at the bottom of the next page; and I shall then move that the committee rise.

Mr. BRIGHT. I insist on my motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. I oppose it, and ask for a division.

The question being taken on Mr. BRIGHT'S motion that the committee rise, there were—ayes 33, noes not counted.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For expense of editing, printing, binding, and distributing the Statutes at Large of the Forty-third Congress, $20,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he can inform the House and the public what will be the cost of the revised statutes to purchasers.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think they have not yet reached the point where an estimate can be made.

Mr. RANDALL. I have had a great many inquiries on the subject, and I thought it an appropriate time to ask the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. The legislation of last session, followed up by the proposed legislation of this, is making a part of what was really an economical administration in a Department, one of the most expensive, and unreasonably expensive. There is scarcely an item connected with it that has not been made the foundation for increased expenditures in various departments of the Government.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think I will let the Clerk read on. That speech sounds very natural, and I will not answer it.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read down to line 379.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3813) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

TROUBLES AT VICKSBURGH, MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER. Under a resolution adopted by the House yesterday for the appointment of a select committee of five members to visit Vicksburgh, in connection with the recent disturbances in that place, the Chair names the following gentlemen as the committee: Mr. OMAR D. CONGER of Michigan, Mr. STEPHEN A. HURLBUT of Illinois, Mr. CHARLES G. WILLIAMS of Wisconsin, Mr. R. MILTON SPEER of Pennsylvania, and Mr. WILLIAM J. O'BRIEN of Maryland.

DISTURBANCES IN SOUTHERN STATES.

The SPEAKER. The House ordered that a select committee of seven members should be appointed upon that portion of the President's message relating to the condition of the South. The Chair names the following as the committee: Mr. GEORGE F. HOAR of Massachusetts, Mr. WILLIAM A. WHEELER of New York, Mr. WILLIAM P. FRYE of Maine, Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio, Mr. WILLIAM WALTER PHELPS of New Jersey, Mr. JAMES C. ROBINSON of Illinois, and Mr. CLARKSON N. POTTER of New York.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 16, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, in relation to the provision made for the care of seventy-five transient paupers in the city of Washington, in accordance with the act of March 3, 1873; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States, transmitting, in obedience to law, copies of his adjusted quarterly accounts of expenditures for the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1874; which was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of citizens of Arkansas, in constitutional convention assembled, praying for an extension of the time for filing claims for payment for stores furnished the Army by loyal citizens in insurrectionary States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Arkansas, praying for a revision of the act of April 10, 1869, extending certain privileges to settlers on public lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a letter from W. L. McMillen, respecting his credentials as a Senator from Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, presented the petition of C. C. Fulton and others, of Baltimore, Maryland, praying for the abolition of the tax on friction matches; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of David De Haven, praying compensation for a steamboat taken into the service of the United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of Maria A. Rousseau, widow of Lovell H. Rousseau, late a major-general of volunteers in the war of the rebellion, praying an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3281) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend an act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 2, 1864; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. SCHURZ presented the petition of Sophia O. Schimmelfenning, widow of Brigadier-General Alexander Schimmelfenning, praying for an increase of her pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARVEY presented a petition of a large number of citizens of Kansas, praying the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3281) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend an act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 2, 1864; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. GORDON presented the supplemental memorial of Duff Green, of Georgia, giving his views on national finances, the exchanges of money, and the products of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MERRIMON presented a resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina, in favor of an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States to open the mouth of Scuppernong River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina, in favor of an appropriation or indemnity by Congress for the destruction by fire of the court-house in the county of Davidson, in that State, in the year 1866, while in the possession and occupancy of United States troops; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina, in favor of an appropriation adequate to the completion of the work of improvement now in progress on the bar of the Cape Fear River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina, in favor of the construction of a court-house and post-office building in the cities of Greensborough and Asheville; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina, concerning the direct tax levied and collected by the Federal Government on lands in the year 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina, touching the internal-revenue laws of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina, in favor of the repeal of the tax on tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. THURMAN presented the petition of E. W. Metcalf, builder, part owner, and agent for all the owners of the ship Delphine, formerly of Bangor, Maine, praying indemnification for the total destruction of the Delphine, in December, 1864, by the rebel cruiser Shenandoah, to be paid out of the money received by the Government by virtue of the award of the tribunal at Geneva; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the petition and papers of Nicholas White.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1660) for the relief of John B. Tyler, of Kentucky, reported it without amendment.

ALLEGHENY VALLEY RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. SCOTT. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to report back the bill (S. No. 996) for the relief of the Allegheny Valley Railroad Company, and recommend its passage. The bill authorizes the payment of an ascertained balance which was covered into the Treasury under the act of July 12, 1870; and if there be no objection, I would ask for its present passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. SCOTT. It was offered as an amendment to an appropriation bill and favorably reported upon last session, but ruled out on the point of order that it was a private claim. I feel that perhaps I was negligent in not introducing a bill at that time. This is an ascertained balance due on a settlement in the Post-Office Department, but was covered in under the act of July 12, 1870. The letter of the Auditor of the Post-Office Department shows that it is there standing on the books of the Department due to the company, but covered in under that act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will hear it read for information, reserving the right to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

Mr. SCOTT. There is no written report. The whole case is in the letter of the Auditor of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the letter, then.

Mr. SCOTT. It is with the papers. Let it be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 18, 1874.

SIR: In reply to yours of the 15th instant, I have to state that there is due the Allegheny Valley Railroad Company, on account of service performed in 1868 and 1869, the sum of $7,232.75. This amount cannot be paid until an appropriation is made by Congress, under the provisions of the act of July 12, 1870.

Respectfully,

J. J. MARTIN, Auditor.

Hon. JOHN SCOTT, United States Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania how it happened that this railroad company was so unfortunate as not to get its pay as the other railway companies did, out of the regular appropriation in the time of it? What was the difficulty? There must have been something peculiar, or this state of things of course would not exist.

Mr. SCOTT. I will state for the information of the Senator from Vermont that there is a long account which shows that the account itself was not balanced until after 1870. The balance due to the company upon that long account is the sum named in the bill. There was a good deal of confusion in the business of that railroad company for a year or two. As soon as the account was balanced, the company made the effort to have payment made here, but they found that the balance of the amounts appropriated for those fiscal years had been covered into the Treasury. They then sent the claim to me; and it being so plain a case, I offered it as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, having sent all these papers to the Committee on Appropriations, and they reported in favor of it, and when it came up at the last session it was about being passed after a controversy was had in regard to another private claim in which the Senator from Illinois who sits farthest from me [Mr. OGLESBY] was largely interested. Several had been passed on the sundry civil bill, and then my friend, the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] as was right and proper, made the objection to this private claim going on that appropriation bill, and it was ruled out of order. It was my neglect, I suppose, not to introduce a bill, have it considered, and brought in regularly. It was ruled out then. It is now brought in regularly. Of course, if it is not proper to consider it now, I do not desire to press it; but the plain state of the case is that this is a balance due to the railroad company for carrying the mails for those two years. They did not get their account settled in time to get the money before it was covered into the Treasury. It was covered in, and now they want to get it out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope my friend does not think anything improper in my asking what the case is now. I have not made any objection.

Mr. SCOTT. I have not said the Senator from Vermont did anything improper at the last session. He has done nothing improper now, and he very seldom does anything improper.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That being the case, I am captured. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOTT. I take no objection to the course of the Senator from Vermont on any occasion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

It is a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Allegheny Valley Railroad Company $7,232.75, a balance due to that company, as per account balanced upon the books of the Post-Office Department, for transportation of the mails in the years 1868 and 1869, which cannot be paid until an appropriation is made therefor; the balances of the appropriations for those years having been covered into the Treasury under the provisions of the act of July 12, 1870.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE STEAMBOAT LAW.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to give notice that I shall to-morrow, after the morning hour, attempt to call up the steamboat bill, as it is called, and I shall ask the Senate to consider it at that time.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1034) to provide for the review of questions of law on findings of fact by the district courts of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSTON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1035) to aid the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company to construct a narrow-gauge railway from tide-water to the cities of Saint Louis and Chicago; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that that bill may be printed, and all other bills that call for subsidies from this Congress I hope will be printed, so that we can see what they are. It begins to look as if we shall have enough to make a book of them by themselves, and it is high time we begin to consider that subject and have them printed, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont asks to have the bill printed. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1036) for the relief of Rear-Admiral John L. Worden and the officers and crew of the United States steamer Monitor who participated in the action with the rebel iron-clad Merrimac on the 9th day of March, 1862; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1037) to establish the Inventors' Institute and Patent Emporium and Patent Manufacturing Company in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARPENTER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1038) for the relief of Sarah E. Wedelstedt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAGER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1039) for the protection of the harbor of San Diego; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1040) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to settle certain accounts between the United States and the State of Mississippi, and other States," approved March 3, 1857, to States admitted into the Union since that date; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask what the nature of that is. Is that the old 2 per cent. question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a bill in regard to 5 per cent. on Indian lands, putting newly admitted States on the same footing as other States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I correctly understand it, it is the same question that has been considered hitherto by the Committee on the Judiciary, and about which we had a debate a year or two ago.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is an entirely different question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be printed, at any rate.

The bill was ordered to be printed.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 319) making retirement in the Army and Marine Corps after a certain age obligatory, for the purpose of having it recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, that a statement may be made to them. This motion is made with the assent of the chairman of that committee.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was taken up and recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LETTA BAGLEY.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3188) granting a pension to Letta Bagley. My friend from Iowa is interested in the matter and requests me to make this motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, the name of Letta Bagley, mother of James P. Bagley, late a private in Company E, Twenty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and to pay a pension to her from the time when her name was dropped from the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REDEMPTION OF MUTILATED CURRENCY.

Mr. BOUTWELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to consider the expediency of providing for the redemption of mutilated fractional currency by the postmasters of the several cities and towns of the United States.

IMPORTATION OF CHINESE.

Mr. HAGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President as relates to Chinese immigration be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for such action and report, by bill or otherwise, as in the opinion of the committee may be appropriate and necessary to remedy the evils to which the President calls the attention of Congress.

Mr. HAGER. In that connection I beg leave to ask also for the reference of the resolution which is on the Calendar introduced by me at the last session upon the same subject, and of the memorial from the Legislature of the State of California having reference to the same matter, to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The resolution stands on the Calendar as offered by myself, instructing the committee in regard to that matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves to proceed to the consideration of the resolution indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the following resolution was taken up for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to advise with the President in regard to the expediency of opening negotiations with the Emperor of China, with a view to obtaining such modification or enlargement of the treaty with China, commonly known as the "Burlingame treaty," as will check the importation into the United States of Chinese females for immoral purposes, and of Chinese males as coolies, or for the purpose of fulfilling servile-labor engagements.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator moves that this resolution and the memorial of the Legislature of California accompanying it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

CAPTAIN J. C. BEAUMONT.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1063.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1033) to restore Captain John C. Beaumont, of the United States Navy, to his original position on the Navy Register was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the President of the United States to restore John C. Beaumont, captain in the United States Navy, now on the active list, to his original position on the Navy Register, next above Captain Charles H. B. Caldwell.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the reading of the report in that case, if there be one.

Mr. CRAGIN. There is not any report from the Senate committee. This is a House bill. Captain Beaumont was with Admiral Farragut at the time of his expedition to Europe, after the close of the war, and he commanded the Miantonomah. Some charges were brought against Captain Beaumont by some of the officers, and he was placed on the retired list. He is an old and an excellent officer. He has since been restored to the active list, but placed at the foot of the captains. All the officers who made the charges against him have withdrawn their charges and recommend his restoration to his original position. He has been in the service upward of forty years, I think, and he is one of the best officers in the Navy. I examined thoroughly the record in this case, as did the chairman of the House committee, and the bill was passed unanimously by the House; and our committee think justice requires that the officer should be restored.

Mr. SHERMAN. When an officer, after being retired, is restored to the active list, and is placed above those who have been promoted in due course, the facts ought to appear on the record. I think this bill had better be referred back to the Committee on Naval Affairs, so that the facts may be stated. It is a great hardship both in the Army and Navy to legislate persons into office above those who have been promoted in regular course. More injustice has been done in that way, in my judgment, both in the Army and Navy, than in any other.

Mr. CRAGIN. This bill restores Captain Beaumont to the position he occupied for a long time. I have not found a single officer who is not willing that he should be so restored. He will only stand, after this bill is passed, where he stood for a long time. The Senate will remember that in that expedition to which I referred the officers were feasted very largely, and it was charged that on one occasion Captain Beaumont, at a dinner party, drank a little more than he ought to have done. The men who made these charges have withdrawn them; and from the fact that he is so fine an officer the Department recommends the bill, and the Naval Committees of both Houses join in asking that he be restored.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator only makes the justice of my suggestion stronger. It seems this officer was court-martialed, tried, and retired.

Mr. CRAGIN. Not at all. He went before the board for promotion, and they failed to promote him, and then by law he went on the retired list. He has been restored since.

Mr. SHERMAN. If he has been in the service forty years he must now have reached the age at which he must by law be retired.

Mr. CRAGIN. Not quite. I may be mistaken as to the exact time, but he has been in the service between thirty and forty years. He is now on the active list. My friend from Ohio will see how mortifying it must be to an officer of his qualifications to be placed at the foot of the list, away below thirty or forty men who had always before been his juniors. He is now in active duty, and has a very responsible command.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire. The rule is that when an officer is retired in the Army or Navy his retirement makes a vacancy in the place he leaves, and some other officer is promoted to that place. Will not the restoration of this officer in this way displace the officer who has been placed in the position he occupied at the time of his retirement? Is not that the case?

Mr. CRAGIN. It will not displace anybody. It only puts Captain Beaumont over the heads of those who were formerly below him; none of them falls below the rank of captain.

Mr. LOGAN. But they are all moved down on the register?

Mr. CRAGIN. One peg.

Mr. LOGAN. I think with the Senator from Ohio that a bill of that kind ought to be examined by the proper committee. I do not want to excuse myself in such matters, because I have been guilty of aiding such legislation in two instances by a misunderstanding, one of which will come up this winter, and I will then explain it to the Senate. I have assisted in putting officers in grades above those which they occupied, on statements made to me which were afterward found not to be correct, and in that way injustice has been done. I think in a matter of this kind, where an officer is to be moved forward and other officers to be moved down on the scale, the case ought to be investigated very thoroughly by a committee, to see where the injustice is and have it reported, so that the Senate can understand it. If they do not, injustice is often done, as I know it has been in some instances in the Army. I do not know so much about the Navy.

Mr. CRAGIN. This bill was passed by the House of Representatives at the last session, examined thoroughly by the Naval Committee of the Senate, and favorably reported. It is on the Calendar as a bill reported from the Naval Committee of the Senate. It has been carefully examined. I stated before that I had examined the record of the retiring board thoroughly, and there is nothing there against Captain Beaumont. Mr. SCOFIELD, the chairman of the House committee, also went personally to the Navy Department.

Mr. LOGAN. Was not this officer retired?

Mr. CRAGIN. He was.

Mr. LOGAN. Then how does be get back to the active list?

Mr. CRAGIN. By special act of Congress two or three years ago.

Mr. LOGAN. If that is the case, it strikes me as being unjust now to move him forward. When an officer is retired either from the Army or Navy he ceases to be an officer in the Army or Navy, and is merely borne on the roll for the purpose of drawing the stipend which is given him by Congress; he is no longer on the list of active officers. If by a special act of Congress this officer was restored to the active list after having been retired, he was restored to that list by favor of Congress; and if it was just that he should have been moved above these men at that time, that was the time to do it. I merely wish to say here—not in reference to this case, but inasmuch as this is up, it is as good a place to say it as any—that a habit seems to have grown up in the Army and the Navy, under which officers come to Congress first and get an act passed putting them on the active list, and at the next session of Congress, or a session or two afterward, when the thing is forgotten, they come again and ask Congress to move them forward to some position on the list. That is done; and the next session of Congress they come and ask that the President shall be authorized to appoint them to a certain position. The President appoints them to that position and lets the commission date back three or four years. They then go to the paymaster, and draw back-pay for the time they have been performing no duty whatever. This thing has been done just in that way, and in that way impositions have been practiced upon the Congress of the United States, and it is about time to stop this course of proceeding.

The Senator from Ohio made the suggestion, and I will make the motion, that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs, for the purpose of examining the case thoroughly and seeing what the effect of this bill will be if passed; because if it is passed without some limitation it may date back to the day of retirement, and then he will ask for back-pay.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CRAGIN. There is no question of pay in this bill whatever. Captain Beaumont is now a captain, drawing a captain's pay. This bill only advances him in the grade of captain, and he draws no more pay. There is no back-pay about it, and can be no back-pay about it whatever. It simply restores him to his original position that he occupied before he was retired. He is now on the active list. This places him where he was for thirty years. That is all there is to the case.

I stated that the committee gave the matter a thorough examination, and know just as much about it now as they will if the bill is recommitted. A recommitment only delays action. I have no feeling in the matter and no wish to press the bill to-day. I saw there was an open space here, and thought that perhaps I might clear the Calendar of a single bill. I have no special objection to its going back to the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. We ought to have a report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion was agreed to.

DISBURSING OFFICERS' ACCOUNTS.

Mr. WEST. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives is hereby requested to furnish the Senate a copy of the report made to that branch of Congress by the Secretary of War, under the act of April 20, 1874, relating to the accounts of disbursing officers.

Under the law this information should have been sent to both branches; but the Secretary of War was pressed for time in transmitting it to Congress, and it was sent to the House of Representatives alone; and the House of Representatives not having determined to print it, it is desirable that this body should have a manuscript copy of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It would be a great deal cheaper to print the document than to copy a long manuscript. Let us ask for a printed copy, and it will be sent, no doubt.

Mr. WEST. The information was laid before the House of Representatives and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with discretion to that committee to order the printing if they should deem it necessary. If they do not choose to print it, we certainly must ask for a manuscript copy. If they do print it, this resolution will get us a printed copy.

Mr. SHERMAN. They will have the whole of it copied, whether it be printed or not, if we ask for a copy.

Mr. WEST. We ought to have it at any expense. It is a very important matter.

The resolution was agreed to.

HENRY HETH.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 764.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 764) to remove the political disabilities of Henry Heth, of Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to inquire if that bill has been reported from a committee?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, sir; reported by the Senator from Vermont himself from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting therefor.

JAMES JACKSON.

Mr. GORDON. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 755, also favorably reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 755) to relieve James Jackson, of Georgia, of his political disabilities was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting therefor.

DELINQUENT OFFICERS—IMPROVEMENT GRANTS.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution offered by myself on the 8th of December.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the resolution be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the Senate with a detailed statement, commencing with the 30th of June, 1865, and closing with the last fiscal year, showing therein the names of all postmasters, paymasters, quartermasters, commissaries, collectors of internal revenue, collectors of customs, officers of the Freedmen's Bureau, and any other officers or set of officers from whom any sums of money were due at the close of the last fiscal year, and which now remain unpaid; also the names of the sureties of such officers, the penalty of their official bond, the amount due and when due in each case, the total of such sums so due, by whom and from what State such officers were appointed, and whether there are any suits now pending to recover said sums of money, and if so, against whom, in what courts, and for what amount.

The President is also requested to report the number of acres of the public lands and the amount of bonds and money granted to railroads, canals, or other works of internal improvement, giving therewith the names, dates, and amounts in each case, and also the grand total; also, the number of acres of the public lands and the amount of bonds heretofore granted or voted by Congress to railroads or contemplated railroads for which no certificates or evidences of ownership have been issued, stating in detail the name of the railroad and the amount granted or voted to the same, and the grand totals of such grants.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will not press that resolution this morning, although I think it ought to be referred to a committee on account of the expense it involves. A considerable part of the information is already in print——

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. All of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know but that all of it is in print. If the Senator from West Virginia wishes merely to have it referred to the committee on that subject to see how much of the information we already have, I do not object to its being taken up; but if he wishes to pass it on the spot, as a direction to the President, who, by the way, I believe is not the proper officer—but it is not up now—I should ask him to let it lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIS. The resolution has been lying on the table over a week. However, if it is understood that it can be called up to-morrow morning, I have no objection to its going over. I did not call it up for the purpose of reference, as a similar resolution, offered by myself at the last session, was referred to a committee, with an amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. WEST,] and was reported back just about the close of the session with an unfavorable report.

I am disposed to ask only for such information as is needed, and not give unnecessary trouble to the Departments or to Congress; but there are many matters included in the resolution that Congress, so far as I have been able to learn, has not been informed upon. The desire is to get the information without giving unnecessary trouble.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot make any promise about to-morrow, and so I shall make no objection to the resolution coming up now; and when it is up we will consider what ought to be done with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Senator from West Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution which has been read.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understood the Senator from West Virginia to say that a similar resolution was referred to some committee—I do not know what one—last year.

Mr. SCOTT. The Committee on Finance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that it was reported unfavorably. I must presume that committee had some good reason for that report, though I do not remember any such report; but in order that we may know now, while we are at the beginning of the session, exactly how much of this information is already in print, and how much it is needful, therefore, to have, I make a motion to refer this resolution to the Committee on Finance, who may investigate the subject and report.

I make this motion in the interest of economy, for I have discovered, by observation, that these inquiries, which are addressed to the Departments almost as a matter of course, about all sorts of subjects, and in respect to which any Senator can be informed at any time for his own personal benefit by going to the Departments or sending a note as to any particular point, are excessively expensive, and result in no advantage to the public service or to anybody else. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended in the Departments within the last few years, I have no doubt—I may state it too high—in procuring information under resolutions that we pay no attention to, and that pass, as a matter of course, which turn out to be that style of information called by the antiquaries useless, absolutely useless. Now, we are all for economy, and we are all for every information that it is desirable to have for the public business, of course. I should be glad to have an early report from the Committee on Finance, a printed or written report, upon this particular subject, so that we may get what is needful and desirable that we do not have already, and not put the Departments to the expense of giving us that which has been in a large degree already furnished from year to year. This is the ground of my making the motion.

Mr. DAVIS. The information asked for, it will be noticed, goes back to 1865 only. The resolution offered at the last session by myself covered the same dates as the present one; but that was amended by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] so as to go back to 1853. The Departments said, through the Finance Committee, that the information called for by the Senator from Louisiana would take considerable time and great labor, as it related to the entire period of the war and went back twelve or thirteen years prior to the date named in the resolution offered by myself. I believe that was the objection, and almost the sole objection. Since 1865 probably no report has been made, certainly as to many of the inquiries here made; and both the Senate and the House, so far as my knowledge goes, are without much of this information, or nearly all of it, since 1865. The objection before was to going back to 1853. That caused the unfavorable report of the last session, as the Finance Committee then told us.

I should have, of course, no objection to a reference of the resolution with a view to economy by restricting the call to such information as has not been heretofore presented. I am sure, however, that there is much that ought to come out which has never yet been given to the public. I have great confidence in the Finance Committee; and believing, and knowing in fact, that they will at an early day report to the Senate, I shall not object to the reference proposed for the purpose I have just indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is hardly worth while to dispose of this resolution in this way. I think the Senate ought to decide it. The Committee on Finance have reported adversely to it already, and I am prepared now as one member to vote against calling on the Executive Departments for this information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will pardon me for suggesting that he forgets what the Senator from West Virginia states, that the resolution referred last year was much broader; and it may be that the committee might think that it was desirable to adopt this resolution or some part of it. So I hope my friend from Ohio will not object to the reference.

Mr. SHERMAN. Can Senators really desire information from the Committee on Finance about it? We did examine it once. We took pains to see to what extent this call would duplicate information already on our files in public documents. I am quite sure if the Senator from West Virginia will look over the resolution he will see that it will entail on the Executive Departments an enormous amount of labor. It will require them to duplicate at least twenty or thirty books which have been sent to us at every session of Congress for the last ten years. It would require an army of clerks. It calls for all the accounts of nearly all the officers of the Government, postmasters, paymasters, commissaries, collectors of internal revenue, together with a statement whether any money is due on an officer's account for a saddle broken or a bridle lost or any little matter of that kind; and then it calls upon the Departments for the names of the bail, whether the sureties are good, whether they are dead, and a multitude of information of no practical use whatever.

I am prepared to vote at once against anything of this kind; but if the Senator from West Virginia knows of any case where an officer of the Government, by name, has been negligent or has failed to account for public money or public property, or can give us such a description of a class of persons as he believes have been guilty of fraud or peculation or concealment, and will offer a resolution calling for that information, if it is not already possessed by Congress, we will all vote to give it to him. But I cannot consent to throw a drag-net over all the operations of the Government for a series of ten years, and require the Departments to duplicate information that has come to us in the ordinary course of our business, for annual reports are submitted to us on nearly all of these matters, and they are contained in volumes that are sent to us and lumber up our rooms, and are sold as waste paper, it is said, at so much per pound, and never read.

I am perfectly willing, if there is any responsibility to be taken, to vote to deny so general and broad and sweeping an inquiry as is here proposed; but I again say that if the Senator from West Virginia can tell us any case that he has ever heard of, or heard of talked about, where there has been any neglect on the part of the Government in prosecuting a person who has been intrusted with public money or public property, or any delay or any want of attention or diligence, I will vote to call for the information with great pleasure. I think it probable, if this resolution is referred to the Committee on Finance, although they spent considerable time in examining the subject at the last session, that they will report it back to the Senate with a statement that these broad and general inquiries are of no account whatever. I hold it to be the duty of the Senate to furnish any Senator with any information where he can show some degree of particularity; and where he can give a basis or show a reason for seeking for that information, it will be called for with great pleasure. I think the strict fulfillment of this resolution, if passed, would cost a very considerable sum of money and the answer would be entirely useless for any practical purpose.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I concur entirely with the Senator from Ohio; and I have so high an opinion of the candor of the Senator from West Virginia that I think I shall be willing to leave to him whether such an inquiry as this is worth while. The Senator from Ohio has called attention to the fact that it will require the investigation of the account of every postmaster in the United States since 1865. Why of every postmaster? Because although the Senator from West Virginia wants only a statement of the accounts of those from whom anything is apparently due, of course he will see that all the accounts must be explored, or else no officer can answer which of these accounts show an apparent deficit; and the same thing is true of all the other officers here enumerated.

I rose, however, not to direct attention to that, which the Senator from Ohio has done sufficiently, but to call attention to another consideration which I think addresses itself to the sense of fair play of every Senator. Here is a proposal to publish the names of all official persons from whom anything is apparently due, and not only that but to publish the names of all persons who stand in any case as sureties, along with the penalty of their bond, along with the sum for which apparently in any contingency they may be visited with prosecution. Now, Mr. President, I ask every Senator to remember what happened four or five years ago, perhaps longer than that, in the case of collectors of internal revenue. More than one Senator who hears me remembers the occurrence better than I do. A list was published and went into the press throughout all our borders, holding up many men as defaulters; so it was stated. I will speak of one case which, as it turned out, was not an average case, but the case of a majority so large that the exceptions were almost unnoticeable. I speak of the case of a man with whom I have been intimately acquainted for many years, a man whose integrity, except in that instance, was never challenged. He was published as a defaulter, I think for some $64,000 in the statement of the accounts. He was abroad at the time, in Europe, an ex-collector. He came home and devoted himself to an investigation of the account, and bringing it down to the then present time it turned out that the Government owed him $900. And yet that man had had his name hung up for a whole nation to gaze at for a year as if he were a defaulter for $64,000!

That is precisely what this is going to lead to, because here is to be a statement of the apparent account, the unadjusted account, of the controversy and difference growing out of items as small as that referred to by the Senator from Ohio when he spoke of injury to a saddle or the loss of a bridle or some small accouterment. I know that the Senator from West Virginia does not want this. I know that he is not so unjust as to seek to produce any effect to be reached only through means so palpably unfair. Therefore I should say, with the Senator from Ohio, that the fair way is for the Senate to pass upon this resolution, and I unite with the Senator from Ohio in assuring my friend from West Virginia and each other Senator that whenever he shall indicate any case which he has reason to believe there is rational cause, that he is willing to state, for supposing to require investigation, I will vote cheerfully for any information on that subject, or for any other information which does not seem to me to tend to involve great and unnecessary expense for nothing, and at the same time the probability of doing injustice not only to men who are officials, but exposing their sureties to the idea among their neighbors that they are liable for great sums of money which may even put their credit in disparagement, when in truth they are practically liable for nothing at all.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest that as this topic is under consideration we had better dispose of it.

Mr. THURMAN. No; it had better go over. I wish to say a few words on the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was asking that it might be proceeded with and finished.

Mr. THURMAN. No; it ought not to be finished in this way. This resolution must, of course, be modified; but I hope that it is not to be "whistled down the wind." There is more in this resolution than some Senators think, and I hope it will not be disposed of in any hasty or perfunctory manner. Let it lie over, and it may be modified. As it is, it is too large and would defeat itself; we never should have any answer to it at all. The Government could not give us an answer under a year with the clerical force in the Departments. It must, therefore, be modified. Let the mover of the resolution, as he has indicated he will do, have an opportunity to modify it. I hope it will not be proceeded with now. I wish to say something upon it, but I am in no condition to speak to-day, owing to the state of my throat.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is entirely satisfactory to me. I thought I was speaking in the interest of the Senator from Ohio who had risen to his feet when I appealed to the Senator from Maine to let his bill lay aside.

Mr. THURMAN. I am exceedingly obliged to my friend.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be laid aside.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 781) for the relief of James L. Pugh; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 11) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT announced the appointment of Mr. PEASE to fill the existing vacancy upon the Committee on Claims.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, when this bill was called up I said to the Senate that if it were the pleasure of the body to listen to remarks in explanation of the bill, I should feel it my duty to submit some observations in regard to its general character; but as this bill is in such reasonable form when you consider the general question and that aside from that it is chiefly a matter of detail, I tried to persuade myself that the Senators had had the bill long enough under consideration to master its details and would prefer to rely on themselves rather than on any statement I could make in regard to it. And besides, a glance at it will show that anything like a speech on the details of the bill would be endless.

I may say in the outset, Mr. President, that the bill is rather to revise and restate the public service as it exists at this time in this District than any attempt to make a new government for the District. It is only in two or three particulars that it is new and peculiar. It is a revision and a restatement with the purpose of rendering efficient the service very generally as it exists at the present time. All the subdivisions of the service are preserved, and they are supplemented only by such as are calculated to give efficiency and force and security to those which exist. So, then, Senators need not feel an apprehension that this bill is to take them by surprise as something either novel or extraordinary in its character. So far as I know and believe from the most attentive consideration of the bill for many months, I am able to state to the Senate that it is substantially what I say in regard to it—an attempt to perfect the service already in existence in this District. But of course I do not mean to say that it has not made a radical and fundamental change in the manner of doing it. That is true.

I may say in a single sentence, Mr. President, what the general character of this bill is. In effect it restores to Congress the entire jurisdictional rights and authority which belong to it. In theory, it is that this is the national capital in a peculiar and important sense; that the Constitution of the United States invests in Congress exclusive legislation over it "in all cases whatsoever" and that a corresponding obligation rests on Congress to govern this District out of that abundance of its authority. We assumed in considering this case that all exercise of authority over this District is in its nature not local, but is essentially and necessarily national; and that is so whether this authority is exercised directly by Congress or whether it be deputed; so that, consider this question as you please, Congress is always directing and governing in this District, whether it governs through that anomalous jurisdiction called the levy court, or whether it governs as formerly through the cities of Washington and Georgetown, or through that more recent and more ample authority, the territorial government. Every act of legislation and every legislative act is necessarily that of Congress. Congress is responsible for it. If Senators agree with me in regard to that general proposition, then the only question arising here is, is it a question of expediency to devolve on or depute this authority to others, or had we rather exercise it ourselves?

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Well, Mr. President, upon the most careful and attentive consideration of that subject, having regard to the history of the past, having regard to what was contemplated in the beginning, to what has been the government under the cities and to what it has been under the more recent territorial government of the District, the committee have come to the conclusion that it is wise for Congress to govern this District directly; and it is believed that in doing so Congress will not impinge popular rights at any point, and it is believed, moreover, that the best interests of the citizens will be secured by this general exercise of legislative authority by Congress.

Mr. President, with this general statement as to the principles of the bill, I will state to such of the Senators as think it worth while to give me their attention what the bill contains in a general way, how the committee have proceeded to confer this authority consistent with these general principles; that is, consistent with the general authority of the Government of the United States, acting always directly through Congress upon all questions of legislation, and at the same time freeing itself and freeing the national Executive from any interference or from any exercise of executive authority in carrying out the laws made by Congress.

And first upon the question of representation, or partial representation, or quasi representation, the committee have ignored that altogether, except in one single instance of a purely local character. It will be remembered that at the present time there is a sort of representation for the people of this District in the House of Representatives by a Delegate. We do not recommend that this be continued. We do not recommend it for the reason that no legitimate representation under the Constitution is possible, and we maintain that that ought to be conclusive and satisfactory. The framers of the Constitution did not contemplate representation, did not provide for it, nor can it be provided for except by an amendment of the Constitution. Anything like a sham representation, anything like a quasi representation of a community represented by every Senator and Representative in the land, it strikes the committee, can have no other effect under heaven than to furnish a convenient nucleus for a lobby. Such a representative or delegate has no legitimate function, and you cannot confer upon him a legitimate function. Then why attempt it? Was it a violation of the Constitution or of the theory of the Government when the framers of the Constitution provided for a district here of ten miles square where thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of people should reside and did not provide for its representation or contemplate its representation? I am not one to believe that.

In the nature of the case, the acquisition of this territory, the devotion of it to a national capital exclusively, and subjecting it to the exclusive authority of Congress, excluded the idea of local representation. Moreover, what more absurd than the idea of the people here electing a Representative or a Senator, if the Constitution could be amended to that end, when upon the theory of the Constitution every Representative and every Senator in Congress is necessarily a representative in a peculiar sense in regard to this District, charged with the highest and most sacred duties over this District, to watch over it and carefully protect it, not only provide for it in the high sense that it is a national capital and is to be isolated from all local jurisdictions or interfering interests of any character whatever, but in the nature of a sacred trust, and every Senator and Representative himself is a trustee to that end. Now, what the necessity of representation, either general or special, either real or sham? On these considerations, the committee have not recommended any representation in the shape of a delegate in either branch of Congress.

Mr. MORTON. Allow me to ask a question. What is the difference between the right of the people of this District and the right of the people of a Territory to a Delegate in Congress?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am asked a very pertinent question by my honorable friend who sits near me, and that is the difference between the case of the District of Columbia and a Territory of the United States. In the first place, it is most obvious that in their origin they are entirely different. The jurisdiction given here is exclusive and direct. Congress has the power of legislation "in all cases whatsoever" over this District, and in the same section my honorable friend will find it is analogous to and classified with the authority which the Congress is to have over that territory which it shall purchase for forts and arsenals. In none of those instances, I suggest to my honorable friend, was it ever contemplated that American communities in the sense of States were to cluster about either this capital or the forts or arsenals. The object of acquiring this District was not to form a State or a Territory; it was to be a capital, and it was to be isolated in its jurisdiction from all other jurisdictions whatever.

When you come to the question of a Territory the case is altogether different. In the first place, the organizing or governing power arises under altogether a different power in the Constitution, if there be any power at all. It has generally been considered that we had a right to do as we pleased in a Territory, on the ground that it is our property. The clause relative to the regulation of property is one of the powers which have been invoked; but no matter what this is, it is not a specific grant anywhere. It is general. We had a right to purchase territory, or we thought we had. There was great doubt about that in the beginning; but we have got over that doubt. I am speaking now of the power to acquire territory and then to govern the territory. It has been considered, as a general proposition I believe, that it came under the clause giving us the right to make regulations for disposing of the property of the United States, and it has been held that we had a right to govern it as we pleased. But, however that may be, Mr. President, you will see that the moment we organize a Territory, then begins an incipient State, then a population begins, then the American people are laying the foundations of States and communities; and so we treat them from the beginning to the end. That is the obvious difference. We are not laying the foundations of States here. We are not providing for American communities who are to inaugurate a commonwealth in due time to be admitted through their representation into the Senate of the United States and the other branch. All that is impossible here with the present Constitution. No such representation, no other representation than such as it has was either contemplated by the Constitution or is possible by its terms. That, I submit to my honorable friend from Indiana, is the distinction between the two cases of which he inquires.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand him to say, and I agree with him, that this assimilates itself to the case of navy-yards, dock-yards, and arsenals.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In its authority.

Mr. HAMLIN. I agree to that; but I ask my colleague if he can give me any case where, in any navy-yard, dock-yard, or arsenal belonging to the Government of the United States, and over which we have an undoubted jurisdiction, the Government has ever attempted in any way to assess and collect taxes outside of that system of revenue which applies to all places alike? Is there any such instance?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Not to my knowledge; but my colleague can readily conceive that a case might arise where it might be entirely proper to do that thing, though it is improbable. That is not a question of power, but a question of expediency. Therefore the inquiry which my colleague puts is not an illustration in this case, because the capital of a nation, as one of its necessities, includes population, residents; and in the other instance, that of forts and arsenals, it is quite the contrary. There no population would be presumable, none would be necessary, and none would be expedient; and the expediency of the thing would determine it, and not the question of authority.

But, Mr. President, that is a little aside from the real question; and perhaps all these remarks had better come in at some other point in the discussion. I would now invite the attention of the Senate to the general frame of the bill by which we undertake to carry out the principles which I have stated.

In the first place, we create a Department in the Government of the United States called the Department of the District of Columbia. It may be asked, "Why do you call this a Department; why the necessity of creating a Department?" That arises from this fact: The committee think that the executive duties which naturally arise on the service as it now exists, and which are now administered by three commissioners as executive officers, heretofore have been exercised by a governor when not by the mayors of the several cities, ought to be in a common head, and that common head, that chief executive head, ought to be independent of the other Departments of the Government; or, in other words, that it would not be expedient to confer on either of the present Departments the great bulk of executive duties which devolve under this bill on somebody. In the first place, it would not be well, we think, to devolve these duties upon the President of the United States. It would be onerous indeed for the President of the United States to appoint all the heads of bureaus, and not only the heads of bureaus, but all the officers under those heads of bureaus; and for this reason it was deemed advisable—and I think any intelligent Senator who looks at this subject would find it difficult not to agree to it—that there ought to be a common head in which should be conferred the power of appointment and removal under certain conditions and limitations, whatever they may be. By the Constitution this power can be exercised only in two ways: First, by the President of the United States; or, secondly, Congress may confer upon the courts or upon such heads of Departments as it creates this executive power. There was no way by which this exercise of authority could be devolved except by creating a Department, unless you devolve it upon the various existing Departments of the Government, and that the committee were satisfied would not do; and that accounts for the creation or designation in this bill of a Department, and the necessity of calling it a Department, in order to get an executive head with authority to make the necessary appointments. But it will be observed that to avoid any difficulty upon that ground, or to avoid offense to any criticism which might arise against the idea of multiplying Departments, we have provided that it shall be limited expressly to the District; that it shall have no jurisdiction conferred upon it except the duties in regard to the District. This District is to be a body corporate; it is to have power to sue and be sued, &c.

The next feature to which I invite the attention of the Senate is the chief executive head: "There shall be at the head of said Department a board of regents, to consist of three members, to be severally appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." It will be seen that instead of a Secretary of a Department, as has been the custom, we put the Department in the hands of three persons; we make three persons to constitute that board; they are always to act as a board, and their doings are always to be public; but in them is deputed the general executive authority to be exercised under this bill.

Now, Mr. President, I will call attention to what is the most trivial, the most unimportant feature of this bill, and yet it may be the most objectionable and the most offensive, and that is the name itself. It has been suggested to me that the name "regents" is improper; that it has an odor of royalty, of kingship, which in these democratic times is not quite the thing. I am warned by my honorable friend who sits near me [Mr. THURMAN] that we shall have to give that up. I shall have no great reluctance about that. It is a matter of taste. There is not a great deal, in this instance, in a name; but we had some difficulty, after all, in fixing upon the name, and I think if any Senator will set himself to work to find a just, fit, and proper name, without being a little sensitive as to what really has no special significance in it, he will find some difficulty in fixing upon the right name for these regents. In fact American politics does not furnish it. "Regents," really, in the nature of the case, comes nearer to it than anything else. What is a regent? He is a person who rules by authority. We devolve this authority. It is said, why not use the word "commissioner?" Well, what is a commissioner? What are his duties? He is not an executive officer. He is rather a negotiator, as a general thing; he is not a man who has general powers. And so you go through the whole category and there is the same difficulty. My honorable colleague upon the committee suggested to me, I being a New England man, "Why not call them selectmen?" That is very excellent; that conforms more strictly perhaps to the actual duties which devolve upon these persons than anything else; but it is not strictly applicable to these regents; and if you consider the pecuniarily embarrassed condition of this District, I would suggest a name which would be better than "selectmen," and that would be "overseers of the poor."

Mr. CARPENTER. "Supervisors."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have not the slightest objection to any gentleman feeling that "regents" is not the proper name, if he wishes to suggest a better.

Mr. THURMAN. Strike it out.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will strike it out whenever my honorable friend proposes a name to put in its place which is more apposite and more suitable to the case, and he may rest assured I shall not have the slightest feeling on the subject.

Mr. President, on this executive head, this board of regents, or this board created within this Department, devolve the true executive duties, and without reciting them at length I will say, once for all, that, first, we devolve upon them all the duties of an executive character which now exist by law in any officer in the District except the President of the United States. The President of the United States makes certain appointments. First, he appoints these regents, as I have already said. He appoints or details one or two others; he details an officer who is at the head of one other bureau; but aside from this, in this board are lodged the chief executive duties which are devolved upon any executive officer at the present time by law, and devolved by the provisions of this act; but all these duties are limited and defined. They are defined with very great elaboration, and they are limited. This board acts as a public board. It is obliged to keep a record. It has a secretary. It always acts in public. Its acts are open to inspection. The powers of these regents are precisely those which are given by existing laws, and they do not transcend them in any instance; they work within the principles of the laws as they are enacted and as they are in existence at the present time. They can make no law whatever; they have no legislative functions whatever. They have the power of making ordinances, but always strictly within the laws now in existence or which may hereafter exist, and those ordinances are always of a public character. They are to be enacted by the board in public, and they are subject to revision, of course.

The board of regents appoints all the other boards; that is, it appoints the heads of all the other boards. It appoints the members of the board of health, the members of the board of education, of the board of police, of the fire board, the board of excise, the bureau of street cleaning, the bureau of public works. The head of the bureau of public works, however, is to be an officer of the Army of the United States, detailed by the President of the United States. These, with the superintendent of buildings, embrace all the bureaus and all the subdivisions, all the branches of the public service.

Next, Mr. President, passing from the board of regents, we come to consider the board of health. The board of health is to consist of five members. I may say, in a general way, with regard to all these boards, that one general proposition will suffice to give the Senate an idea of their condition. As they are constituted at the present time, they are distinct and separate boards. As we provide for them in this bill, here are seven boards, and one set of men act in all these boards. We denominate them, I believe, not in the bill, but in the report, boards of co-operative control. Take, for instance, the board of health, which consists of five members. Three of them are appointed by the regents, and two of them are taken from the other boards. The presidents of certain other boards, the board of education and the board of police, are required to work and perform duty in the board of health, to the end that you have the co-operation of these two boards, whose co-operation is necessary always in carrying out the purpose of the board of health; and that principle runs through the whole bill in relation to all these boards. They all co-operate. The regents appoint one man as president, and then require the other boards to act in co-operation with these several boards. In that way the committee believe that they have secured very great economy, and at the same time additional efficiency. These boards act also as public boards; they keep a record, and that record is open to inspection; and any person aggrieved has his remedy, which is provided for by this bill. Their duties are strictly defined and limited, and that accounts for the great volume of this bill; and they cannot act, of course, outside of its provisions.

Mr. CARPENTER. I should like to ask in that connection, before the Senator passes from that point, what are the subjects to be regulated by ordinances by the board of regents? To what extent do they pass ordinances?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. They may pass ordinances upon any subject-matter of the public service consistent with the existing laws. It covers the entire scope of the service.

Mr. CARPENTER. I see in the seventh section—

That the authority of making, publishing, amending, abrogating, and promulgating ordinances shall belong exclusively to said regents, and they may exercise the same, in aid of the powers hereby conferred, to check vice and immorality and to enforce obedience to this act, but always consistent herewith, as they shall deem best for the public welfare.

Is there any other provision in the bill giving authority to make ordinances?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir; none other.

Mr. CONKLING. It is all covered by that provision?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir; we intend to limit them specifically and precisely to the law. The same thing is true in regard to the other boards, except that they are not authorized to make ordinances at all. The several boards may propose ordinances to the regents for adoption, and the regents may consider them, and if they believe they are for the good of the public service, they may adopt them as a matter of course, but not necessarily. The other boards, on the contrary, can only make such orders as are consistent with their peculiar branch of their service.

With these brief remarks I will pass from these boards, unless some Senator has some inquiry to make in regard to them, to chapter 11, pages 126 to 132, which is "of elections," and this has regard to the board of education. The board of education consists of eight members, four of whom are to be appointed by the regents; one is to be ex officio a member of the board by reason of his being the United States Commissioner of Education, and the other three are to be elected; and that is the only instance where the elective franchise is allowed by this bill. It relates to public schools, and as the people are intimately associated with that subject we have, in that instance, allowed the people to elect three of the members of that board, and that is carefully provided for by the bill.

The twelfth chapter is in regard to "various officers," and that relates to notaries public. We limit the number of notaries public to fifty, and we specify and define their duties. This chapter also provides for one solicitor, who is to be the principal law-officer of the Department, and all the other duties are devolved upon the Department of Justice.

Chapter 13 creates a municipal court to consist of three judges, who are to hold their office for six years, at a salary of $3,000 each, and who are to have all the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, and whose jurisdiction is to be increased so that they will have jurisdiction in civil cases to the amount of $250. They supersede the office of justice of the peace and its jurisdiction. It is also provided that these judges shall be authorized to hold a session of the police court.

Mr. CARPENTER. Is the police court left in force by the bill?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The police court is left intact and these justices are authorized to hold the sessions of that court, under such rules and regulations as the Supreme Court shall direct, with a view of relieving that court.

Mr. CARPENTER. Then the municipal court is itself a civil court.

Mr. CONKLING. With civil jurisdiction?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes.

Mr. CARPENTER. But the judges may sit in the police court?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir. The next chapter, and the one that has given us more difficulty than the rest, and the one which is regarded perhaps as the most important in this bill, is that of taxation. By the theory of this bill it will be seen that the Government of the United States assumes the government of the District. At the same time, in conformity with the theory of this bill, it assumes to direct all the expenditures. It makes all the legislation, governs everything, directs everything, provides for everything, and providing for everything, of course it provides for the expenses, current and ordinary, interest of the public debt, and everything that pertains to the affairs of the District. It will be noticed that by the terms of this bill we provide for estimates. It is made the duty of the regents to make detailed estimates annually to the President to be communicated to Congress for the entire civil service of this District. All expenditures of every description are to be made upon appropriations. All moneys, from all sources, are to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and all expenditures and bills of every description are to be audited and all warrants controlled in the Treasury of the United States. The question then arises, what contribution ought the people of this District to make toward the expenses of this government? The General Government assuming all, directing all, controlling all, being responsible for all, and providing a government in all respects one, it is to be hoped, satisfactory to the people, giving them privileges and immunities and protection such as may be found in any of the cities or towns in the country, what ought such a people to contribute? The committee were instructed by the terms of the act to state the proportion which the Government of the United States and the people ought to contribute to the expenses of this government. Upon the best consideration we could give that subject, we believed that proposition not susceptible of exact statement, not a mathematical proposition in any way. What might be a proper proportion to-day, next year would be quite the reverse. Therefore on the theory of this bill the committee have assumed that the just contribution which the people of this District ought to make is that reasonable tax which such a people, having such privileges and immunities, ought to be expected to pay for them. We have put the rate of taxation on a fair and just valuation of the property at 2 per cent., which the committee understands to be about a medium tax throughout the country.

There is a provision in regard to an enrollment of the militia. All able-bodied men are to be enrolled as heretofore. I believe there is a force of five thousand men provided for by the laws as at present existing. We have modified and limited that so that the minimum of service is a little less than one thousand, while the maximum, at the discretion of the regents, may be two thousand, and perhaps twenty-one hundred.

Then there are some general provisions of this bill which I suppose I have a right to assume are somewhat familiar to Senators, simply with reference to the management of these bureaus and merely providing for them.

The committee also recommend, and it is made a provision of this bill, that the commissioners for the government of this District and for other purposes shall frame, or cause to be framed, suitable regulations or ordinances for carrying this bill into effect. That devolves upon the present commissioners and upon the future commisioners also, the preparation of a code, rather the revision of so much of the laws as relate exclusively to the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, with these brief and desultory remarks I will yield the floor, unless some Senator desires to ask me further questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) If no amendment be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, do I understand that the honorable Senator who reported this bill has finished his explanation of its provisions?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. BAYARD. The very bulk of this bill demands a long time for its examination in order that the contents may be understood. As the Senator from Maine has very properly said, the people of this District are placed in a very anomalous position, differing entirely from that of any other community in the United States. They are without direct representation on the floor of either House of Congress, without vote to sustain any nominal representation that might be given them, for representation would be a mere shadow of course without the power to assert themselves by the votes of their representatives. I confess my own desire to have an opportunity of consultation with the citizens of this District, whose property is to be affected for better or for worse to such an extent by the proposed measure; and, therefore, I shall ask that this bill lie over and be not acted upon until after the approaching recess of Congress. I presume there will be no objection to this, because every one feels that it is a sweeping measure, pregnant with ill or good results to this community, and not to them alone, for the people of the United States in general are very seriously affected by a measure which comprehends the disposition of the liability, presently or ultimately, for an enormous debt which has been incurred in the last few years by the misgovernment of this District.

For these and for other reasons, which it is not necessary for me now to state, and which I am not at present prepared to state, I hope that this measure may lie over for the purpose of examination which it will receive, and for the purpose of allowing those of us here who may have the opportunity a chance to consult with the people of the District, who are so vitally interested in having something in the shape of a good government set up over them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make a motion to that effect?

Mr. BAYARD. I do; that the bill lie over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until what time?

Mr. BAYARD. I will say until the 10th of January.

Mr. THURMAN. I concur with my friend from Delaware that this bill ought not to be acted upon finally until after the recess, so as to afford those who are to be immediately affected by it a full opportunity to canvass its provisions; but if there are any Senators who are prepared to speak on it before that time and who would prefer to do so, I do not know but that it would be as well to allow them to express their opinions, and then let the bill be postponed until the date that is named.

I have paid, as is known to the Senate, no little attention to the affairs of this District, and I for one want to study this bill, which I have not as yet been able to do. I only wish now to throw out a suggestion to my friend who has the bill in charge. It does seem to me that the rate of taxation proposed in the bill, a uniform rate of 2 per cent. upon all property, whether in the country or whether in the city, is too great, and is more than is necessary. I do not think you can compare this District exactly to the case of a State, where there are State taxes, county taxes, township taxes, as well as city taxes; and perhaps the basis on which the committee have gone in fixing the amount to be levied is not precisely applicable to this District.

If no Senator desires to speak on this bill before the recess, I hope the motion of the Senator from Delaware will prevail; but if any Senator does wish to speak on it before then, I am sure my friend from Delaware will withdraw his motion.

Mr. BAYARD. That was of course understood. I merely observed that the Senate was not filled, and that the formal passage of the bill was perhaps about to take place, which I thought was not wise or expedient. Of course, if any one desires to discuss the bill now, I shall be a very willing listener; but if Senators do not desire to discuss it now, I submit the motion again that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the 10th day of January.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, having performed the duty of reporting this bill, I suppose I might content myself with feeling that my duty is entirely done. I might regard my duty at an end when this was done. I have not the slightest solicitude about the bill. I want the most ample debate in regard to it; but it must be remembered that this is the short session of Congress. It ought to be remembered that it is very important to pass this bill or some other bill on the subject. We cannot afford to leave the government of the District as it is at the present time with the extraordinary powers that might be exercised. Its powers are very well exercised and judiciously exercised, I am happy to say, at this time; but I suppose no one contemplates the adjournment of Congress without the passage of some bill with regard to the government of this District. If this bill were now postponed to the 10th of January, I should fear that that would be the end of it for this session. There would be less than two months left, and those two months crowded necessarily with the consideration of appropriation bills. It seems to me that, so far as the consideration of the bill in the Senate is concerned, we may go on with it now until January; and it is important for us to dispose of it before then, if possible.

I agree with what my honorable friend from Delaware says, that the people ought to have an opportunity to consider this bill; but this is not a new question to the people here.

Mr. BAYARD. It is a new question in its present form.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is scarcely a new question in its present form. All there is here really is the question of taxation and the question simply of legislating directly by Congress for the District. The people will divide on the question of taxation as a matter of course; but it is no matter requiring time to study; it is a question on which they have an opinion, undoubtedly.

I wish to say a word in reply to my friend from Ohio, who suggests that the rate of taxation is made too high in the bill. That is likely. As I remarked, that is one question which we cannot determine exactly. There is no such thing as saying what is the precisely proper proportion of burden the people of the District should bear. It seemed to us that the most equitable thing to be done was that the Government of the United States should direct the whole thing, and levy from the people of the District only that reasonable sum which it was proper they should pay by way of taxation. If the taxation we propose is unreasonable, it can be modified by the Senate; but the fact to which my friend from Delaware adverted must be kept in mind, that there is a very large debt resting on this District, and that it has been created to a very large extent in the interests of the people of this District. I do not stop to characterize it, but much of it has been caused by the improvements of the District; and that there have been grand improvements made no one can deny, but they have been very expensive, and there is a great debt upon the District. When the Government of the United States undertakes to stand be-bind this debt, as it must, as it is liable both legally and morally, I submit that the taxation must in any consideration of that question be pretty high; and it should be considered that the committee of which my honorable friend from Ohio was a member at the last session reported a bill which imposed a tax of three cents on the dollar on the real estate in this District. I should hope never to see that done again. But if you look at the assessments voluntarily paid by the people of this District in 1872 and 1873, you will find that 2 per cent. was the rate of taxation imposed by themselves on their real estate.

Mr. BAYARD. That was a limitation fixed by act of Congress, that it should not exceed 3 per cent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But they imposed on themselves all they could, and that is precisely the rate we now propose.

Mr. THURMAN. But you include personal property. They taxed nothing but real estate; you tax personal property as well as realty 2 per cent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The citizens of this District in 1872 taxed both personal and real estate, and the valuation of that year was $79,000,000, I think. They taxed real estate alone the next year, and the valuation was $96,000,000 without the personalty; so that the personalty cannot be a very considerable element in the taxation, and on that they put 2 per cent. It may be that this rate is too high, but it is not higher than the people here taxed themselves.

It may be said that this is on a higher measure of valuation. That remains to be seen. Complaint has been made that there are very great inequalities in the valuation as it exists; that some property is taxed very much higher than its market value, while other is exempt. But the aggregate result of this rate under this bill nobody can tell until it is tried. The committee came to the conclusion that if the Congress of the United States is to stand behind all these expenditures and all these liabilities, the people of this District must be content to pay a reasonable sum; and the medium sum paid by other communities in other sections of the country, who have such privileges and immunities as the people of this District are supplied with, is not less, I think, than 2 per cent.

Now, Mr. President, I should hope that gentlemen might be content to allow this bill to pass over until to-morrow, and if to-morrow my honorable friend from Delaware desires that it should be postponed until the next day, and so on, I shall not object; but I have not heard any demand from the District for a postponement. There has been no solicitation to me from any party whatever in the District of Columbia, from any portion of the citizens, that they wanted to delay the further consideration of the bill. The bill was promptly reported on the first day of the session. The people have had it before them since that time. There has been ample opportunity to represent their views on the floor of Congress. If they have views, I dare say they have been communicated to members. They are in communication with members everywhere. No community is so well represented, and no community in the world is so intimately in association with its representatives as these people are. Therefore, on that ground, I hardly think there is occasion for the postponement of this bill at all.

Then, on the other hand, are we prepared for it? I am sorry my friend from Ohio has not had the opportunity to examine the bill; but if the bill is kept before us within the control of the Senate I trust we shall have the attention and efforts of the Senator from Ohio to perfect it. I hope that this bill will not be postponed to the 10th day of January or to any day certain at the present time. If there is nothing desired to be said on the bill to-day, and gentlemen do not wish to discuss it, I will not object to its going over until to-morrow.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the proposition I made was entirely unpremeditated. It simply grew out of the fact that, sitting by as a listener to the speech of the Senator from Maine, I was surprised that it closed so suddenly, and that the bill was being put on its passage after so short an introduction of its contents. I know too little of the measure to antagonize it or to advocate it. I am not prepared to vote on it. I only know its importance, and I know its importance to the people of this District, who, as I said before, are without direct representation on this floor. The motion that I made for postponement until after the vacation simply was in view of what I believe is the probable fact that we shall adjourn early next week until some early day in January, probably the 5th of January. I have heard the probability stated that we shall adjourn on Tuesday or Wednesday of next week until the 5th of January or thereabouts. I did not suppose that this bill could be considered in a manner worthy of its importance until at least a fortnight had elapsed. The vacation may give that opportunity. I must say more, sir, that I am surprised that upon a measure of this importance so short an introductory statement should satisfy the honorable chairman and the other members of the committee who have had this important matter in charge. We have no right to take the contents of this bill for granted. We have no right to pass hastily upon questions so pregnant with evil or good to the people of this District as this enormous, bulky, overworded measure contains. One thing I am very certain of, that there is a verbosity in this bill alone which needs great revision. I could point out, I think, in the course of a few minutes cases in which a dozen lines of print are expended in words that could well have been compressed into a single line. There is a great deal of inartificiality in the language of this bill, a great deal that it is exceedingly unusual to find in laws, which it seems to me for the credit of Congress should be revised in a great degree. I am not upon the Committee on the District of Columbia Affairs. I never have been. I cannot say that I desire to be. At the same time I am willing to give a fair share of attention and labor to perfect any measure that is to affect the people whom the laws I assist in passing are to govern. I am willing that this measure shall be continued to-morrow and next day, and every day until our adjournment; and I wish my honorable friend from Maine distinctly to understand that I am not in the least degree antagonizing the measure which he has brought into the Senate. I am simply asking for time to a sufficient degree that we may comprehend the full effect of the measure that he proposes.

The question of taxation in this District is a mystery to me. I do not know the history of taxation elsewhere; but comparing the taxation here with that to which I have been accustomed in the State where my home is, the taxation here is exaggerated and monstrous. It is a taxation so far beyond that which I believe prudent, reasonable, discreet property-holders anywhere would voluntarily impose upon their own property, that I cannot but express my great regret that the intelligence of this District and the property of this District should have been so utterly overwhelmed and deprived of an opportunity of saying what portion of their property should be paid for the benefit of having the balance protected and governed.

Why, sir, the other day a gentleman upon whose statement I rely implicitly told me that in 1861 and 1862 and 1863 the taxes upon buildings which have not been improved since that time, upon which scarcely any more than reasonable maintenance in good repair has been expended, were from $150 to $180, never higher than the latter sum, never lower than the former sum, and yet that upon that same property in 1874 he was called upon to pay a tax of $3,500. You may call that taxation or you may call it confiscation, but God help the property that is to be so protected! I do not know who can be called the owner of it, whether the government that lays the tax or the individual in whose name the title may happen to stand.

In regard to this 2 per cent. tax which has been spoken of, levied upon real estate improved and unimproved, the same gentleman cited to me a piece of property which he had full knowledge of on which the tax would amount to $2,400 on a piece of property that cannot to-day be rented for more than $800. It would be a tax that prudent, discreet land-holders would never dream of laying on their property, because there must be a proportion in all things, and there is a gross disproportion in such schemes as these. When we propose to levy such a tax, I would like that the people who are to pay it should have a fair and full opportunity of presenting to me and to my friend from Maine, than whom I know no one is more open to reasonable conviction upon this and upon other subjects, the fruits of their experience and a statement of the condition of their property.

Sir, I have said more than I intended. It was entirely unpremeditated on my part, as I have stated, to make any motion in regard to the postponement of the consideration of this measure. I should be unwilling to take the responsibility, with my present knowledge, of defeating this bill or doing anything that would tend to defeat it; but at the same time I do trust, if it does lie over, it will be with the understanding that there shall be full time given to its consideration consistent with a proper period for final action upon it. Therefore, if the Senator from Maine shall desire, he being in charge of the measure, that this bill shall lie over until to-morrow and again de die in diem until we may come to some understanding of its contents and effect, I shall withdraw the motion I made to postpone it until the 10th of January. I would rather take his suggestion as to the time to be given for the due consideration of the bill; but by all means I hope he will not think of acting upon it now.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have not the slightest disposition to press the bill on the attention of the Senate until they are in a condition to consider it, and certainly I am not disposed to press it, if I had the ability or power to do so, against the wish of Senators. I want the candid consideration of the Senate.

In regard to the question of taxation, the bill was designed to give a thorough and radical remedy for all the abuses of taxation to which the Senator has referred. It may be that this measure of taxation is too high. That is a fair question for consideration. The only difficulty I have heard suggested by any tax-payer in this District is as to the rate.

Mr. BAYARD. It is not only a question of rate, but preceding that and equally important with it is the question of assessment. It involves a high rate on a low assessment, or a low rate on a high assessment. The things must be considered together.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What I meant to say was that as to the methods provided in this bill to secure an honest valuation and an honest levy, I have not heard anything but commendation from the tax-payers of the District. When it comes to the question of valuation and the rate of tax, there may be a difference. We do require that the assessment shall be the true value as between debtor and creditor. That would make the tax higher than if the valuation were lower, of course, and that is open to criticism and is a fair subject for consideration; but I believe I may challenge contradiction when I say that so far as the security of an honest assessment is concerned, no word of complaint has come to me from anywhere, and I believe that the substantial, tax-paying, property-holding people of this community are almost universally in favor of the bill in that respect. That is my belief about it; and if the bill lies over until the 10th of January or the 10th of February, I do not think you will find the body of the people here rising up against it.

This bill is in the interest of honest government. This bill is designed to relieve, and in my judgment will relieve, this District from the oppressions and the difficulties under which it has been struggling. I invite the amplest opportunity for examination. I want every Senator to examine the bill, to give it his careful consideration. I have done as much as I could, and my colleagues on the committee brought to the task the most conscientious regard to their duties, and it is not out of place here to say that there has been no difference of opinion either in general or on the details of this bill; it is a unanimous report by a committee chosen by both branches of the Legislature. My belief is that it will commend itself to the intelligent sense of the Senate if they will but examine it. But when the Senator from Ohio, who participated so largely in the investigation of last year, and who knows as well as any man here the situation of this District, excuses himself from the examination of this bill, set down nearly a week ago for consideration to-day, on the ground that he has not looked at it, knowing the feeling he has on the question, I almost despair of any examination of the bill by Senators unless we keep it before them day by day and force them to consider it. I am obliged to my friend from Delaware for consenting to allow the bill to pass over until to-morrow in the hope that between this and to-morrow we shall be aided by Senators here who take an interest in the bill, and who will give it some attention.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to assure my friend from Maine who has just given us a lecture about our lessons, that it is simply because I have not had time that I have not read his little book. I propose to read it and to read it carefully, but it will take some time to do it. I very much pitied the Chief Clerk when I saw him read yesterday and the day before until he was almost ready to faint. My friend must allow us to take some little time to read and inwardly digest so voluminous a production as this bill. He knows very well that I in good faith am anxious to have a good government for this District, and will contribute all in my power to procure it, and that no one will be more gratified than I if I find that the labors of this committee have resulted in proposing such a government for the people here. In what I have said, therefore, I have not in the slightest degree meant to evince any hostility to the bill in any way whatsoever; but I do propose to study it as well as I am able to do before the vote shall be taken upon it. That is all I wish to say.

While I am up, however, I might as well submit a motion, which I beg my friend to consider as not demagogical or for buncombe in the least, but simply to relieve the anxiety which seems to exist in his mind as to the poverty of the English language. He thinks there is no word but the word "regent" that will suit in this bill at that place; that our language is so poor that it furnishes no other designation for these three "roosters" who are to preside over this people. I move to strike out "regent," wherever it occurs in the bill, and insert the word "commissioner."

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Mr. President, as a member of this committee, I unite with the chairman, the Senator from Maine, in stating that it is not the desire of the committee or any member of it, to press the consideration of the bill before this body unduly. There is an earnest desire on the part of every Senator and every member of the House, I take it for granted, to secure a good government for this District. This is a large bill; it is voluminous; it contains a great many details, some of them very elaborate, and some of them perhaps complicated; and therefore, so far as I am personally concerned as a member of the committee, I invoke the attention of every Senator to the bill. I ask that all may read it carefully, digest it, and there may be valuable suggestions made by members which would be wholly acceptable to the committee. So far as I am concerned, I desire good government; and the general principles of this bill I am for. There are some differences about details; and I am willing to take any reasonable amendment, like that submitted by the Senator from Ohio. I rather concur in the name suggested by him than otherwise. It was thought, however, that "regent" would be better than any other, and more significant than any other; but "commissioner" will be perfectly acceptable to me. We do not desire to press the measure too pertinaciously; but I wish Senators to understand that after the holidays we shall probably have appropriation bills, transportation bills, subsidy bills, and all kinds of bills; and we know that in the presence of those bills this District is a secondary consideration. It is nothing in their presence. Now we have nothing much to do, and we can consider this bill as in committee. We need have no great discussion about it, because there is no feeling about it. All we want is a good government in this District to relieve its people and be a credit to the United States; and any suggestion from any gentleman, so far as I am concerned, will certainly be very charitably considered. I may not agree in all its details; I cannot have all my notions about such matters, and I am willing to take the notions of others. I hope such a course will be taken as will secure action on the bill at as early a moment as is consistent with a due consideration of its provisions by the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understand the Senator from Delaware to modify his motion for postponement until the 10th of January, so as to move simply that the bill shall lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the further consideration of the bill will be postponed informally until to-morrow, to be then resumed as the unfinished business at the expiration of the morning hour.

PENSIONS OF SOLDIERS OF 1812.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the bill which I hold in my hand be made the special order for Monday after the conclusion of the business of the morning hour. It is a House bill that came to the Senate in March last. It passed the House of Representatives on the 11th of March, 1874. It is a measure which I have often attempted to bring before the Senate for its final consideration. It is House bill No. 2190, to amend the act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and the widows of deceased soldiers," approved February 14, 1871, and to restore to the pension-rolls those persons whose names were stricken therefrom in consequence of disloyalty. I attempted repeatedly at the last session of Congress to bring this measure before the Senate for its final consideration, but it has never been disposed of. The bill as it comes from the House will certainly need some amendments, and I am prepared on the part of the committee to submit certain amendments. What I wish done is that this bill may be set down for some particular day and made the special order for that day, and I am anxious to have it disposed of before the holidays. If we are going to extend any measure of relief at all to these old people, whose average age is now about eighty-one years, we ought to do it before the season of festivity. I therefore ask the favor of the Senate that this bill may be set down for consideration on Monday next after the conclusion of the business of the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves that the bill indicated by him be made the special order for Monday next after the conclusion of the morning hour.

Mr. CHANDLER. I gave notice this morning that I should try to call up to-morrow after the morning hour the steamboat bill, so-called; and I rise to object to the proposition that the bill lately under discussion shall be the unfinished business for to-morrow, for I shall try to antagonize the steamboat bill with that or any other bill that may be brought up to-morrow morning. I hope, therefore, the Senator having that bill in charge will continue its consideration and finish it this afternoon, in order that I may call up the steamboat bill in the morning. I shall object to any special order until I can get that bill up.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Why not go on with your bill now?

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; if it is the pleasure of the Senate, I shall be very glad to go on now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the motion submitted by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PRATT.] This motion requires, under the rules, the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present.

Mr. HARVEY. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, within the morning hour, if I can obtain the floor, I shall ask leave to call up House bill No. 3250 to confirm pre-emption and homestead entries of public lands within the limits of railroad grants in cases where such entries have been made under the regulations of the Land Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana to make the bill indicated by him the special order for Monday next.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 18, and the noes 12; no quorum voting.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Let us have another division, and we shall have a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again submit the question to the Senate on a division.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is the motion debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is debatable.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say but a single word in reference to this bill. I remember——

Mr. CONKLING. Is debate in order when a division discloses the want of a quorum?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I remember the effort of the Senator from Indiana——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was mistaken. No quorum was found to be present on the last business, and therefore no business can be transacted.

Mr. CARPENTER. I move that the Senate adjourn, and call for the yeas and nays. That will show whether there be a quorum present or not.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Boreman, Boutwell, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Dorsey, Flanagan, Hager, Hitchcock, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Ramsey, Scott, and Wright—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bogy, Davis, Fenton, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Saulsbury, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Windom—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Brownlow, Buckingham, Cameron, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Edmunds, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Gordon, Hamlin, Howe, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Schurz, Sherman, Stewart, Stockton Thurman, Tipton, and West—33.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PRATT.]

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have for two or three sessions seen an effort made to get a vote upon this bill. The motion now is that a day be fixed, next Monday, on which it shall be a special order, so that we may reach a vote on the bill referred to by the Senator from Indiana. It is a bill which has been before Congress for several sessions, which proposes to restore to the pension-rolls the names of persons who were dropped from the rolls simply because they resided in the southern section of the country during the war. It ought to be considered and disposed of. If the matter is postponed to a late period of the session, no consideration will be given to the bill. I hope that the motion of the Senator from Indiana to make it the special order for next Monday may be agreed to, so that if these gentlemen, many of whom are now in very advanced life, are to be restored to the pension-roll we may reach a vote before the holidays and restore them to the roll from which they have been stricken. I hope, therefore, the Senate will make this bill the special order for Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana, which requires under the rules a two-thirds vote.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 23, noes 11; no quorum voting.

Mr. CONKLING and Mr. PRATT called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. Do I understand the Chair to rule that it requires a two-thirds vote to make a special order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On page 140 of the Manual the Senator will find this provision in the thirty-first rule of the Senate:

> No bill, joint resolution, or other subject shall be made a special order for a particular day and hour without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bogy, Cameron, Clayton, Davis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Saulsbury, Schurz, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, and Thurman—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Boreman, Boutwell, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Conover, Flanagan, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont Scott, Wadleigh, Washburn, Windom, and Wright—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Brownlow, Buckingham, Cooper, Cragin Dennis, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Howe, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morton, Norwood, Pease, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Stewart, Stockton, Tipton, and West—27.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two-thirds of the Senators not voting to concur, the motion is not agreed to.

THE STEAMBOAT LAW.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move now to take up the steamboat bill, that we may proceed with the reading of it and leave it as the unfinished business for to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. What has become of the District of Columbia bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been informally laid aside, to be taken up to-morrow at the expiration of the morning hour as the unfinished business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I objected to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator did not object in time, as the Chair understands.

Mr. CHANDLER. I give notice that I shall antagonize that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the steamboat bill, so called.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire whether this bill was embraced in a resolution received the other day from the House of Representatives requesting the return of one or more bills?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk informs the Chair that that is the case.

Mr. CONKLING. So that now the bill is not before the Senate at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. It has been placed on the Calendar on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOTT.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the bill was returned to the Senate by the House of Representatives and an order made restoring it to its place on the Calendar, so that the bill is properly before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. CONKLING. It was sent by the Senate to the House and then by the House returned to the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Chair is informed by the Clerk.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire further when this bill was reported, and by whom?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was reported June 19, 1874, by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHANDLER] from the Committee on Commerce, without amendment. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill; and having occupied an hour and a half in the reading—

Mr. OGLESBY, (at four o'clock p. m.) I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the reading of this bill will be proceeded with until it is through. Let us complete the reading of the bill first.

Mr. OGLESBY. It will take half an hour yet, and the executive session will require but a few moments.

Mr. SCOTT. I trust the Senator from Illinois will withdraw the motion. We are now on the fifty-eighth page, and there are about eighty-five pages altogether. We had better stay to hear the rest of the bill read and then we can have an executive session. I will stay with the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. OGLESBY. How long will it require to read the bill, I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SCOTT. I think, judging from the time already elapsed, ten minutes more will suffice.

Mr. RAMSEY. It will require three-quarters of an hour, I should think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois insist on his motion?

Mr. OGLESBY. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and twenty minutes, p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 16, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Rev. WILLIAM T. MELOY, of Cadiz, Ohio.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PRINTING OF A REPORT.

Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed twenty-five hundred extra copies of the report of the Commissioners of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, with the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury on the same subject, and accompanying documents, for the use of said commissioners.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask to present a letter from one of the commissioners, which I send to the desk and ask to have it read and go into the RECORD as the basis of this application.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE
FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY,
Washington, D. C., December 15, 1874.

SIR: As the presentation of our report to Congress will very likely overwhelm us with inquiries and requests for copies of said report, would it be asking too much to have you introduce a resolution calling for the printing of, say, twenty-five hundred copies for use?

Very respectfully,

R. H. T. LIEPOLD,
Of the Commissioners.

Hon. HORACE MAYNARD,
Chairman Committee on Banking and Currency.

TAX ON CIRCULATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3059) to so amend the internal-revenue laws as to increase the tax on circulation of national banks from $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent. per month; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the adverse report ordered to be printed.

MARGARET C. GERARD.

Mr. DEWITT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4038) for the relief of Margaret C. Gerard, widow of John C. Gerard, late captain and assistant quartermaster, and her two children; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDNANCE STORES.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2724) for the relief of certain States and Territories on account of ordnance stores issued to them during the late civil war; which was recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the appropriation bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. When the gentleman from Ohio made that motion yesterday I had been called from the Chamber. I intended to have submitted to the House a proposition to go into Committee of the Whole on the general Calendar, with a view to continue the discussion of the currency bill that was considered last week. In order to give the House an opportunity to decide that question, I will propose now, if they shall refuse to go into Committee of the Whole on the appropriation bill, to make the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the general Calendar, and continue the discussion on the currency bill. I deem it proper to the House to present the matter for their consideration, and leave with them the responsibility of deciding it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire, if possible, to give the Senate one of our leading appropriation bills before the holiday recess, so that it may be under consideration there. I do not antagonize at all the motion of the gentleman on its merits, except that I think it more important to get these appropriation bills started. If we had one or two of them in the Senate, I would think it quite proper to consider something else here.

Mr. STORM. What holiday recess does the gentleman refer to? The one we took yesterday?

Mr. GARFIELD. The one we may take hereafter of three or four days.

AFFAIRS OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] I ask consent to report back from the Committee on Printing, with an amendment, the following resolution which was referred to them:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the commissioners of the District of Columbia one thousand copies of the report of said commissioners, and the accompanying documents, in addition to the number provided by law.

The amendment was to insert after the word "copies" the word "unbound."

The amendment was agreed to, and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

REPORTS FROM STATE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting certain statements, in compliance with the act of June 22, 1874, entitled "An act to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States;" which was referred to the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the United States, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in compliance with the act of July 15, 1873, an inventory of property belonging to the United States now in his possession; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MODOC WAR CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the act of June 18, 1874, the claims of the States of California and Oregon and citizens thereof, on account of the Modoc war; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

EXPENDITURES OF POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Assistant Treasurer of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with the act of July 2, 1836, his adjusted quarterly accounts of receipts and expenditures of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF LIEUTENANT GEORGE M. WHEELER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to an omission in the act of June 23, 1874, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses in regard to the report of Lieutenant George M. Wheeler; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSIENT PAUPERS IN WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the distribution of the appropriation for the care and support of seventy-five transient paupers in Washington, and recommending a continuance of the same; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SUGG FORT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of the House of December 8, 1874, in relation to the claim of Sugg Fort, Robertson County, Tennessee; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ESTIMATES OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to an estimate of appropriations for the purpose of enabling his Department to carry out the provision of the act of March 1, 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SIOUX AGENCIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an estimate of appropriations required to meet obligations existing under contracts for transportation to various Sioux agencies during the remainder of the fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY POST, NEVADA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the establishment of a military post near Carlin, Nevada; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PAWNEE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to the removal of the Pawnee tribe of Indians from the State of Nebraska to the Indian Territory, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of May 29, 1872, sundry claims for Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTION CONTEST—SHERIDAN VS. PINCHBACK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House additional papers in the contested-election case of George A. Sheridan vs. P. B. S. Pinchback, of Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on Elections.

KING OF THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The SPEAKER. By direction of the House there was appointed a select committee on the part of the House, to unite with a similar committee on the part of the Senate, to take measures for the proper notice of the presence in the capital of His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands. Mr. E. ROCKWOOD HOAR, of that committee, desires to be excused on account of ill health. If there be no objection he will be excused, and the Chair will appoint in his stead Mr. MARCUS L. WARD, of New Jersey.

TROUBLES AT VICKSBURGH, MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER. In announcing yesterday the select committee to go to Vicksburgh, of which of course the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MCKEE] who offered the resolution for the appointment of the committee was entitled by usage to the chairmanship, the Chair should have stated that that gentleman requested not to be placed upon the committee.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I wish to repeat what I said a moment ago, (lest it might not have been heard by some gentlemen who are now in the Hall,) that if the motion of the gentleman from Ohio should not prevail, I shall immediately move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the general Calendar, with the view to continue the discussion on the currency bill.

The motion of Mr. GARFIELD was agreed to, there being ayes 96, noes not counted.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the paragraph making appropriations for the Secretary's office in the Treasury Department.

Mr. MERRIAM. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether an additional assistant secretary is requested by the Secretary of the Treasury, and, if so, upon what theory?

Mr. GARFIELD. There is no change whatever in this bill in that respect. We follow precisely the language of the law of last year; the appropriations for the Secretary's office are precisely the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Second Auditor:

For Second Auditor, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; six clerks of class four; and, for additional to disbursing-clerk, $200; forty clerks of class three; seventy-nine clerks of class two; sixty clerks of class one; one messenger; five assistant messengers; and seven laborers; in all, $272,080.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to amend as follows:

In line 449 strike out "forty" and insert "thirty-seven," so as to provide for "thirty-seven clerks of class three;" in lines 449 and 450 strike out "seventy-nine" and insert "seventy-three," so as to provide for "seventy-three clerks of class two," and in line 450 strike out "sixty" and insert "forty-five," so as to provide for "forty-five clerks of class one."

Mr. Chairman, this amendment has received the consideration and approval of the Committee on Appropriations. The object, as I stated on last Monday when I procured a suspension of the rules, is to break up one of the most useless and extravagant pieces of machinery to be found anywhere in the Departments of the Government. This amendment is one stage of the process of doing away with that machinery. At the outset I want to disclaim any hostility to the National Asylum for Disabled Soldiers and Sailors. I have none whatever. No vote of mine shall ever be wanting here to give it the most ample and liberal support. I want to disclaim also, in this connection, any reflection upon the present management of that institution. This machinery came into existence under the provisions of a statute of 1865, of which I ask the Clerk to read one section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That for the establishment and support of this asylum there shall be appropriated all stoppages or fines adjudged against such officers and soldiers by sentence of court-martial or military commission over and above the amount necessary for the reimbursement of the Government or individuals; all forfeitures on account of desertion from such service; and all moneys due such deceased officers and soldiers which now are or may be unclaimed for three years after the death of such officers and soldiers to be repaid upon the demand of the heirs or legal representatives of such deceased officers or soldiers. And the said board of managers are hereby authorized to receive all donations of money or property made by any person or persons for the benefit of the asylum, and to hold or dispose of the same for its sole and exclusive use.

Mr. WHEELER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know who is entitled to credit for the invention of this most marvelous machinery; but I ask the attention of the committee to just one fact: that this whole process of getting this money respects moneys which are now in the Treasury of the United States, never have been out of it, and cannot be taken out of it except by process of law. Under the provisions of this act, we have had employed at times in the Second Auditor's Office one hundred clerks at an annual expense of over $100,000. We have also had a large force employed in the Adjutant-General's Office and in the Surgeon-General's Office in working this machinery. I am within moderate bounds when I state that this machinery within the last eight years, since it came into operation, has cost the people of the United States three-quarters of a million dollars; and for what? Simply that the Government may appropriate its own money, which is in its own Treasury and belongs absolutely to itself, to the support of one of its own institutions—nothing more and nothing less. Over three-quarters of a million dollars has been expended by the Government in transferring its own money to the support of one of its own institutions, whereas this might have been much better done by direct appropriation.

I want to show how this machinery works, and for this purpose I send to the Clerk to be read a circular from the Second Auditor's Office.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Office Form No. 81.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
———, 187–.

The Adjutant-General will please give a statement of service of ——, Co. ——, —— Regiment of —— Volunteers, from ——. Also whether the charge of "desertion," "absence without leave," or "other charges" appear against him, and whether such charges have ever been removed, and what amount of bounty—advance or in installments—he has received. A clothing statement is also requested. The date of enlistment or muster-in may be taken from the roll upon which the first charge appears; it is not necessary to examine the original enrollment papers. A copy of all orders bearing upon the case called for is requested. A "status record" is desired in cases of colored soldiers.

The information desired is necessary, in order to properly credit the fund arising under the acts of Congress of March 3, 1865, and March 21, 1866, establishing national military homes for disabled volunteers.

Respectfully,

E. B. FRENCH,
Auditor.

—— Room, No. ——.
Vou. ——, Acct. No. ——.
Paymaster ——. By ——.

Mr. WHEELER. That is addressed to the Adjutant-General, and to show how it works in his office I ask his letter be read or that part of it which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 10, 1874.

DEAR SIR: * * * * * * *

The mode of acting on the cases is this: On receipt of such a blank as you showed me, with name and regiment filled out, the clerk engaged in entering the letters enters it first; it is then sent to another room where the rolls are kept, and an extract taken from the rolls is appended to the paper; it then passes from one to another branch, seven in all, to ascertain whether the man was reported dead, a prisoner, or in any other way. Sometimes it has to be referred to the Bureau of Military Justice for record of trial by court-martial, or to the Surgeon-General's hospital records, to trace the whole history of the man.

You will see that there is no specific number of clerks engaged on these papers exclusively, but that the time of clerks who would be doing other work more thoroughly and accurately than they have time to do it is diverted to these claims. Assuming that the claims are very easily traced, one clerk could get through say five in a day, reducing all the different searches down to one man. We turn out about one hundred and seventy a day, which would make the approximate work done on these papers equal to the labor of thirty-five (35) clerks.

My clerks say that they are so pressed in making these intricate searches that they are unable to do justice to them, and that the reports made are often returned from the Auditor for more complete information. If this work had not to be done, not only would this complaint be remedied with regard to their other work, but by consolidation. I could employ several more men on the work of copying and condensing the muster rolls, which is daily increasing in importance and should be finished as soon as possible.

Yours, very truly,

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

Hon. W. A. WHEELER,
House of Representatives.

Mr. WHEELER. Now, Mr. Chairman, there are lying to-day in the Adjutant-General's Office thirty-eight thousand of these cases undisposed of, a clog to all public business, and the rolls, as the Auditor himself admits, are only one-half examined.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether there is any benefit in these searches besides the mere fact——

Mr. WHEELER. Not the slightest in the world; but on the contrary——

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman anticipates perhaps my question, and perhaps not. I would like to know whether there is any benefit aside from the fact the money is to be appropriated to these asylums. Is it not right and proper and just that an abstract of the condition of each one of these persons upon whom the money is to be predicated should be made out, and that we should have a complete synoptical record in order to do justice to the men themselves?

Mr. WHEELER. This money has been forfeited by deserters and persons tried by court-martial—forfeited to the United States, and they have no earthly claim to it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The object of the search is to ascertain whether it has been actually forfeited, and therefore, in justice to the persons themselves as well as to the Government, ought it not to be made?

Mr. WHEELER. It has been forfeited by the entry of "desertion" opposite to the name of the soldier, which stands there as a perpetual bar to any claim against the Government. The first thing is to examine his military record, and the entry of the word "desertion" opposite to his name is a perpetual bar to any claim againt the Government.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Suppose the first entry to which the gentleman from New York has referred, the one of desertion, should afterward be ascertained to be a wrong entry?

Mr. WHEELER. Then the Adjutant-General may correct it and the money must be paid; but let him do it on application of the person aggrieved.

Mr. ELDREDGE. But the object of the search is, as I understand, to ascertain whether or not entry has been properly made.

Mr. WHEELER. The object of the search is to ascertain whether this money should be turned over to the support of these asylums—nothing more or less. But I wish to show Mr. Chairman, how this machinery is duplicated. This act provides that all arrears of pay due to deceased officers and soldiers after three years shall go to these asylums, but the same act provides, if their heirs shall make claim, the money shall be paid back. Now, under that process hundreds of thousands of dollars have been used for this fund, and afterward through duplication of clerks the fund has been turned back and paid over to the claimants.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I cannot commend too highly the industry and purpose of the gentleman to correct this abuse. I want, however, to direct his attention to one or two matters in connection with this, and see whether he is willing to go that far in remedying this defect in the law. I wish to know whether he can give the House information as to what amount of money has been given to these asylums under that law of 1866.

Mr. WHEELER. The statement is being prepared now at the Treasury Department, but it has not been furnished to me in time for this discussion.

Mr. RANDALL. There is one point I wish to suggest, and that is, why not make this reduction immediate?

Mr. WHEELER. I intend to follow this up by a proposition for additional legislation by which we shall appropriate directly and annually for the support of these asylums. When we get to the appropriations in the War Department I shall offer an amendment that this shall take effect on the 1st day of April.

Mr. RANDALL. There are some further suggestions I wish to make to the gentleman from New York. There have been, in innumerable instances, great hardships perpetrated on soldiers' families by the action of courts-martial; and there have been one or two cases in my own district where the entire amount that has been due to these soldiers has been forfeited to the Government, and thereby their families have been deprived of their entire support, not being able to get one dollar through the men who should be their protectors and supporters.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that this act is not a bar to any just claim which may be presented to the Government in that respect for relief—not the slightest.

Mr. RANDALL. But I want to correct the law which takes their support from the family of the soldier who may have been court-martialed and sentenced.

Mr. WHEELER. This amendment has nothing to do with that matter. The gentleman should go with it to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from New York has shown so much industry in this matter, that I think he might be willing to go a little further, so that when a soldier is court-martialed and deprived of pay, that should be void as regards the support of his family.

Mr. WHEELER. My purpose is simply to reach sixty clerks that I traced to be employed in this precise business. I propose the reduction to take place after the 1st of April next. I do not think it would be just to them or their families to set them adrift at midwinter, and I have an amendment which I shall offer hereafter if this one shall be adopted, that after the 1st of April next this reassignment shall be made and appropriated for.

This is the people's money. It is the merest fiction to say that it is taking money which belongs to deserters, because it has been forfeited by the fact of desertion. These funds are moneys in the Treasury, and in the last eight years we have had to pay over three-quarters of a million dollars for appropriating our own money to the support of one of our own institutions.

Mr. PARSONS. This amendment will in no manner interfere with the class of cases named by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] because they must all stand upon their individual merits upon application.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not desire to make any remarks on this subject; but I wish to make a further inquiry or two of my friend from New York, [Mr. WHEELER.] As I understand, the amount which has been given heretofore to these asylums has been based upon the sums which have been forfeited for the cause he has named.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say——

Mr. ELDREDGE. I wish the gentleman to allow me to finish my inquiry.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say in this connection just this before I forget it, that under this provision this Government has been advancing to that institution over and above its annual wants $100,000, which is invested in United States securities.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman thinks, perhaps, that I am antagonizing his proposition.

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all.

Mr. ELDREDGE. On the contrary, I have known of this evil, as I consider it, for some time; at least since last session of Congress.

Now, I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman. I suppose the amount appropriated to this institution has been based on the amounts received for the causes specified. It is now proposed, as I understand—and I put this inquiry for the purpose of receiving information—to make an appropriation direct from the Treasury; upon what basis? Upon the basis heretofore provided, of the amount received an account of desertion? If so, then the same necessity exists for the inquiries the gentleman has referred to. But if it is to be based upon estimates of the amounts desirable and necessary for the support of this institution, then I can see how the great saving which has been suggested might be made; but unless that be the case, and unless there be some proper mode devised to ascertain the sums necessary for the support of this institution, then there will require to be precisely this same inquiry, costing the large sum of money which has been specified.

Mr. WHEELER. I am sorry that I do not make myself more intelligible to the gentleman from Wisconsin. My object is to tear down this whole machinery, and for the next fiscal year to base the estimate on the amount which has been actually expended for the institutions in the last year, ascertaining from the quarterly accounts just exactly what it cost to run it. Heretofore its managers have had all that came out of these various funds, in some years getting hundreds of thousands of dollars more than they expended. For the next fiscal year I propose to appropriate an amount equal to that which it appears they have expended in the last year, and to require them to file accounts and vouchers and to account to the Secretary of War for their expenditure, just as all the expenditures of the War Department are accounted for.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Then I would wish to hear the gentleman on this suggestion, that the necessities of these institutions may exceed the amount heretofore received, and may require an additional sum to be taken from the Treasury to support them.

Mr. WHEELER. This will make no difference in that respect. A dollar in one form will be as good to them as a dollar in another. I take it that the Government is committed to the support of these institutions, and so far as my vote goes they shall have the most liberal and abundant support.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Can the gentleman, then, tell the committee what sums it has cost the Government for the support of these institutions, or whether their expenditures have been within the sums received from the specified sources?

Mr. WHEELER. Last year, on looking at the report, I find that these institutions expended $624,000, and that the amounts received for that year from the Treasury were not sufficient, but that they were supplemented by the sale of $100,000 of United States securities, they having before received that amount in excess and invested it.

Mr. RANDALL. Can the gentleman state the sum they have now on hand heretofore received?

Mr. WHEELER. I cannot; I have not the figures on that point.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say a word or two on this very important topic. And first of all I want to assure the Committee of the Whole that the Committee on Appropriations cherish with as much earnest zeal as any other committee in the House the asylums for disabled soldiers. Not one thing in this bill is aimed at curtailing a hearty support of those institutions. There are two questions before us: First, how shall we most wisely and cheaply support them; and next, whether we are not allowing more money to be paid than they really need year by year. Now, I claim that we have been able to show that both these things need correction. For instance, in the year 1871 there was paid out for these institutions $296,287.32; in 1873 (I have not the figures for 1872 before me) there was paid for this purpose the sum of $193,750.59; in the year 1874, last year, there was paid $440,821.67. I had these figures made up for another purpose and not in connection with this matter, but they are from the Treasury books.

Now, the amount we have been paying for several years past for the support of these asylums was not an amount made up on anybody's estimate of how much was needed to carry on the asylums. No estimate has ever been made of that sort to Congress. No annual appropriation has ever been made by Congress for the support of the asylums, but by a circuitous, complicated, roundabout method a lot of fines and forfeitures, of back-pay, and stoppages and doubtful accounts, has been allowed. For instance, the accounts of deserters. Here is a deserter who has six months' pay due him. He may at some time come and prove that he was improperly set down as a deserter and get his pay. If he never comes the money never gets out of the Treasury. If he comes and does not make the claim good that he was not a deserter, then the money does not get out of the Treasury. But this law requires the accounting officers to go over the records and hunt out all possible cases of this class to find out just how much they would have, if there, to sustain their claims and to pay over that amount to the asylums, without any regard to whether it is paying them more or less than they need for their support.

Now, what the Committee on Appropriations desire to do is, first to change that law entirely, to repeal it; and second to require an annual estimate of the amount of money needed to support these asylums and to appropriate it in two lines of the bill and pay it directly out of the Treasury. When that is done we know what the institutions are doing, how much they need, and how much we ought to appropriate. And then, under the present system this payment requires an additional force. My colleague on the committee [Mr. WHEELER] has shown that we are employing at least sixty clerks whose time is devoted wholly and solely to the business of figuring out the odds and ends of pay that go to make up the permanent, indefinite appropriation, and Congress has no supervision over it. We want first to change the whole method, and second to cut down the force now required to run the old method. We are paying, according to the statement of my colleague, which is certainly correct, for the mere purpose of running the machinery of the present system, a sufficient amount to support two or three hundred soldiers if the money were applied for that purpose. This illustrates what I have said over and over again for very many years to the House, that all permanent, indefinite appropriations should, if possible, be done away with, and annual and specific appropriations substituted. And it illustrates another thing—the danger of circuitous, roundabout, indirect methods of doing a good thing.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I desire to ask the gentleman whether, if this money is to be paid into the Treasury at all, it will not have to be ascertained as to its amount and where it comes from just the same as now?

Mr. GARFIELD. No.

Mr. ELDREDGE. How is it to be ascertained?

Mr. GARFIELD. Our plan is simply to repeal the law that gives fines and stoppages and all that class of claims to the asylums entirely, and to allow them to remain in the Treasury unless the persons entitled to them come and of their own accord prove their right to the money; if so, of course they will get the money.

Mr. ELDREDGE. What is the difficulty in the way of the officers, who receive these moneys, paying them into the Treasury, and allowing them upon their reports to be paid out precisely as now? They must be covered into the Treasury in some way; they must be covered in by accounts and upon reports. What is the necessity and what has been the necessity of going through all the performance of hunting up each one's record? Why not let that money which is paid in go as provided now by law, without looking up the record in each case?

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will see this: A man comes to the Treasury and says, "I am entitled to so much back-pay." He has to prove that. A series of accounts must be examined; the accounting officers of the Treasury run through his accounts just as though he was an outside claimant upon the Treasury. When his account is run through and it is determined, for example, that $250 is due him, then under the present law that amount goes to the asylum. That is the method they adopt. Now I want to say this, the Committee on Appropriations have never had this subject brought to their attention until this winter, for the reason that it was in the permanent appropriations, never was any part of the annual appropriation bill. And my friend from New York [Mr. WHEELER] has done a great service by spending a considerable amount of time in discovering the method by which this work is now done.

Mr. RANDALL. I was going to ask the gentleman how it was that the Committee on Appropriations allowed this thing to continue from 1866 to the present time.

Mr. GARFIELD. Simply because the committee never had the matter brought before them; it was never referred to them and was never in their way.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The institution to which reference is made here, the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, is under the control of a board of twelve managers, of which the President of the United States, the Secretray of War, and the Chief Justice are ex officio members, and nine other gentlemen selected from different States of the Union. Those gentlemen had nothing whatever to do with the passage of the law, or with the peculiar machinery by which its funds were to be provided. The law was passed in 1866, and those gentlemen were selected, as I was at that time, without solicitation and without any knowledge of the law or of any of its provisions.

I will simply say further that, as I understand it, we have no sort of objection to the change proposed. I think myself it ought to have been inaugurated in the original law and acted upon from the beginning. I believe that in draughting this law Congress simply followed what has been the practice in regard to the regular Army Soldiers' Home near Washington, which has been and still is supported in large part in just this same way, by fines, forfeitures, &c. Therefore, whatever change is made as to this, should be made in reference to that also. I have thought it due to the gentlemen who compose this board to say that they had nothing whatever to do with draughting the law, or with continuing the abuse, if there has been any abuse under the law. They have taken the law as they found it, and have done as best they could under its provisions. So far as I know, the change proposed is a proper one, and would subserve the public interests, because in the line of economy. I only regret it was not adopted in the beginning, and the three-quarters of a million said to have been paid to the clerks saved for the support of the disabled soldiers. I see no possible objection to the change, and believe it would be entirely acceptable to the board of managers, and I therefore trust it will meet with no further objection or opposition.

Mr. WHEELER. I am glad to hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] make that disclaimer. I have found no man in any Department of the Government who is willing to father this statute.

Mr. RANDALL. The Globe will show who fathered it.

Mr. WHEELER. After the question shall have been taken upon the pending amendment, in order to complete it I shall ask permission to anticipate a little, by turning over to the portion of the bill relating to expenditures in the War Department, so that we may complete this subject while it is fresh in our minds.

Mr. CLYMER. The object of the gentleman's amendment is so proper that I have no doubt it will be adopted. But in order that no injustice shall be done, I wish to know of him whether, when the act of 1866 was passed, the number of clerks desired by the Second Auditor on that account was not some twenty-odd only; but by the efforts of some persons in this House, and against his will and his direct protest, the number was increased to nearly one hundred?

Mr. WHEELER. I know nothing of that fact, except that I do know that from eighty to one hundred additional clerks were at one time engaged in the Second Auditor's Office in this useless work.

Mr. CLYMER. And no one objects to them more than the Second Auditor himself.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. WHEELER, and it was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. I now ask permission to turn over to the forty-third page of the bill, in order to move an amendment to come in after line 1047 of the printed bill.

Mr. COBURN. I object to any slipping; let us go on regularly.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I move to transpose the consideration of this bill, as I have the right to do under the rules of this House, so as to permit the introduction now of the amendment which I have indicated.

Mr. COBURN. Before that question is put I desire to make a request of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WHEELER.] In connection with this very subject I am about to be furnished with some data of the Adjutant-General. I desired it to be here at the House when it met this morning, but it is not yet quite ready. I wish to say something in connection with the action of the committee as shown in this very portion of the bill to which the gentleman refers. I think it no more than fair to so faithful, honorable, and correct an officer as the Adjutant-General, and the importance of the service, that a delay should be had until the proper time in the consideration of that subject. The House can act with just as much sense when we arrive at that point as we can now. I hope, therefore, the House will not favor the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WHEELER. I want the Committee of the Whole to understand that this is an appropriation bill and nothing else; and the amendment which I propose to offer is an amendment proposing to appropriate money for the support of this home for the next fiscal year. It is a subject with which the Adjutant-General has nothing whatever to do. It is a matter of appropriation and nothing else.

Mr. KELLOGG. As I understand, the gentleman from New York does not propose to reduce the clerks in the Surgeon General's Office until we reach that subject in the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all.

Mr. KELLOGG. There is a reason why those clerks should be continued in connection with the pension business, which has gone behind. I agree heartily with the gentleman in the movement he has made. I believe in keeping no more clerks than are necessary.

Mr. WHEELER. We will try not to strike out anything that is necessary.

Mr. COBURN. I withdraw my objection. The gentleman's amendment is not what I supposed.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Committee of the Whole will consider the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] to come in on page 43, which has not yet been reached.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to amend by inserting after line 1047, on page 43, the following:

For the support and maintenance of the national military asylum for the relief of totally disabled officers and men of the volunteer forces of the United States $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

This is a provision in the form of a regular annual appropriation for the support of this institution for the next fiscal year.

Mr. RANDALL. What check will there be on the expenditure of this money?

Mr. WHEELER. I propose to follow this with an amendment, which will provide ample guards in that respect.

Mr. HOLMAN. On what basis does the gentlemen predicate the amount of this appropriation? Is it based on the expenses of the institution for the last year?

Mr. WHEELER. It is; but I have reduced the amount somewhat. The expenditure for last year was something over $624,000. When the gentleman shall see the checks under which I propose that this money shall be expended, I think he will be satisfied.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much of this fund has been refunded from time to time?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know how much; but I have taken care of that matter, as the gentleman will see.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask the careful attention of the committee to the amendment I now offer as an additional section, to come in after the amendment just adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act entitled "An act to incorporate a national military and naval asylum, for the relief of totally disabled officers and men of the volunteer forces of the United States," approved March 3, 1865, and of all acts amendatory thereof, as provides that for the establishment and support of said home there shall be appropriated all stoppages or fines adjudged against officers and soldiers by sentence of court-martial or military commission, over and above the amount necessary for the reimbursement of the Government or of individuals all forfeitures on account of desertion from the service and all moneys due deceased officers and soldiers, which now or may be unclaimed for three years after the death of such officers and soldiers, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, to take effect on and after the 1st day of April, 1875; and from and after April 1, 1875, no clerk shall be employed or paid in any Department of the Government for services rendered under any provision of said act of March 3, 1865, or the acts amendatory thereof. And from and after the 1st day of April, 1875, no money shall be appropriated or drawn for the support or maintenance of said home except by direct and specific annual appropriations by law. And it shall be the duty of the directors of said home, on or before the 1st day of August in each year, to furnish to the Secretary of War estimates in detail for the support of said home for the fiscal year commencing on the 1st day of July thereafter, and the Secretary of War shall annually include such estimates in his estimates for his Department. And no money shall, after the 1st day of April, 1875, be drawn from the Treasury for the use of said home except in pursuance of monthly estimates and upon monthly requisitions by the directors thereof upon the Secretary of War, based upon said monthly estimates for the support of said home for not more than one month next succeeding each requisition. And no money shall be drawn or paid upon any such requisition while any balance heretofore drawn or received by said home, or for its use, from the Treasury, under laws now or heretofore existing, and now held under investment or otherwise, shall remain unexpended; and the directors of said home shall, at the commencement of each quarter of the year, render to the Secretary of War an account of all their receipts and expenditures for the quarter immediately preceding, with the vouchers for such expenditures. And all such accounts and vouchers shall be authenticated, audited, and allowed as required by law for the general appropriations and expenditures of the War Department. The amount necessary for the support and maintenance of said home for the balance of the present fiscal year, after March, 1875, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and is made available on and after the 1st day of April, 1875; subject, nevertheless, to the provisions hereinbefore contained as to unexpended balances of moneys heretofore drawn or received, and to all other provisions regulating the annual appropriations hereafter to be made, as herein provided.

Mr. WHEELER. This amendment explains itself. It breaks down all this useless machinery now existing. It provides for regular annual estimates; also that the directors of the institution shall make monthly estimates for current expenses, and monthly requisitions upon the Secretary of the War, by whom the money is to be disbursed; that they shall also file their vouchers, and that they shall make no requisition whatever so long as they have on hand one dollar previously received.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman's amendment cover money that is invested?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know anything about the amount of such money.

Mr. RANDALL. How shall we find it out?

Mr. GARFIELD. When the managers make their annual report this whole matter of investments will of course be embraced in it. Then we can act with full knowledge.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I would like to make a suggestion; but before doing so I wish to express my hearty approval of the proposition of the gentleman from New York. There is another source of income in these homes with which I find no fault, but which, in my judgment, ought to be reported on as well as other sources of income and expenditure. The governors of these homes are of course required to enforce some kind of discipline. Their powers are limited in that respect; but so far as I know these homes they are not abused. They are, I believe, well governed. One of them I know to be well governed. I speak of the one at Hampton, which I have seen a good deal of during the last summer. That home is well managed. I found it was necessary to observe some sort of discipline among the men; that a man going out without leave and getting drunk or violating any of the other reasonable rules of the institution had a fine imposed upon him. I suppose this fine comes out of the pension-money of the men or out of whatever may be coming to them.

Mr. WHEELER. I understand they are required to give up their pension-money when remaining at these homes.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I find they are fined one, two, three, four, or five dollars, according to the enormity of the offense, and that money is used, so far as I know, wisely, in the construction of ten-pin alleys or reading-rooms or other places of instruction and amusement for the soldiers themselves. That fund is, of course, considerable in asylums where there are three or four hundred soldiers, and where many fines are imposed every day. I therefore make the suggestion whether that fund should not also be included in these reports of incomes and expenditures of these asylums?

Mr. WHEELER. That is a matter relating to the regulation of these homes with which the Committee on Appropriations have nothing to do. If it should need regulating, I have no doubt my friend from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN,] chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, will provide the proper regulation.

Mr. GUNCKEL. In response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Connecticut I will say that the fines imposed in the homes he speaks of amount in the aggregate to a very small sum, and that where such fines are imposed upon the soldiers for getting drunk, or for other like offenses, the money is refunded in case of after good conduct. That fund is kept by itself, and is strictly accounted for. The amounts not refunded are held as a contingent fund, and used in providing reading matter, amusements, &c., for all the soldiers of the home.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Whatever it is, it appears to me it ought to be accounted for in the same way as other sources of income.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I wish to say a word in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WHEELER.] I never heard of the amendment until it was read at the Clerk's desk, and in the then confusion of the House I do not know whether I correctly heard it or perfectly understood it. So far as I do understand it I have no objection to it whatever, but approve of its provisions fully and entirely. I can only again regret that all these provisions were not included in the original act. I suggest, however, the verbal change, that instead of the word "directors" the gentleman should use the word "managers," which is the language of the statute.

Mr. WHEELER. In drawing the amendment I sought to follow the words of the statute.

Mr. HOLMAN. The propositions submitted by the gentleman from New York are manifestly right. There is no question but this begins a valuable reform. There is no good reason I can discover why this reform should not take effect at once, or at a very early day. The only one which has been stated, and that I suppose is the only one there is, in my judgment is not the very best reason. It is that it will have the effect of turning out of the public service a large number of clerks. I do not see why we should retain clerks when we have no further need for their services. That seems to be the only obstacle in the way.

Mr. WHEELER. I cannot find it in my heart to turn out at once people who were invited here and appointed under that law. Having been invited here, and having remained for so many years, I do not think it is kind on our part to discharge them instantly in order to save a month's pay. I know my friend from Indiana, on calm reflection, will not demand any such thing at our hands.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not believe it is sound policy to retain persons in the employ of the Government when we admit there is nothing for them to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York accept the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent for time to look into the subject. I am not quite sure now whether the language of the law is "managers" or "directors." I ask unanimous consent to make the amendment conform to the statute if I shall find hereafter any change to be necessary in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the gentleman from New York having that privilege.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to congratulate the committee on having saved, at a moderate estimate, for the next fiscal year $100,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the footing of the appropriations under the head of the Second Auditor be made to correspond to the amendment just adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department:

For compensation of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; nine clerks of class four, and additional to one clerk of class four as disbursing clerk, $200; sixty-two clerks of class three; sixty-nine clerks of class two; thirty-seven clerks of class one; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and eighteen laborers; twenty assorters of money-orders, $20,000; also, fifteen female assorters of money-orders, at $900 each; in all, $309,620: Provided, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1875, the fees on money-orders shall be, for orders not exceeding fifteen dollars, ten cents; exceeding fifteen and not exceeding thirty dollars, fifteen cents; exceeding thirty and not exceeding forty dollars, twenty cents; exceeding forty and not exceeding fifty dollars, twenty-five cents; and no money-order shall be issued for a sum greater than fifty dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to explain what change this makes in reference to the transmission of money-orders through the mails.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will remember that not long since there was a reduction made in the rates for sending money-orders. The committee found that the work was increasing largely; but although the increase was very considerable, yet under the reduced rates the money-order system, as a system, including the number of assorters and clerks that have to be employed here in the Department to take care of it, does not pay itself, and we are falling behind very nearly by the cost of the whole of the force employed in the central office here in Washington. We consider also that it is at least a doubtful branch of business for the United States to carry on. It is a sort of banking business carried on inside the Post-Office Department. I have said it is a doubtful branch of business. Some people believe that it is not a proper function of the United States to carry on a special banking business for the people; and those who think it is a proper business would probably agree with the committee that it should be made to pay itself.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman state what was the amount of loss last year under the reduction?

Mr. GARFIELD. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. TYNER,] is prepared to give information on that point.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to be informed how much the money-order branch went behind last year, so that we may know what amount of money may be saved during the coming year by this increase of charge.

Mr. TYNER. The report of the superintendent of the money-order system shows that the excess of receipts over expenditures during the last fiscal year amounted to $105,198.12. Upon the face of that report, therefore, not only would the system seem to be self-sustaining, but it would seem that it pays a revenue into the Treasury. But it is a fact not patent on the face of that report that there are very considerable expenditures in connection with this money-order system that do not appear at all in the report, but are charged to and paid out of regular appropriations; among which are the salaries in the department of the superintendent's office and of the Sixth Auditor's Office, the books, blanks, and printing, together with stationery, &c., which, by the figures obtained in the superintendent's office and in the Sixth Auditor's Office, and by estimates from the best data before the Department, amounted to the sum of $182,100, leaving an actual deficit of $76,901.88.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the increased charges here provided for cover that amount? Is it so estimated?

Mr. TYNER. Yes, sir. If the fees under the late law should be re-established, and that is what is substantially proposed in the pending amendment, the probabilities are, from the best lights before the Department and before myself also, that the first fiscal year under the operation of that rate of fees will pay an actual revenue into the Department of between seventy and eighty thousand dollars in excess of the present receipts; and that is the reason why we propose this change.

Mr. FORT. I move to strike out the proviso, which is as follows:

Provided, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1875, the fees on money-orders shall be, for orders not exceeding fifteen dollars, ten cents; exceeding fifteen and not exceeding thirty dollars, fifteen cents; exceeding thirty and not exceeding forty dollars, twenty cents; exceeding forty and not exceeding fifty dollars, twenty-five cents; and no money-order shall be issued for a sum greater than fifty dollars.

Members of this House well know that there was a time during the panic when it was unsafe to send money in any other way than by post-office money-orders. The moneys sent by the money-order system are ordinarily small sums, sent by poor persons, hardly ever reaching the sum of fifty dollars. It occurs to me that this accommodation might very well be extended to these people. My friend from Indiana [Mr. TYNER] seems disposed to think that the Post-Office Department should make a profit of this business. I think it can well afford to do the business without a profit, and if it shall fall now a little short of paying expenses, the time will speedily come when it will pay them. I am opposed to placing any more burdens on the people by increasing the rates in this branch of the Post-Office Department; and I can see no good objection to leaving the matter as it now is. These sums are always small. The system is one for the accommodation of poor people, and no others. Drafts that are sent by banks are, as a usual thing, for larger amounts, and are drawn by parties who can afford to pay for the accommodation.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. In many parts of the country there are no banks.

Mr. FORT. That is in the interest of the motion to strike out the proviso. There are many places where parties cannot reach a bank. This is an accommodation to many people who want to send small sums of money and to send them safely, and it was in fact the only way in which people could send money safely during the panic. I know of persons who wanted to send several hundred dollars during that period, and they would cut the amount up into small drafts, and send it in this way, in order that it might go safely. I trust the proviso will be stricken out.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I desire to say that I am not in sympathy with the motion of my friend from Illinois, [Mr. FORT.] I do not believe that this Government ought to be run for nothing. I believe that when you have the Departments of this Government run exclusively in the interest of the people, the people ought to pay for the accomdation they receive. The application of this proviso is not confined to any class of people. The rich as well as the poor may avail themselves of this system, and use the Post-Office Department for sending money, and do so now very often. So far as the mail facilities themselves are concerned, they are alike cheap to all the people. But this is a great accommodation to many people. And it is not right that this thing ought be introduced in the Post-Office Department, and that the people should be afforded all these facilities which they may get at the banks by buying drafts and that they should not pay for it. The Government is not only affording facilities that money may be safely transmitted, but is also becoming an insurer that the money shall be paid at the point of delivery; so that I think if you want to have the money-order system at all you should have it in the form proposed in this bill, so that it shall at least pay its expense.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to offer an amendment which will precede the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. It is to move to strike out in lines 484 and 485 the words "twenty assorters of money-orders, twenty thousand dollars." These are absolutely new appointments. There can, I believe, be no argument made that the force already employed is not sufficient to do the work; and gentlemen will observe also that the footing of the amount appropriated by the section is an increase of $20,000 over that of last year. Last year the total appropriation was $289,620, while this year by an increase of twenty employés it is $309,620. I move, therefore, to strike out these twenty new appointments. They have not yet been made, and they will not be made unless this sum of $20,000 is added to this appropriation which I think is altogether unnecessary.

Mr. TYNER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is mistaken in saying that this is a proposition to authorize the employment of twenty additional persons in the Sixth Auditor's Office. The legislative appropriation bill of last year provides for the appointment of ten assorters of money-orders, and the proposition in this bill is simply to increase that number ten more.

Mr. RANDALL. I think I am right.

Mr. TYNER. If the footing shows that the appropriation amounts to $20,000 more than last year, the increase must occur in some other item. It does not occur in the item providing for ten additional assorters.

Mr. RANDALL. No, I am right; I have the act of last year here. Fifteen female assorters are provided for in the law of last year which are also provided for in this bill. These twenty additional money-order assorters are not in that bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let me remind my friend that they were put in a subsequent bill last year.

Mr. TYNER. I am not able to say that they were provided for in the legislative bill last year; but that they were provided for in some appropriation bill last year there is not a particle of doubt. I do not rely on my own recollection in the substantiation of that statement, but I know that the men have been appointed and that they are now at work in their places—ten men.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman states that, it does not appear in the bill.

Mr. TYNER. It may have been in one of the other appropriation bills; but nevertheless it is a fact.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will modify my amendment and move to strike out ten of these employés.

Mr. TYNER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard upon that motion. Ten additional assorters are absolutely needed in the Sixth Auditor's Office. There are employed there already ten male assorters and fifteen female assorters. They are unable to perform the duties devolved upon them in connection with this business. Every money-order issued in the United States by any postmaster must come to the Sixth Auditor's Office and there undergo the operation of assorting and settling. When I say that money-orders are piled up almost by tons, to so large an extent that it is an absolute impossibility for the present force to work them off, and that in addition to those specifically employed for that purpose the Sixth Auditor is calling every man in the office he can possibly spare from other duties to assist, and that the work is still behind weeks and months, then I have presented all the reasons necessary for this increase.

Mr. RANDALL. I still hope these new appointments will not be made. I want to correct the statement I made a few moments since. I find in a subsequent clause of the bill that there are ten assorters provided for. The gentleman states that ten are already employed. I do not want to interfere with them, but I want to stop any addition being made to this force, because, if I am not incorrectly informed, there is now force sufficient in that Money-Order Bureau of the Post-Office Department to perform the work.

Mr. TYNER. The gentleman is very greatly mistaken. I speak from a thorough observation of the business of this office myself when I say that these are absolutely needed, and that in justice to the public business the number ought to be twice as great as is proposed here.

Mr. RANDALL. Then let us make a further reform and provide that these persons shall perform an additional hour's labor a day. I say to you distinctly that I do not want to cut down salaries, but I want to diminish the number of employés and increase the hours of labor. If the great bulk of the clerks in these Departments worked as long as I do, they would do twice as much work as they do now.

Mr. TYNER. The Committee on Appropriations last year made the same proposition that the gentleman now submits, and the House voted it down.

Mr. RANDALL. I work fourteen hours a day.

The question was taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. RANDALL; and upon a division there were—ayes 43, noes 47; no quorum voting.

Mr. RANDALL. I must insist upon tellers. I make an issue with the majority of the House on this question of additional officers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL and Mr. TYNER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 47, noes 111.

So the amendment of Mr. RANDALL was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. FORT to strike out the proviso; and being taken, it was not agreed to.

The following was read, under the heading "Commissioner of Internal Revenue:"

For dies, paper, and stamps, $300,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. By a typographical error the sum intended to be appropriated by this clause, $500,000, was made to read "$300,000." I move to increase the sum to $500,000.

Mr. RANDALL. That is $100,000 more than the estimates ask for.

Mr. GARFIELD. At the request of the Commissioner we cut down other items of appropriation and increased this item; but a decrease is made on the whole amount appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. There may very properly be reductions of other items without any increase of this item.

Mr. GARFIELD. This item cannot well be decreased from what the Committee on Appropriations recommend. We told the Commissioner that we would decrease the total appropriations, but would leave him to distribute them as he might deem best.

Mr. RANDALL. It is proposed to make this item $500,000, which is $100,000 more than the estimates.

Mr. GARFIELD. We cut down below the estimates last year, and the committee are satisfied, after a long hearing of the Commissioner, that it would not be economical to decrease the amount here proposed. Of course we must keep up the force required by this Revenue Bureau if we want to collect our revenue properly.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is this increase of $100,000 caused by reason of printing these stamps in New York?

Mr. GARFIELD. I know the stamps have hitherto been printed in the Treasury Department; but under a late contract they are now printed by some bank-note companies in New York. Of course there is added the expense of the transportation of these stamps; but whether the entire cost is more or less by reason of their being printed in New York I cannot say.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the gentleman know any good reason why these stamps should not be printed by the Government in its own building?

Mr. GARFIELD. The printing was given to the lowest bidder.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not believe that to be so. But the Committee on Banking and Currency are now engaged, at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury, in an examination of this subject.

Mr. GARFIELD. This is not the place to discuss that question——

Mr. RANDALL. I think it is just the place.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman hear the end of my sentence before he denies my statement? In the last section of the bill the whole question of engraving and printing, in connection with the bonds and notes printed at the Treasury Department, comes up for consideration, and we expect the question to be discussed there.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not rise to debate this question or to take up time, but to obtain information from the gentleman as to whether there is any reason why these stamps should not be printed by the Government. I will admit that, as far as bank-notes and currency are concerned, there may be a reason why the backs should be printed in one place and the faces in another. But when you come to the printing of stamps for tobacco, cigars, and whisky, I know of no reason why the Government should not print them. If it is to cost $100,000 to print them elsewhere, as it did last year, then I think some good reason should be given for it.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations learned that the Committee on Banking and Currency are investigating this particular subject under an order of the House at its last session; and we are informed that they will soon report upon it. Therefore, when we reach the portion of this bill where this subject will properly come up for consideration, and the report of that committee has not been made, I will agree to strike it out of this bill and have it put in some other bill, so as to leave time for their report to be made.

Mr. MERRIAM. I do not believe that this additional $100,000 has anything to do with the increased cost of printing stamps by reason of their being printed in New York.

Mr. RANDALL. I know what there is in that. I think there is a clause in the contract which enables the Government to cancel on ninety days' notice, and that ninety days can be obtained between now and the 1st of July.

Mr. MERRIAM. I understood that the contract was made for a year.

Mr. RANDALL. But it can be terminated on ninety days' notice.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. RANDALL, there were—ayes 17, noes 26; no quorum voting.

Mr. RANDALL. I must ask for tellers. This provision takes $100,000 out of the Treasury unnecessarily; and if it be agreed to it must be done by a quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported ayes 38, noes not counted.

So the amendment of Mr. RANDALL was not agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$500,000" and inserting "$450,000." I make this motion for the purpose of asking my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, what necessity there is for an increase of $100,000 over the appropriation for this purpose made last year.

Mr. GARFIELD. I stated a little while ago that the Committee on Appropriations cut down the amount $100,000 last year; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who came before the committee, said that we were cutting down too low; but he would go on as well as he could with the amount then appropriated, postponing some work until the beginning of the next year. We propose to give him now the amount he asked last year.

Mr. KELLOGG. One remark further. I am willing to vote all that may be necessary; but I want to know whether this increase does not necessarily result from the contract for making new dies for the new stamps which are to be printed in New York, and whether those dies as prepared have not upon them the heads of quite a number of individuals with whom we are very well acquainted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to know whether this increased expense of $100,000 is not rendered necessary by the preparation of these new dies for whisky, tobacco, and snuff stamps, with new heads on them—the heads, I understand, of some gentlemen whom I now see smiling around me. Is not this the real occasion of the increased expense, while in fact we have old dies without these smiling faces?

Mr. GARFIELD. If the dies include all the "smiling faces" of our friends here, they would be very much more expensive than they are.

Mr. KELLOGG. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I renew it. If I cannot save $100,000 I will try to save $50,000.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to; and the amendment of Mr. GARFIELD, as amended, was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of collectors, $2,151,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I learn that the Secretary of the Treasury is contemplating the consolidation of quite a number of the collection districts throughout the country. I notice, however, that the decrease provided for here is a very moderate one—less than $39,000. If my information as to the proposed action of the Secretary of the Treasury in the consolidation of collection districts is correct, this amount of money will not be required. Perhaps the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can tell us how far the proposed action of the Secretary of the Treasury will reach in the consolidation of collection districts.

Mr. GARFIELD. The action of the Secretary of the Treasury in that regard is not yet matured; and we cannot of course base our appropriations upon anything before it is the law unless we have a reasonable certainty that there will be a change. We have no such certainty; nor do I know what will be the extent of the change if it be entered upon.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood that the purpose was to reduce very largely the expenses in this respect; and I think the Secretary of the Treasury is to be commended for such a purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations, $100,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to know the amount appropriated for this item last year. The year before last, if my memory serves me, it was about $39,000. I suggest that the appropriation of last year should be a guide as to this year's appropriation for this matter.

Mr. GARFIELD. We appropriated the same amount last year.

Mr. RANDALL. I know, but it was not expended.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will observe another thing. The laws in relation to the punishment of frauds on the revenue were so changed last winter as to throw additional duties upon the regular officers. The sweeping away of the moiety system has thrown on all this class of officers heavier duties than before. Hence the Commissioner felt that the amount of this appropriation could not safely be reduced.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a satisfactory reason, I think.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate was presented by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announcing that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill (H. R. No. 3188) granting a pension to Letta Bagley.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 755) to relieve James Jackson, of Georgia, of his political disabilities;

A bill (S. No. 764) to remove the political disabilities of Henry Heth, of Virginia; and

A bill (S. No. 996) for the relief of the Allegheny Valley Railroad Company.

The message further announced that the Senate had adopted a resolution requesting the House to furnish to the Senate a copy of the report made to the House by the Secretary of War under the act of April 20, 1874, relating to the accounts of disbursing officers.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of official postage-stamps, $100,000.

Mr. MERRIAM. I move to strike out the clause just read. It seems to me that in this appropriation we are incurring a needless expense simply to swell the credit of the Post-Office Department. There is not an individual firm or an individual in this country conducting business in this extravagant way but would go into bankruptcy as well as receive the contempt of mankind.

I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what amount of money is expended for these departmental stamps?

Mr. GARFIELD. I believe $1,478,000 was the total amount paid for official stamps for the year ending June 30, 1874. The amount asked for this year is a little less.

Mr. MERRIAM. I refer to departmental stamps only.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is what I am referring to. The repeal of the franking privilege of course required we should appropriate for the postage of these Departments of the Government, where the postage was a large item, and we appropriated the first year, rather at haphazard, not knowing how much it would take, nearly $2,000,000. Last year the amount was $1,469,790.53, and I wish in that regard to correct my first figures. That was the total amount of the face value of official stamps for the various Departments of the Government.

Mr. MERRIAM. What is the cost to the Government of these departmental stamps?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think they cost about fifteen cents a thousand.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio how much the deficit in the Post-Office Department has been diminished since the abolition of the franking privilege.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have not gone into that subject so as to answer my cultivated and honorable friend from Massachusetts with the precision which he demands.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The gentleman, however, went into the subject last year.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am of the opinion it kept the deficit of the Post-Office Department from going higher than it would have gone if we had not repealed the abolition of the franking privilege.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Mr. Chairman, we were informed the abolition of the custom of circulating among the people information on political subjects by means of franks was to create so large a saving to the Government that the deficit of the Post-Office Department would disappear altogether, and on that statement, from high official authority, the House abolished the franking privilege. I think after a year's experience it is quite fair to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, whether his prophecies have turned out to be correct?

Mr. GARFIELD. We have not the figures of the year so aggregated as to answer the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I will ask the gentleman another question, whether he does not know the deficit in the Post-Office Department has increased and the abolition of the franking privilege has not tended to relieve the Post-Office Department? Is not that his opinion as the result of his experience?

Mr. GARFIELD. I know the deficit in the Post-Office Department has increased. I am not willing, however, to adopt the doctrine, post hoc, propter hoc, in this case. I think the repeal of the franking privilege has to a considerable extent increased the revenues of the Post-Office Department, but how much I do not know. I am, however, compelled to say, as a matter of fairness, that I do not believe the repeal of the franking privilege has been so great a blessing as I believed at the time it would be. Still I do not think we ought to give it up until we have given it a full and fair trial. The last year has been annus mirabilis, a difficult year, a year of panic, a year of distress, and not a fair year in which to judge the operation of this reform. Let us give it another fair year. Let us take a year with a democratic House of Representatives. Then with these two eyes we can see stereoscopically, and determine whether we have made any increase or not.

Mr. DAWES. That will produce a bad case of strabismus.

Mr. MERRIAM. I do not intend to discuss the subject at large. I wish only to say to the House that this is a simple, plain proposition of business. The messengers of the various Executive Departments of the Government could, in perfect security to the Government, do the franking or stamping for those Departments, and in that way save between fifteen and twenty thousand dollars a year which is now expended for no other purpose, it seems to me, than to reduce the deficiency account of the Postmaster-General. This Government belongs to the people; we are all interested in it, and why should we, as a mere matter of book-keeping, spend $20,000 a year for a purpose which is wholly unnecessary? The heads of the different Departments can organize a system which will protect the people against the improper use of any frank or stamp, and it will be just as secure as the present printed and pasted stamp system. Whatever plan is adopted its execution and tools are necessarily in the hands of many employés, as the paste-stamps now are. The revenues of the Post-Office are not affected in any degree by the proposed change, but the aggregate saving to the General Government is many thousands per annum. I see no reason whatever for continuing this expense.

Mr. RANDALL. Did I understand correctly the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as stating that these departmental stamps cost fifteen cents per thousand?

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand that that is the cost of them.

Mr. RANDALL. I offered a resolution yesterday in the House which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. If I am not mistaken, the ordinary stamps we use for letters cost 14.99 cents per thousand. I was a witness to the opening of the contract. Now I understand that the Government has subsequently entered into another contract for these departmental stamps, which cost not one dollar more than those furnished at fifteen cents per thousand, at the rate of eighty cents per thousand.

In addition to that I am informed that the dies and plates, &c., for this purpose, and to which the chairman of the committee referred a moment ago in replying to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG,] have cost the Government $50,000, when in fact they should not have cost half the money.

Mr. GARFIELD. In the statement I made I was alluding to the cost of the ordinary stamps. I did not know anything of this special contract.

Mr. MERRIAM. I have ascertained that the aggregate of the expense of printing these stamps is between fifteen and twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. But the question is whether the rate should be fifteen cents or eighty cents.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope this paragraph will be stricken out, and that the franking privilege, under whatever restrictions Congress may deem proper, will be restored. I have it not upon my conscience that I ever voted for its repeal, but have the satisfaction of knowing that whenever my vote was claimed for its restoration it was given. It was not my privilege, nor the privilege of the members of this House; it was the privilege of the people, and it was most serviceable to the country. I freely admit that congressional speeches and reports may be dull and stupid. Probably they are so. Yet there is sometimes a gleam of truth in them, sometimes a reference to important facts, and under the franking privilege the conflicting views of the representatives of the people went into every town and hamlet of the country, and were pondered and discussed; and though members may have failed to find the true point, those who read the controversies upon the questions discussed were perhaps happier than they in that respect.

Again, sir, it was pre-eminently the privilege of the poor. We have millions of people, maimed soldiers and the destitute widows and orphans of deceased soldiers, who have claims, legal, equitable, or supposed, upon the Government, and we have no right to tax them for bringing their claims before the Government and asking the assistance of their representatives in securing the adjustment of those claims.

I believe, sir, that the good effect of the Agricultural Report in any one year has more than paid all the expenses incurred by the use of the franking privilege, with all the frauds that it is alleged have been practiced under it. And I believe that this is equally true in regard to the mechanical reports. I would not restore the printing of the mechanical report in its former bulky form; I am content with the better arrangement that is now made. But I do say that the country would be the gainer if the boy of genius or plodding industry, who, without reward, is serving his trade in any business that leads to a knowledge of the laws of mechanics, could have free and unrestricted access to the patents and propositions for patents that are made from day to day, and which would stimulate and guide his inventive power.

The repeal of the franking privilege was obtained by fraud. There were baskets and barrels of memorials brought here, which had all been printed at the Government expense and issued under an edict of the Postmaster-General to his forty thousand subordinates to have them signed and brought here. And there was a further fraud in his official allegation that it would save $5,000,000 a year to the Post-Office Department. It has not saved a million, or a hundred thousand dollars. It has given the Post-Office and other Departments increased patronage. It has given them the employment of printers hither and yon. It has caused each Department to employ pasters, as they are called, to sit all day slobbering over postage-stamps and sticking them on packages, with dubious certificates that they contain no written matter. It has, as it appeared during the last session, been fraudulently used by heads of Departments and Bureaus against the people. Gentlemen will remember that it leaked out that the Comptroller of the Currency selected those speeches which pleaded for a continuance of his office and the patronage he controls, and sent them under his official frank and certificate to the banks and bankers of the country whose special privileges he would maintain.

Now, sir, I ask the restoration of the people's rights to free intercourse with the Government and with their Representatives; and, as preliminary to that, I say again I hope this clause providing $100,000 for printers and pasters of executive stamps will be stricken out.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to oppose this amendment for the purpose of addressing a word or two to the committee on the subject with which it is connected. We hear a great deal said in these times about the malign influence of politicians, and the effort to take the Government out of the hands of the politicians. Great efforts have been made by some people in that direction. Now, who are the politicians? They are the men who mix with the people; who either honorably or dishonorably, by fair means or otherwise, as gentlemen may perhaps regard it, solicit their suffrages and collect their opinions in the form of facts. They are the men who perform the office, if you please, of go-between between the Government and the people, keeping separate, under our system, the Government from the people.

Now, under our Government, the only department that comes in contact with the people is this House. We are the only officials that are dependent directly upon them. We are the only ones who go to them. We are the only ones who hold our commissions directly from their hands. These so-called reforms—and the word "reform" is a misuse of language—which have been presented to the people have been generally some scheme or other by which to remove the Government still further from the people, and to give them less and less control over it; and of all the reforms that have been set on foot and to some extent consummated looking in that direction, this one, abolishing the franking privilege, thereby cutting off free, direct, and immediate communication between the Representatives and their constituents is one not the least conspicuous.

With the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] I voted against the repeal of the franking privilege from the first. I opposed that measure steadily, and on every occasion that I have had an opportunity I have voted to restore the franking privilege. As a personal advantage to the member I venture to say that there will not be a single dissenting opinion in this House that what was called the franking privilege was no advantage. On the other hand, it entailed upon members an amount of labor that far, far transcended any amount of money that might be saved in the payment of postage, and it involved the employment of labor and clerk-hire at times when the member himself wished to be otherwise engaged. So far from the abolition having been a reform in the true sense of that word, it has operated solely and entirely to cut off communication, free communication, between the Representatives of the people and their constituents. It is a privilege, if you choose to call it so; it is a right that the people should demand for themselves, that they can communicate to their Representatives, to the law-making power of the Government, with their agents at the Capitol, without the necessity of being burdened by the payment of postage or any other payment.

Now, let us look at the question in connection with the immediate appropriation now under consideration and see how the reform operates in this instance. As the law formerly stood, when a communication was to be sent away from a Department, say the Post-Office Department, to any part of the country, the Postmaster-General attached his name to it to certify to his subordinates the source from which it came. Now, instead of his writing his name, either by himself or by a clerk, employed perhaps at $1,200 a year, he sends to New York and at a great expense gets up plates and has the same thing engraved and brought here to Washington, and then he employs a clerk or messenger to place it on packages. The system involves an expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year for the several Departments of the Government, as is admitted by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

And this is called a reform. This is heralded to the country as an improvement in administration. I quite agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this amendment should prevail and this appropriation be stricken out of the bill. Even if we do not restore the franking privilege for members of Congress and other officials of the Government, still the present process of verifying documents that go from the several Departments of the Government is attended with expense wholly useless, without any advantage, and is one that economy, common sense, and practical business judgment would dispense with at once.

Mr. GARFIELD. All this discussion on the franking privilege is really not in place here. We have a law, and the Departments are by that law required to be furnished with official stamps, and this is an appropriation to furnish one of these Departments according to the law. Now, to strike out this clause will not change the law. All it does is to cripple the Department. You have already made appropriations in this bill for this purpose for the Executive and for the State Department. Now, when we come to the Treasury Department, gentlemen think it is a nice thing to strike at this method of carrying on that Department of the Government. If you strike out the appropriation the law still remains. You cannot change the law in this bill. A proposition to do it would be ruled out on a point of order. If, then, you strike it out, you simply cripple the Department and accomplish no end.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAYNARD. Suppose we strike it out and send the bill to the Senate, will not the Senate amend the bill?

Mr. GARFIELD. And put it back again?

Mr. MAYNARD. No, sir; but incorporate such further legislation as may be necessary.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly not. My friend from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] last winter kept up a broad-sided fight on this subject for two days. The House was agitated from center to circumference on this tremendous question of official postage-stamps, and in several instances the appropriations for the purpose were stricken out; but they had all to be put back again simply because it was a fight against the law. Now, if gentlemen want to change the law about franking, let them bring the matter up in a separate bill. Let us have it debated and acted on; but when we have a law that requires us to make certain appropriations, let us make those appropriations.

Mr. CONGER. Why cannot the gentleman comply with the law, and appropriate only enough money to pay the expense of manufacturing the stamps?

Mr. GARFIELD. Because that would not comply with the law, and because I do not know how much it costs, and because it is impossible to make a calculation of that sort in the bill.

Mr. CONGER. They do not cost $100,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know how much they cost.

Mr. CONGER. Then make an appropriation to meet the actual cost of manufacturing these stamps, and not appropriate the full amount of their face.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am always instructed by my brilliant friend from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman has learned of late years to appreciate that instruction.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] know what the cost is of making these official pictures?

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that for departmental postage-stamps it costs eighty cents a thousand, while the cost of those used by the general public is but fifteen cents. I understand also that the Post-Office Department has made an illegal contract for the expenditure of about $50,000 for new dies, plates, &c. I have by resolution provided for bringing the Postmaster-General before the committee, in order to find out whose fault it is. That is all I know about the matter. I believe that everybody connected with the Government of the United States, whether in this city or anywhere else, except members of Congress, has the right to send matter free through the mails.

Mr. MYERS. This appropriation is for the next fiscal year. Does not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] think that if we fail to appropriate this amount now for this purpose it will be a step in the direction of restoring the franking privilege?

Mr. GARFIELD. For my part I do not want this Congress—and I will say here this republican Congress—to solicit by any indirection or omission a democratic House of Representatives to do what we dare not do ourselves. That is not a very manly way of doing anything. If we want to restore the franking privilege in the last days of our political lives in this House, at least for the next two years, if gentlemen want to do that, then let us do it directly, and not intimate in a crawling sort of way, by leaving out this appropriation, that we want our democratic friends of the next House to do what we do not ourselves feel willing to do now.

Mr. KELLEY. Permit me to say that I stated I wanted this amendment agreed to as preliminary to the restoration of the franking privilege. I do not want to leave our political enemies to do that which my convictions prompt me to do, and which if it be right I and my party ought to take the responsibility of doing.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. MERRIAM. I desire to say one word more. The honorable gentleman has said that this has much to do with the final action on the franking privilege. I disclaim any desire or wish to restore the franking privilege. My constituents petitioned its repeal. There let it rest until they instruct us otherwise. This is simply a plain proposition for economy. The gentleman says if we want to strike this out, then bring in another bill for that purpose. I have had too much experience in this House to bring in any bill for that purpose, because he would instantly rise and say that it was a change of existing law, and I would be obliged to take my seat. I propose to strike out this clause; it is for the next fiscal year, not for this. If we strike it out, we do not interfere with the workings of the Treasury Department or of any other Department of the Government during this fiscal year. And I promise the gentleman that I will bring in a bill that will fully cover this whole question before this Congress closes.

The question was taken on striking out the clause relating to official postage-stamps in the Treasury Department, and upon a division there were—ayes 52, noes 54; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MERRIAM and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 71, noes 78.

So the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For investigations of accounts and records, including the necessary traveling expenses, and for other traveling expenses, $4,000.

Mr. RANDALL. What does this mean? In the first place it says "necessary traveling expenses," and in the next place it says "for other traveling expenses."

Mr. GARFIELD. I rather think that is a misprint, and I move to strike out the words "and for other traveling expenses."

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For desks, tables, and chairs, and shelving for file-rooms, and cases; repairs of furniture; boxes, rugs, chair-covers and caning, cushions, cloth for covering desks, locks, screws, handsaws, turpentine, and varnish, $24,500.

Mr. GARFIELD. I find on further examination that I made a mistake in moving to strike out the words "and for other traveling expenses" in the clause read a few moments ago. The first traveling expenses referred to are the traveling expenses of persons engaged in investigating accounts; and the other clause relates to other traveling expenses; both expressions should be used. The words should be reinserted.

Mr. RANDALL. That is all right. But I would like to know why there has been an increase of $2,000 in this clause "for desks, tables, &c." Last year we appropriated $22,700, and now it is proposed that we appropriate $24,500.

Mr. GARFIELD. Last year we made a change in the whole of the contingent-fund appropriation. Hitherto it has been appropriated all in a lump—so much for the contingent fund. We separated it into different portions, but had to act somewhat arbitrarily in distributing it. We found that our distribution was unwise, and we have changed it about somewhat, but the total is about the same.

There being no objection, the motion of Mr. GARFIELD was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at San Francisco:

For assistant treasurer, $6,000; for cashier, $3,000; for book-keeper, $2,500; for assistant cashier, $2,000; for assistant book-keeper, $2,000; for stamp clerk, $2,400; for one clerk, $1,800; for three night watchmen, at $1,500 each; for one day watchman, $960; in all, $25,160.

Mr. RANDALL. There seems to be an increase of over $2,000 in this appropriation. I would like to have it explained.

Mr. GARFIELD. These items throughout are absolutely the same as in the act of last year. I think the difference is only in the footing.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; this is $2,400 more than was appropriated for this purpose last year. The appropriation last year was $22,760, while this clause proposes to appropriate $25,160.

Mr. GARFIELD. In the Book of Estimates, as the gentleman will observe, it stands precisely the same in the details and in the total. I think the footing in the law is incorrect.

Mr. RANDALL. I will examine the matter further; and if the gentleman will allow, any necessary correction can be made hereafter.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman finds any discrepancy I suppose we can go back.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mint at San Francisco, California:

For salaries of superintendent, $4,500; assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $3,000 each; chief clerk, $2,500; cashier, $2,500; four clerks, at $1,800 each; in all, $25,700.

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $253,000.

Mr. RANDALL. There is an increase of $12,000 in this appropriation for wages of workmen and adjusters. And I will avail myself of this opportunity to inquire why at San Francisco the night watchmen are paid $1,500 each, while a day watchman at the same place receives only $960?

Mr. GARFIELD. In that respect we follow previous acts.

Mr. RANDALL. But is it in obedience to law?

Mr. GARFIELD. The only reason I ever found for that difference was this: the watchman during the day-time, being engaged while the employés are there, might be a young man, an ordinary laborer; but a person charged with the care of the building at night, while the other employés are all away, is under great responsibility, and of course requires to be paid a larger salary. This seems to be a sufficient reason.

Mr. RANDALL. I notice this difference nowhere else than at San Francisco.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will remember that we have regularly paid on the Pacific coast larger salaries and larger wages for labor than we do on the eastern slope. This is in consequence of the higher price of living and higher cost of labor.

The Clerk read as follows, under the head of "Mint at Carson City, Nevada:"

For materials and repairs, fuel, light, charcoal, chemicals, and other necessaries, $75,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Here is another increase. I hope it will be explained. It is an increase of about 33 per cent.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will read the letter of Dr. Linderman, Director of the Mint, which is embraced in our pamphlet report accompanying this bill, he will see that in those western mints and assay offices we have increased those parts of the appropriations that directly relate to the increase of the amount of bullion they are compelled to handle. I am always very glad when we can fairly say that there ought to be an increase in this class of appropriations, for it always means an increase in the quantity of gold and silver produced from our mines. I am told by the Director of the Mint that in San Francisco alone we are now coining monthly about $800,000 of silver dollars—"trade dollars,"—and the demand upon us from Japan and China for these "trade dollars" is much greater than we can supply. This increase has kept up during the present year, and promises, fortunately, to continue for the year to come. The increase we have made in these western mints is simply for the additional workmen and materials necessary for handling this increased coinage.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assay office at New York:

For salary of superintendent, $4,500; for assayer, $3,000; for melter and refiner, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,800; weighing clerk, $2,800; paying clerk, $2,200; bar clerk, $2,000; two calculating clerks, at $2,000 each; one assistant weigh clerk, $1,800; and for assistants to superintendent in assayer's room and weigh-room, $9,550; in all, $35,650.

For wages of workmen, $80,000.

For acids, copper, coal, lead, light, and for miscellaneous items and repairs, $50,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I find that last year the appropriation for miscellaneous items and repairs for the assay office at New York was $20,000; while in this bill it is $50,000. In addition to that there is an increase of $15,000 in the appropriation for wages of workmen; the appropriation last year being $65,000, and that proposed here $80,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. Precisely the same reason I have already given with regard to western mints and assay offices applies here. There has been a large amount of recoinage and also considerable bullion brought to New York for handling there. The Director of the Mint is very strenuous with regard to these two items.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the letter of that officer had better be read.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is quite long. I will incorporate it in the RECORD as part of my remarks:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT,
December 5, 1874.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I transmit herewith a copy of my letter, under date of September 15, 1874, submitting to the Secretary of the Treasury the estimates of appropriations required for the support of the mints and assay offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and in which the various items embraced in the estimates are explained. Since the estimates were submitted the following statement has been prepared, and which exhibits the average operations of the mints and assay offices for the ten years ending June 30, 1872, and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874.

Average operations of the mints and assay offices for the ten years ending June 30, 1872, and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874.

Period.	Amount operated upon.		Coinage.		Bars prepared.
	Gold.	Silver.	Gold.	Silver.	Fine gold and bars of standard or above.	Unparted gold.	Fine silver.	Unparted silver.
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1874	$68,861,594 97	$15,122,151 31	$50,442,690	$5,983,601 30	$20,901,112 59	$10,584,705 41	$5,937,490 68	$910,308 50
Average for ten years ending June 30, 1872	31,935,284 25	3,842,346 36	22,786,289	1,275,623 90	6,408,656 35	2,401,603 43	834,516 57	567,492 50

A comparison of the operations for the last fiscal year with the average result of the ten years ending June 30, 1872, will show the following percentages of increase:

	Per cent.
In gold operated upon, about	115
In silver operated upon, about	397
In gold coinage, about	121
In silver coinage, about	369
In fine gold bars, about	226
In unparted gold bars, about	340
In fine silver bars, about	611
In unparted silver bars, about	60

It will be seen from the above statement that the business of the mints and assay offices has been greatly augmented under the coinage act of 1873. The increase referred to will best explain the slight increase in the appropriations for the current fiscal year and the estimates for the next fiscal year. The mints and assay offices are simply manufacturing establishments, and their expenses for any given period will, except as to that of maintaining their regular organization, depend very much on the amount of bullion they are called upon to manipulate; the expenses being proportionately less when working to their full capacity. It has, therefore, been our aim to have all the bullion produced in the country and foreign coin and bullion imported brought to the mints and assay offices to be operated upon. The expenses of the mints at San Francisco and Carson have been increased by the successful introduction of the trade dollar into China; the two mints having during the last few months turned out about $500,000 per month in that coin. When it is considered that the weight of one-half million in trade dollars is over thirteen tons, the magnitude of their operations will be readily understood. The advantages to the public of the conversion of silver into trade dollars are that such coin commands a premium of about 2½ per cent. over bullion shipped in the form of bars; and by furnishing a domestic market for silver, it enables silver bullion containing gold to be parted in the United States and the resulting gold made into coin.

Without a home market for the silver such bullion will, as a general rule, be exported direct from the mines to London, where it commands a higher price than silver containing no gold, for the reason that it admits of gold bullion containing but a small percentage of silver to be added to it and refined or parted without additional expense.

The trade dollar has become the commercial coin of China and Japan, and the demand for it for several months past has been largely in excess of the supply. We expect after this month to be able to coin seven hundred thousand pieces per month at the mints on the Pacific coast.

Recent developments on the great Comstock lode or vein (Nevada) have been such as to justify the expectation that there will be no diminution for some time to come in the extraordinary yield from that source, and which has averaged about $22,000,000 per annum for the last two years.

The bullion from the mines referred to is of a mixed character, averaging in fineness from 850 to 930 silver, and from 40 to 120 gold, and 30 base metals; the value of the gold and silver being about equal. Before either of the metals can be brought to the legal standard for coinage they must be separated the one from the other, and which operation is termed "parting." The most economical mixture for parting is about two ounces of silver to one of gold. The operation is based on the principle that silver is soluble in both sulphuric and nitric acids, while gold is not.

Assuming the annual product of the Comstock lode to be $20,000,000, of the proportion before stated, we have over two hundred and sixty tons of silver to be dissolved in acid and afterward recovered by precipitation. In separating this bullion all of the gold product of the country could be added without reducing the mixture to a proportion the most economic for the operation in question.

The economy of parting the precious metals on the Pacific coast would be greatly promoted by concentrating the same at a single point. Where the mixed bullion referred to is not to be obtained, it is necessary to keep a large quantity of fine silver on hand, to mix with the gold containing small percentages of silver, in order to insure economical parting.

It is very important that this class of bullion should be minted in our own country.

Very respectfully,

H. R. LINDERMAN, Director.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT,
December 5, 1874.

DEAR SIR: There is evidently an error in the printed estimates item wages of workmen, Carson Mint. I send Mr. Davis, of this office, with the copy on file, showing the item as it should be. The amount which was estimated for under the head of wages of workmen, Carson Mint, is $85,000. Last year the regular appropriation was $67,000. Please have the matter corrected; $85,000 is as little as can be got along with.

Respectfully,

H. R. LINDERMAN, Director.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Colorado:

For salaries of governor, chief justice and two associate judges, and secretary, $15,000.

For legislative expenses, namely: For per diem and mileage of members, and per diem of officers, $13,000; rent of legislative halls and rooms, $600; stationery for Legislature, $600; coal, light, labor, and other incidental expenses, $1,800; messenger for the secretary's office, $300; rent, light, fuel, stationery, postage, and printing for secretary's office, $1,700; in all, $18,000. And hereafter all public or official printing of laws, journals, and other official documents for the territorial governments now done at the expense of the General Government, shall be done only at the Government Printing Office, Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole, and ask their advice in relation to a matter in this bill in reference to which I am not certain we have not made a mistake. The impression made upon the minds of the committee as the result of some investigation was that the amount allowed to the several Territories for their printing, and especially for the printing of their laws and journals, was used in this way: The Territories sent back into the States and had the printing done, giving the job technically to some printer in the Territory and whatever profit was made. Sometimes considerable was made simply by the person in the Territory to whom the job was given. The printing was done in the East, and it took a long time to get it back to the Territory. The Committee on Appropriations thought perhaps it would be better to have the whole printing done at the Government Printing Office in Washington, so far as the laws and journals were concerned. I am satisfied that would be true of some of the Territories upon their present custom. But this morning the committee was called upon by a Delegate from one of the Territories, who stated the fact that in New Mexico, where the journal was kept in two languages, in the English and Spanish, and the laws also were printed in two languages, unless they were permitted to do it upon the ground, where they have people speaking and printers who understand both languages, it could not be done. It may be we have made a mistake in this whole business. If we have, we should correct it here.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the gentleman make that exception.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to except Arizona and New Mexico, which are so far away there would be great difficulty in having the printing done here.

Mr. STEEL. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations one question, and that is, how the printing of the daily journal and the printing of the bills and of the current business of the territorial Legislatures can be done if this provision of law should be adopted?

Mr. GARFIELD. I would say to the gentleman we did not intend to provide by this provision for any other printing than that of the statutes of the Territories. The printing to which he refers of course would have to be done on the spot. The printing of the statutes of the Territories costs about $3,000 a Territory. It seems to me, if the fact is that they send them to the East to be printed, we had better do the printing here in Washington, and let whatever profit is made go into the Treasury rather than to individuals. I should like to hear from any of the Delegates.

Mr. McCORMICK. I think we had better strike out this whole provision. There may have been instances where the printing has been done out of the Territories. I believe, however, every Territory has facilities now for doing this work. There may be one or two Territories where there are no facilities for binding; and perhaps an exception should be made in reference to volumes which are to be bound. I think, as a rule, the entire work should be done in the Territories. If we send it here it must involve great delay, and the sending of the original manuscript laws here to the Government Printer. There can be no advantage to the Government where the amount expended is limited by law, as is now the case, while there must be great disadvantage and inconvenience to the people of the Territories. This work belongs to the Territories, and as matter of simple right should be left to them.

I therefore move to strike out the following words:

And hereafter all public or official printing of laws, journals, and other official documents for the territorial governments, now done at the expense of the General Government shall be done only at the Government Printing Office, Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am rather disposed to think we went too far in putting that provision into the bill, and I do not object to striking it out.

Mr. McCORMICK's motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to insert after the word "dollars," in line 915 the words "for printing, $4,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Idaho:
For salaries of governor, chief justice and two associate judges, and secretary, $15,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. The estimates for contingencies in that Territory did not reach us in time to be embraced in the bill, and I am therefore directed to move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of secretary's office, $600; storage and care of Government property, $300; fuel, $200; stationery, lights, and incidental expenses, $500; in all, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move, under the heading of the Territory of Montana, to insert after the word "dollars" the following words: "for printing, $4,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMICK. I move to amend the paragraph making an appropriation for the Territory of New Mexico by adding these words:

For printing, $4,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I offer the same amendment to the paragraph making an appropripation for the expenses of the Territory of Washington, by adding the words—

For printing, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHE. I ask unanimous consent for the committee to go back to allow me to offer an amendment, to come in after line 898.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think I must object; but let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 898 insert the following:

Assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina:
For assayer in charge, $1,800; melter, $1,500; wages of workmen, $600; contingent expenses, $1,500; in all, $5,400.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the Chair rules that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the same appropriation of $4,000 for printing be made for Wyoming as has been for other Territories.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to suggest the question whether this additional $4,000 for printing in each of these nine Territories will make an increase in fact in the amount appropriated.

Mr. GARFIELD. If not appropriated here, we would only have to appropriate it in some other place.

Mr. RANDALL. Will you strike off $36,000 when you come to appropriate to the Public Printer?

Mr. GARFIELD. The Public Printer has never done this work. We have not put in $36,000 on this account to the Public Printer; but if these appropriations had not been made here, I should have had to move that increase.

The Clerk read as follows:

District of Columbia:
For salaries of the five members of the board of health, $10,000.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out "$10,000" and inserting "$8,000."

Mr. RANDALL. It ought all to be stricken out. In my State this work is done for nothing.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. In an act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," I find this provision:

And the compensation of all officers and employés, except teachers in the public schools, and officers and employés in the fire department, shall be reduced 20 per cent. per annum.

I find that under the act of 1871 members of the board of health are officers of the District. This section which I have read makes no exception in their favor. It applies to all officers in the District. The salaries of these officers under the law of 1871 are $2,000 a year, and the appropriations would be correct if made under that law. But the reduction under the bill which was reported last winter and became a law is 20 per cent., and under that law the appropriation here should be $8,000 instead of $10,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether my friend from Illinois is right in this or not. My understanding was that all the officers of the District—those officers who were created by the District government—had their salaries cut down, but that the officers of the United States for the District, such as the board of health, who were appointed by the President under a law of Congress, did not thereby have their salaries reduced. The Book of Estimates made up at the Treasury Department, in conformity, as I suppose, with existing laws, estimated for them the same as last year.

I should be glad to know from my friend from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] who had charge of the bill which was passed last session, whether the law did apply to a case like this or not. Of course, if it did, the motion of my friend from Illinois is right.

Mr. FORT. I should like to know what necessity there is for so many commissioners. It appears to me that five commissioners is a large force, considering the labor to be performed. I think the number should be reduced, and that the work ought to cost a great deal less. If in order, I will move an amendment to the amendment, to strike out the word "five," before the word "members," and insert "three."

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is a change of law. The law fixes the number of commissioners, and it is not competent for us in this bill to change the law in that regard.

Mr. FORT. I do not see that to accomplish my object it is necessary to change the law. We might provide an appropriation for some of these officers and not the rest.

Mr. RANDALL. Where is the law?

Mr. FORT. And besides, as suggested by my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] I would like to see the law referred to by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CHIPMAN. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me to answer him, I will say that the law will be found in the organic act of February 21, 1871. That law creates a board of health of five members and fixes their salary, and I submit that it is not competent to change that law.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that that law stands repealed.

Mr. CHIPMAN. The organic act has not been repealed. There was substituted a temporary government in lieu of a part of the old government, but the board of health stood intact.

Mr. FORT. I should like the Delegate from the District to state whether he does not think that three commissioners should be sufficient to do this duty.

Mr. CHIPMAN. It may be that in reorganizing the District government the board of health may properly be reduced to three, but I am not prepared to pronounce a distinct opinion as to that. That is not the question now. The question is whether you are violating the law of Congress, which provides that five members of the board of health shall be paid $2,000 each.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] says that that has been repealed.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Allow me just one more word. There is pending now before both Houses a bill looking to a permanent form of government here, which includes this subject as well as all others relating to the District government.

I submit to him and all others here who are disposed to economize, to leave this bill to take its course and not disturb the board of health as at present organized. It is one of the most efficient boards we have ever had in the District.

Mr. FORT. I want to submit another question to the gentleman from the District. It has been stated that by reason of all the vast expenditures made here, especially upon sewerage, the city has become much more healthy than it was.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Undoubtedly it has.

Mr. FORT. Now, if the city has become so healthy, there cannot be so much work necessary on the part of this board of health.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Much of the present healthy condition of the city is due to the efforts of this board of health.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I would suggest to the chairman of the committee whether the addition of the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary" would not remove all difficulty?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think that would cover the ground precisely. If we say "or so much thereof as may be necessary," then the accounting officers of the Treasury will only pay such amount as the law, as it now stands, gives.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I cannot accept that amendment. I do not wish to leave it a matter of construction.

Mr. WILBER. This board of health is one of the most efficient boards that there is in any part of these United States. The mortality rate in this city is the least in any city of its size, and to cut down the board would be a great mistake. It is very important to us who come here to have a very efficient board of health, and for one I am opposed very strongly to its being cut down.

Mr. RANDALL. So much has been said in praise of this board of health that I want to say a word on the other side. I consider it one of the most extravagant boards ever instituted in any city, and the records show it by the amounts appropriated for and used by the board.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] moves to strike out "five" and insert "three."

Mr. FORT. I understand that the gentleman from the District admits that three can do all the duties.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] raises the point of order that the law requires that there shall be five members of the board of health, but it does not require the appropriation to be made at this point in the bill; and the Chair is compelled to rule that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] is in order. The gentleman from Illinois in front of the Chair [Mr. CANNON] has moved to strike out "ten" and insert "eight," so as to reduce the appropriation $2,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us first decide as to the number and then as to the salary we will pay.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Has the Chair ruled upon the point as to the proposed amendment making a change in existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the appropriation does not necessarily change the law.

Mr. CHIPMAN. But, if the Chair will allow me, this proposition reduces the board from five to three.

The CHAIRMAN. Not necessarily; it simply makes at this point an appropriation for three members. The point is well established by precedents in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILBER. Then do I understand that the other two members of the board are to have no appropriations and are expected to serve for nothing?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not feel bound to answer that question.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I give notice to gentlemen that the adoption of this amendment will leave open a claim on the part of two of these officers for their full salaries, and this Congress can never deny it but must ultimately pay it.

Mr. FORT. We will settle that hereafter.

Mr. RANDALL. We will settle it along with a thousand other claims from this District.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I hope you will remember your duty toward the District when you get to that point.

Mr. BURCHARD. I would suggest to my colleague [Mr. FORT] that he will not reduce the expense to the Government by this amendment. The salaries of these two commissioners will have to be paid hereafter. You cannot by reducing the appropriation reduce the number of officers. I might perhaps agree with my colleague that it would be wise and proper to reduce the number; but you accomplish nothing by simply providing for paying three and leaving two to be paid afterward.

Mr. FORT. If these gentlemen who have investigated District affairs mean economy let them act up to their professions. What is the use of keeping five old spavined horses here at great expense to the Treasury?

Mr. BURCHARD. If the gentleman proposes to follow it up by legislation, that is another matter.

Mr. FORT. We do; that is just the object. The gentleman from the District himself admits that three is a sufficient number.

Mr. CHIPMAN. O, I have made no such admission; and I submit that I am not to be misrepresented here.

The question was put upon the motion of Mr. FORT to strike out "five" and insert "three;" and on a division there were—ayes 46, noes 41; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILBER and Mr. FORT were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, to strike out "ten" and insert "eight."

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Before the question is taken on striking out I move to add to the clause the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary." I do it for this reason: a question of construction has arisen as to whether or not these are among the officers contemplated by the act passed last spring. My impression is that they are. I do not, however, know what construction will be given to the statute. But if we appropriate only so much of this as may be necessary, then if the construction of my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] be correct there will be only so much paid as will be necessary to pay the salaries, deducting 20 per cent. of the $2,000, which is the salary originally fixed by act of Congress. We appropriate simply so much as may be necessary, and then as the 20 per cent. reduction has already been provided for, that will be all they will get. That will meet the exact point of my friend.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think that is a good amendment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I do not agree to the amendment. I think there can be no question as to the proper construction of this act. This is a bill making appropriations in pursuance of law, and it is our duty to know what the law is. I do not believe in making appropriations by guess, simply providing for the expenditure of so much as may be necessary.

The amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, was then agreed to.

The motion of Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, to strike out the paragraph was not agreed to.

The following was read:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

For compensation of the Secretary of War, $8,000; one chief clerk, at $2,500; one disbursing clerk, at $2,000; two chief clerks of division, at $2,000 each; seven clerks of class four; six clerks of class three; six clerks of class two; fifteen clerks of class one; two messengers; nine laborers; seven watchmen for the Northwest Executive building; in all, $78,300.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether this appropriation of $2,000 for a disbursing clerk is not a new thing in this bill?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not a new thing; it was in the bill of last year. Formerly, in the days when Mr. Potts was chief clerk, the disbursements were made by him, and he received extra pay for it. But when he died, the new chief clerk declined or was not willing to do the additional work; or at any rate it was thought better to separate the two offices. Last year the appropriation was made as it is proposed here.

The following was read:

For postage on official matter of the War Department and its Bureaus, $85,669.

Mr. RANDALL. Where was that item in the bill of last year?

Mr. GARFIELD. It was not in this place, but it was about the same amount.

Mr. RANDALL. I see it was under the head of Adjutant-General.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3813) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, reported back, with amendments, from the Committee on the Judiciary, a bill (H. R. No. 796) to protect all citizens in their civil and legal rights; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4040) to amend the fourteenth section of the act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, approved September 24, 1789; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

TEACHERS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 129) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to promote the efficiency of the teachers of the public schools in said District; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS.

Mr. BLAND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4039) for the relief of actual settlers on lands claimed to be swamp and overflowed lands in the State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 3188) granting a pension to Letta Bagley;

A bill (H. R. No. 3339) relating to the disposition of certain lands to be reclaimed in sections 14, 23, and 26, in township 16 north, of range 20, in the county of Sheboygan, in the State of Wisconsin; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 119) to continue the board of audit to examine and audit the unfunded or floating debt of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Cerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BELL: A paper, for the establishment of a post-route from Big Creek to Hickory Flat, in the State of Georgia, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: The petitions of clerks and other employés of the District of Columbia, for amendments of the act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved June 20, 1874, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. COTTON: The petition of attorneys of Scott County, Iowa, for removal of United States district court for Iowa from Keokuk to Burlington, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CROUNSE: Resolutions of the National Bankers' Association of Nebraska, in favor of repeal of bank-check tax, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ELDREDGE: The memorial of H. H. Dodd, D. R. Curran, A. Raymond, and 200 others, of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, for cheap transportation and the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of the Washington and Ohio Railroad Company, for aid in the construction of their road to the Ohio River, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. KASSON: The petition of attorneys and citizens of Lucas County, Iowa, for removal of the United States district court for Iowa from Keokuk to Burlington, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KELLEY: The memorial of Peter Wright & Sons, of Philadelphia, praying for a refund of duties improperly assessed on certain importations of farina, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LOUGHRIDGE: The petition of citizens of Wapello County, Iowa, for the removal of the United States district court for Iowa from Keokuk to Burlington, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LOWE: The petition of Hiram P. Barrick, of Kansas, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McCRARY: The petition of attorneys of Washington County, Iowa, for the removal of the United States district court for Iowa from Keokuk to Burlington, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RANDALL: The petition of Louis A. Godey, that periodicals be charged the same rate for postage as newspapers for same weight, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. STANARD: The petition of Silas Reed, for compensation for property taken for the new custom house at Saint Louis, Missouri, to the Committee on Claims.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 17, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 3339) relating to the disposition of certain lands to be reclaimed in sections 14, 23, and 26, in township 16 north, of range 20, in the county of Sheboygan, in the State of Wisconsin;

A bill (H. R. No. 3188) granting a pension to Letta Bagely; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No 119) to continue the board of audit to examine and audit the unfunded or floating debt of the District of Columbia.

RECEPTION OF KING OF HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. CAMERON. I am directed to make a report from the joint committee appointed to consider what notice should be taken of the presence of the King of the Hawaiian Islands. The committee called upon His Majesty yesterday and invited him to visit the Capitol to-morrow. He will be in the President's Room at half-past eleven to-morrow, and at quarter past twelve he will be received, if the Senate so wills, by the House of Representatives and the Senate in the Hall of the Representatives. It is proposed that the Senate shall meet at twelve, the usual hour, and adjourn at quarter past twelve for the purpose of proceeding in a body to the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. We cannot on this side of the Chamber hear the Senator. I should like to have the report repeated by the Chair or Secretary, or to hear the Senator restate what is proposed.

Mr. CAMERON. I said that the joint committee called upon the King of the Sandwich Islands yesterday by the direction of the two Houses of Congress and invited His Majesty to visit the Capitol. He will be in the Senate wing of the building to-morrow at half past eleven, in the President's Room. It is proposed by the committee that the Senate shall meet at twelve o'clock, as usual, to-morrow and adjourn at quarter past twelve o'clock for the purpose of proceeding in a body to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do the committee propose that we shall adjourn or take a recess at quarter past twelve to-morrow?

Mr. CAMERON. It would be better to take a recess, I suppose. I send the programme to the desk to be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following:

PROGRAMME—REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

The Senate and House will receive King Kalakaua at a quarter after twelve o'clock on Friday next, in the Hall of the House of Representatives. The Vice-President of the United States and the Speaker of the House will preside. Senator CAMERON, chairman of the joint committee on reception, will present the King, and the Speaker of the House will welcome him.

The southeast gallery will be reserved for the families of the President, Vice-President, members of the Cabinet, Senators, and members of the House. The diplomatic gallery will be reserved for the diplomatic corps exclusively. The other galleries, except the reporters' gallery, will be open to the public.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the memorial of Lucy C. Baker and Louis A. Baker, children of Harriet de la Palm Baker, deceased, asking compensation for services rendered by their ancestor, Lieutenant-Colonel Frederick H. Weissenfels, in the army of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. THURMAN presented the petition of Elias M. Ritz, praying arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 601) granting a pension to Mrs. Janet Scott West, widow of Cato C. West, deceased, reported adversely thereon, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT. The same committee, to whom was referred a resolution "that the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the existing pension laws as to provide that the allowance on monthly pensions granted to soldiers who have lost an arm above the elbow shall be the same as that now allowed to soldiers who have lost a leg above the knee, and report by bill or otherwise," have had the same under consideration, and directed me to ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, because Congress at the last session acted on the subject-matter, and provided for those who had lost an arm above the elbow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee will be discharged, if there be no objection.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Charlotte D. Crocker, widow of the late Marcellus M. Crocker, praying for an increase of pension from thirty dollars per month to fifty dollars, reported adversely thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. The same committee, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, that their Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their best endeavors to secure the passage of an act granting a pension to Mrs. H. B. Huntress from the 14th of March, 1864, to the 27th of March, 1871, being the period for which pension has not been paid, "at the same rate per month as has been granted upon pension certificate No. 109521, by the honorable Commissioner of Pensions," have had the same under consideration, and have instructed me to report adversely to this resolution, and upon this ground: By a communication from the Commissioner of Pensions, it appears that in order to pay arrears of pension such as are contemplated in this resolution in behalf of Mrs. Huntress would require an appropriation out of the Treasury of upward of $9,000,000. We do not think the Treasury is in a condition at this time to respond to a claim of that kind. I move, therefore, that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of this resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Margaretta Becker, widow of Leopold Becker, late captain of Company D, Twenty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, praying an allowance of arrears of pension, reported adversely thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3593) to constitute Patchogue, on the south side of Long Island, in the State of New York, a port of delivery, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1041) for the relief of Joseph R. Shannon, of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1042) to organize the judicial district of Oklahoma and establish courts of the United States therein; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1043) suspending so much of an act entitled "An act reorganizing the several staff corps of the Army," approved June 23, 1874, as applies to contract surgeons; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

ENTRIES WITHIN RAILROAD GRANTS.

Mr. HARVEY. I yesterday gave notice that if I could obtain the floor within the morning hour to-day I would call up House bill No. 3250; but noticing the absence from the Senate of some Senators who feel an interest in the matter and who, I suppose, intend to participate in the discussion, I shall not ask for its present consideration. It is the bill (H. R. No. 3250) to confirm pre-emption and homestead entries of public lands within the limits of railroad grants in cases where such entries have been made under the regulations of the Land Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make any motion?

Mr. HARVEY. I think that the absence of Senators should not prevent us from taking up the bill. I move to take it up; and we may make some progress with it.

Mr. PRATT. I think there was some disagreement in the Committee on Public Lands at the time that bill was considered. I do not know how many members of the Committee on Public Lands are present at this time, but I submit to my friend whether it would not be better that the bill should lie over for the present.

Mr. HARVEY. It was in view of the fact alluded to by the Senator from Indiana that when I first arose I made reference to the fact that certain Senators were absent, and that for that reason I did not propose to proceed now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. HARVEY. Yes, sir.

THE STEAMBOAT LAWS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, the bill which was under consideration at the adjournment yesterday will be taken up, and its reading proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the reading of the bill can be dispensed with for a moment, I should like to make a suggestion to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. I ask whether he will not allow the further consideration of the bill to be postponed till Monday or Tuesday of next week; in which time opportunity will be given for some members of the committee, and perhaps for members of the Senate generally, to examine it more carefully than they have as yet had an opportunity to do. Although I am of the committee, I have not given to the bill that examination which it deserves; and I have to state further that the officers of the Treasury Department were requested near the close of the last session to make examination of some of the details of the bill. I saw the officer in charge this morning, and he has not completed the examination on account of duties pressing upon him continually during the recess. If the chairman of the committee will let it go over for four or five days, I shall be glad.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would suggest that the bill be read through, and then if the Senator desires time for an examination of it he can have it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Well, I shall not object to the reading if it is understood that when the reading is concluded the bill shall go over until some time next week.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; if the Senator desires it, I shall not object.

Mr. BOUTWELL. And without any formal motion, because I may not be in when the reading is through.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The Chief Clerk continued and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understood that the bill was to be laid aside.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Pennsylvania desires to make a verbal amendment. After that we can fix a day for its consideration.

Mr. SCOTT. On page 22, line 12, section 24, there is a misprint which changes the sense of the sentence; where the word "or" is printed it ought to be the word "on"—"on her voyage." I ask that that correction be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) That correction will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts what day will suit his convenience? I would like as early a day as possible.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I would suggest Tuesday next, if that is agreeable.

Mr. CHANDLER. I give notice, then, that on Tuesday, after the morning hour, I shall call up this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be laid aside.

CENTENNIAL TEA CELEBRATION.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I offer the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the women's centennial executive committee of the city of Washington in aid of the national centennial exhibition have leave to occupy the Rotunda of the Capitol, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, during the afternoon and evening of December 17th, instant, for the purpose of celebrating the destruction of the tea in the harbor of Boston on the night of the 16th of December, 1773.

I will merely say that the ladies have quite a number of articles and some amount of provisions left from last night, and they desire to occupy the Rotunda this afternoon and evening. I presume there will be no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A message was subsequently received from the House of Representatives announcing its concurrence in the resolution.

TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I present a petition of citizens of New York and Philadelphia engaged in the manufacture of umbrellas and parasols, who in large numbers call attention to what they deem an aggravated grievance existing under the tariff. There is a tariff bill now in the hands of a committee of conference, and I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and also of the conference committee, whether I should move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Finance or to the committee of conference, I not knowing precisely the limits of what the conference committee have under consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have been written to and called upon by a number of gentlemen in regard to the tariff bill, and I desire to take this occasion to state that the committee of conference have no power to go beyond the subject-matters that are in dispute between the two Houses. We cannot open the subject of the tariff on umbrellas; we cannot open the tariff on any question that is not presented by the points of disagreement between the two Houses, and those differences are confined mainly to three things: First, a modification of the tobacco tax; next, a tax on brokers' sales; and thirdly, the tax on hops. These are the main points of dispute. Therefore it is perfectly idle to send either persons or papers to the committee of conference unless they relate to one of these three things. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] suggests to me he desires to restore the 10 per cent. which was taken off in 1872, and there is a proposition made by some to put a tax on tea and coffee. The committee of conference have nothing to do except with those matters that are in dispute between the two Houses. The three items I have mentioned are the chief items, although there are some others of less importance, those being the points which created the difficulty between the two Houses.

Mr. CONKLING. The statement made by the chairman of the committee concerns the convenience of many people, as I know from a somewhat abundant correspondence touching many things which it seems are not embraced within the jurisdiction of the committee of conference. Therefore I think I had better move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Finance, as it seems like many other things to have no application to the bill now immediately pending.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also a petition signed by a large number of manufacturers of frames and mountings of umbrellas and parasols in the State of New York and in the city of Philadelphia, praying for a modification in their behalf of the tariff. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE MINING LAW.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the indulgence of the Senate, with the consent of my colleague, for a few minutes. The Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2032) to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872, has directed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage; and I ask that I may be allowed to state to the Senate, in a very few words, the reasons why, if action is had on the bill, it should be had now. Let the bill be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872.

Be it enacted, &c., That the fifth section of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so that where a person or company has or may run a tunnel for the purpose of developing a lode or lodes, owned by said person or company, the money so expended in said tunnel shall be taken and considered as expended on said lode or lodes, whether located prior to or since the passage of said act; and such person or company shall not be required to perform work on the surface of said lode or lodes in order to hold the same as required by said act.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the bill is precisely what the law really is now, but unfortunately that is not what it has been construed to be at the Department. I will read the fifth section of the act, or so much of that section as the amendment refers to:

On each claim located after the passage of this act, and until a patent shall have been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year. On all claims located prior to the passage of this act, ten dollars' worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made each year for each hundred feet in length along the vein until a patent shall have been issued therefor.

The provision which requires the expenditure of that money has been twice extended by Congress, and the time will expire with this month. At the Department, wrongfully I think, they have held that labor performed on a horizontal shaft is not an expenditure upon the mine. The committee are unanimously of the opinion that it is just as much an expenditure upon the mine as though it were a perpendicular shaft; and there are several cases. If the time goes by and the law be not amended, those who have under the provisions of this section expended their labor on a horizontal shaft will be deprived in many instances of their mines. The committee unanimously recommend the passage of the bill in concurrence with the House. That is all there is of it.

Mr. THURMAN. I have no particular knowledge about this matter; but from the statement made by the Senator from Maine, it would seem that the cases provided for in the bill, if not strictly within the letter of the law, are within its equity. The only reason

I have for rising is to ask the Senator whether there is any necessity for putting a proviso to the bill saving any adverse claims. It may be that some of these people, since having been decided against by the Department, have abandoned their claims and others occupied them; and whether there ought not be some saving clause that this bill shall not affect adverse claims to these mines, I do not know.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would say to the Senator that I think there can be no possible necessity for any such provision, because by existing law there is no forfeiture of rights which can be taken advantage of by other parties until the 1st of January next.

Mr. THURMAN. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. One difficulty has occurred to me, which may perhaps be very readily explained. A person who locates a mine and commences a perpendicular shaft according to the course of the vein has a visible, actual possession of a mine with defined boundaries; but a person may start a horizontal shaft on some vein or mine so as not to give notice to all the world of where he desires to reach by his horizontal shaft. Is there not a practical difficulty in respect to that? If there is an actual possession of the outcropping of the vein, so that the possession could be taken notice of by everybody who passes along, well and good; but if a person has not actual possession of the outcropping of the vein, but commences at a remote or distant point to start a horizontal shaft, he might not give the requisite actual notice to those who are seeking mines.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator will look at the original law, in the section from which I read, he will find that the work must be on the actual claim.

Mr. SHERMAN. Within the limits of the claim?

Mr. HAMLIN. Within the limits of the claim.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to make one suggestion to the honorable Senator from Maine. This is a House bill, passed by the House on the 18th of June, 1874. It proposes to amend an act which it recites was approved May 10, 1872. The Senator will remember that the Revised Statutes which were recently enacted repealed this act; and I suggest to him whether he had not better so amend this bill as to make reference to the proper section of the Revised Statutes, because now on its face the bill is the amendment of a dead act, an act which is expressly repealed. My recollection of the dates is that when the House acted on this bill the act of 1872 was in operation. Since that time it has ceased to be. The Senator knows better than I do how to change the bill. A verbal change will correct that difficulty.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the suggestion of the Senator from New York is very just and proper. I will therefore let the bill lie on the table until I can look at the Revised Statutes and see what will be the best phraseology to adopt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie over by common consent.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEEDS.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1009) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds, have directed me to report it back with an amendment and recommend its passage; and I would state to the Senate what the object of this bill is, in order that it may have present consideration, as I think it will take but a minute.

The bill as it was introduced appropriated $50,000 to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to supply seeds to those parts of Nebraska and Kansas or other States which have been subject to the ravages of the grasshopper. The committee have amended the bill by inserting "$30,000" instead of "$50,000." We have had a conference with the Commissioner of Agriculture, and he informs us that he has received some two thousand letters making applications for these seeds; that he is receiving fifty a day; that if the bill passes now he can supply the seeds, and put them up in packages and have them at these destitute places in time for the spring planting. The seeds which he will send are generally garden seeds, with some barley and oats. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 1009) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $50,000 to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds to the portions of the country which have suffered from grasshopper ravages during the past summer.

The amendment of the Committee on Agriculture was to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty," so as to make the amount appropriated $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture whether this is not a very expensive method of distributing seeds; whether $30,000 will not in fact go a very little way, considering the methods adopted by the Agricultural Department. I understand that the distribution of seeds by that Department is by the selection of the best possible articles of seed and sending them in small packages to different parts of the country for the purpose of improving the stock of seeds used in the different parts of the country. Whether that system, which is necessarily select and necessarily expensive, can be properly and economically applied to supplying seeds for the region which has been devastated by grasshoppers is to my mind very questionable. It seems to me that this $30,000—I do not object to the appropriation—can be expended so as to do a great deal more good without the processes which are used by the Department of Agriculture. I suggest that consideration to my friend from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know any other way in which this benefit can be conferred. I suppose that the Commissioner of Agriculture will of course exercise a reasonable discretion. In conversation with the committee he told us that where he could find reliable agricultural societies in a community he would send the seeds to them in the cheapest manner, and the distribution in small packages to individuals will not be adopted any further than is necessary. I see the objection, but I do not see that there is any other way provided by which we can meet the evil.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It is obvious that the suggestions of the Senator from California have a considerable amount of force. For instance, I take it in northern Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Iowa, oats and barley are to be had at a lower price than in any other portion of the Union. It would seem like a lavish outlay of expenditure to bring oats from there here, and then send them back through the mails at a cost of somewhere from two to four dollars a bushel to supply these waste places. It strikes me that there ought to be some better method of sending at least barley and oats to these regions where they require them for seed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to suggest to the honorable Senator from Vermont that there is nothing in this bill which requires the distribution of seeds to be made in accordance with any former or present plans of distribution. There is already in existence in my own State a society organized for the general relief of sufferers of this kind; and should the bill pass, I have no doubt that through that society the distribution by the Commissioner can be made to a very great extent. I see no other organization which could better and more properly make such distribution. I think there is every reason why this bill should pass and pass promptly.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan.) The unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think there is a motion pending to amend the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] to strike out the word "regents" wherever it occurs and insert "commissioners."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I consider that an entirely immaterial amendment; and if it is the judgment of the Senate that the word "commissioners" accords with better sense and taste, as it is a mere name, I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I propose to amend in section 75, line 2, on page 135, by striking out the words "may appoint and remove a coroner for said District," and then by striking out in lines 3 and 4 the words "of which three coroners, however, the coroner now in office shall be one," so as to read:

> That said regents, under the provision last referred to, may appoint and remove a coroner for said District.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would say in explanation of that amendment a single word. I have ascertained that there is but one coroner at the present time, and one is deemed entirely adequate.

I move to strike out in line 4 of the same section the word "every" and insert "the said," and then to strike out the words "in said District," which follow the word "coroner;" and in line 9 of the same section I move to strike out the word "each" and insert "said."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, pages 87 to 102 of this bill, beginning at section 43 and ending with section 52, contain a series of provisions relating to the powers and duties of an excise board. I am free to say at present, as to the formation of this board and the different officials who are to exercise its duties and are drawn from the other boards of the District, it does seem to me a good feature of the bill that the same set of officials shall be employed in different capacities, all of which have a concurrence in the government of this community. But this part of the bill touches the question of licenses for the sale of fermented and spirituous liquors. While I have not had the opportunity to give it the close attention I desire, yet I wish to submit to the Senate certain amendments that I think will improve the bill and relieve it from some features which I consider exceedingly obnoxious in principle.

In the first place, there are in section 46 regulations for the classification of the licenses to be granted, and it provides at page 90, from line 11 to line 19, that a person applying for a license shall "give an adequate bond, with two sureties, in a form to be approved by said excise board, for the payment to the United States of such portion of the license fee as shall not be paid in advance, and for faithfully observing the conditions of the license, the provisions of this act, and the ordinances adopted thereunder, and suit may be maintained in the name of said District against one or more of the licensees or sureties on any such bonds for the recovery, with costs, of any fee or portion of a fee payable under any said license."

And then it goes on to authorize suits to be brought upon this bond. Why, sir, the machinery is entirely unnecessary. Why not make the license payable always in advance, and thus secure the desired revenue?

A subsequent section seems to contemplate the payment of license fees in advance. Why should there be this very troublesome, cumbersome method of granting licenses and requiring that a man shall give a bond to pay his license fee? Simply require the license fee to be paid in advance, and then you have the best security in the world, for you have the money.

There are other objectionable words. Let me read:

All fees shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States, and such portion thereof shall be paid in advance as the regulations of said board of excise may require; and said board may provide a proper form of application, to be filed with its secretary, for all licenses, and prepare and use a seal; and may, subject to the supervision of said regents, also employ such assistants of the secretary as the public interests demand and the appropriations will warrant. And said board may dismiss any person so employed, for cause, to be entered upon its minutes.

I propose to strike out the whole of that section after line 11 and down to line 31 inclusive, and substitute in lieu thereof these words:

All fees shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States in advance, and the said board may provide a proper form of application, to be filed with its secretary, for all licenses, and may prepare and use a seal.

It will be observed that the amendment which I propose secures to the Treasury the payment of the full license fee without any bond being given for it at all. The license system I approve of. I think it is the only proper method to deal with the subject to which it relates, and it is much better to have these fees paid in advance, and then they are in the Treasury, and that is the end of the matter. It is proper to provide that the board may provide forms of application, to be filed with the secretary, for such licenses.

I wish also to say here that in line 28 there is a power given for the employment of assistants to the secretary without limitation at all, or at least without any limitation beyond what "the public interests demand and the appropriations will warrant." Having the power of patronage, they will employ clerks to the extent of all the money they can get. There can be no necessity for the employment of a single individual in addition to the force already authorized by the act, and therefore I trust that this unlimited power to employ assistants to the secretary of this excise board will be stricken from the bill, and that the fee for licenses will be made payable in advance. I move to strike out that portion of the section and to insert in lieu thereof the words which I have repeated, believing that this will accomplish the full object of getting the money into the Treasury, and not requiring the cumbersome process of suits on bonds and bonds with sureties whose sufficiency will have to be inquired into.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If my honorable friend will read that whole chapter through I think he will see that his amendment is unnecessary. It will secure undoubtedly the prepayment of the whole fee for licenses, and I think that would be well enough. A man might wish to break up his business before the end of the year; and I suppose this provision had some reference to that fact. But I have no objection to requiring the license fee to be paid in advance. But that is not the whole of this clause, nor is it the material part of it. Payment in advance of the fee is a very trifling matter. This section provides for a bond, and the bond secures not only the payment of the license fee, but it covers the whole duty of the licensed man in regard to his traffic. That is the point. That is the material thing. That is the security for society. It regulates the whole conditions under which the sale takes place.

Mr. BAYARD. If the honorable Senator will look at the effect of his language in lines 20, 21, and 22, he will see that the suit on the bond is limited to "the recovery, with costs, of any fee or portion of a fee payable under any said license." That is all the right of action given on the bond.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But if my honorable friend will look further he will see that the bond is for the payment "of such portion of the license fee as shall not be paid in advance, and for faithfully observing the conditions of the license," &c. Now let him turn over to page 93 and he will observe that the conditions are described, first, second, third, and so on. The Senator in aiming to accomplish one thing destroys the entire character of that section which provides for a bond to enforce the conditions of the license. If my honorable friend will amend the section so as to require the payment in advance and go no further, I shall have no objection to his amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I am loth to touch the general system of the bill; but it is plain to my mind that the effect of this section providing for a bond is what I have already stated. I know that bond has many conditions, among which is the enforced payment of some unpaid portion of the fee. It then provides but for a single action on that bond, which is for the recovery of the unpaid portion of the fee without any regard to the other conditions. Therefore, so far as that section is concerned, there is no right of action to the United States on that bond except to collect the unpaid portion of the fee.

But, Mr. President, I meant to say further that it seems to me you are encumbering the licensee excessively when you compel him to give this bond with sureties, upon whose sufficiency somebody must pass, that he will obey all the laws of the District. The laws of the District can enforce themselves without his giving security. In other words, it is like binding him over in advance for a breach of the peace that has not yet occurred.

It seems to me the license system is very plain. You are to regulate a certain traffic by compelling high fees to be paid for its exercise. The best way to get those fees is to have them paid in advance. My colleague has suggested to me that it would be well to have them deposited on the filing of the petition for a license, and I see no objection to that, because, as licenses under the bill may be granted for three months, even should they reach the highest cost of a license, which is $500, for probably the largest hotel where all sorts of vinous and alcoholic drinks are sold, to require but one-fourth of that sum to be deposited upon the application of the party for a three-months' license would not be onerous. The object being revenue with other incidental results of the regulation flowing from such collection of revenue, I submit that my amendment is wholesome and reasonable, and I trust the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would suggest to my honorable friend, as his purpose is evidently to perfect the bill, that he simply move to strike out the clause in reference to suit being brought for a portion of fee that may be unpaid.

Mr. BAYARD. If my honorable friend will permit me, I would prefer to have the question on the amendment as moved by me. I object to the bond altogether. I desire to submit to the Senate that the bond itself is cumbersome, unusual, and unnecessary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I had a suspicion that my honorable friend wanted to get rid of that bond.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not care to occupy the time of the Senate. I think in settling this business we had better do it properly. It is not customary where a man is conducting a lawful business to make him give a bond with sureties to keep the peace, for that is what this bond is really intended for. If the man who pays his license fee and who is subject to your laws infracts them, you have your remedies in abundance. This bill is certainly not defective for want of penalties and means of bringing a culprit to punishment.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, upon the particular point made by the Senator from Delaware, without having considered it very much, I should say that the bond provided for by the bill is necessary to the purpose which is evidently contemplated. But I desire to call the attention of the Senate to another feature of the bill, to which I am entirely opposed. I have no doubt that the bill has been prepared with great care and skill, and that the details of it have been worked up well; but the point to which I call the attention of the Senate is that it provides for disfranchising the people of this District. I do not know how many there are, but probably one hundred and fifty thousand; more people than there are in several of the States. It takes from them the right of local self-government; it takes from them the power of considering and acting upon their own local and, so to speak, domestic affairs, and puts the government of this District in the hands of three men, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. In that respect this bill is anti-republican; it is anti-democratic; and I do not feel that I could vote for it without violating the very spirit of our institutions. Nor do I know of any necessity for this great change in the government of this District. I do not believe that the troubles of this District have arisen by reason of suffrage. I do not believe that it is in consequence of the right of suffrage or of the voting that troubles have come upon this District.

We believe, Mr. President, in local self-government. It is just as important here as it is in the city of New York or Philadelphia, or in any Territory; just as important as it is in any State. It seems to me that when we undertake to disfranchise one hundred and fifty thousand people we are taking a step backward, and I know what will be said about it. Although it may not have entered into the purpose of the framers of this bill, I know what will be said about it—that it is intended to get clear of colored suffrage. In this District where it was first established it is to be first stricken down. I understand that there are many people in this District who are willing to be disfranchised for the purpose of getting clear of the colored vote, who have always been opposed to the colored vote, and are to-day.

The argument of my distinguished friend from Maine is that this District was placed by the Constitution under the exclusive control of Congress. I do not think that that provision of the Constitution bears him out in the length and breadth of his argument. This District is no more under the exclusive control of Congress, to be exercised by Congress itself, than the Territories are. Our control over the Territories is as absolute in every particular as it can be over this District. I know that the doctrine of squatter sovereignty was contended for at one time, but I believe it was finally admitted that it had no hold in the Constitution, and that the right of the Territories technically depended upon the grant of power by Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question, if I do not interrupt him?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would like to ask the Senator, in connection with what he is saying, whether the language of the Constitution of the United States, in his opinion, has any other or different meaning than that of giving sovereignty to Congress in this District of the same quality and character as exists in each one of the States in the governing power there?

Mr. MORTON. If I understand the question of the distinguished Senator, I suppose it has not. I suppose it means just that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what I think..

Mr. MORTON. I was going to comment on that language a little. The power of Congress is—

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States.

The word "exclusive" there means that it shall be entirely taken from the States which cede it; that the States ceding it shall lose all control over it; that it shall be exclusively in Congress, so far as the States ceding this District are concerned; but it never meant that all legislative power or all government should be directly exercised by Congress. From the very first this city has had a government given to it by Congress with greater or less powers, being changed from time to time. It has never been understood in the sense now contended for. The exclusive power took it out entirely from the control of the States; they had no more to do with it; but Congress might govern this District just as it governed a Territory. It might govern it by regents or commissioners, or it might govern it by the whole people. If Congress has authority to depute this power to three men, it has power to depute it to all this people. Where is the difference in principle? If Congress can depute these powers to three commissioners or regents, it can depute them to all people of this District, to be exercised by them in a mode pointed out. There is no difference in principle. If the power may be deputed at all, it may as well be deputed to the whole people of the District as to fifty men or three men.

The provisions of the Constitution in regard to the government of the Territories reads in this way:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

This authority to "make all needful rules and regulations" gives to Congress complete and absolute power over the Territories; and yet from the first that power has been deputed to the people of the Territories. From the very first they have had a territorial government derived from an act of Congress, and it was never supposed that we were violating the Constitution when we deputed the local self-government of the Territories in their domestic affairs to the people themselves through the form of a territorial Legislature, Congress of course always reserving the power to overrule the action of that Legislature. And so with regard to the people of this District; they are Americans; they have the same natural rights with other people of the United States. If there be any advantage in local self-government, they are entitled to it just as much as the people of Indiana or of any Territory are entitled to it; and I know not upon what principle we can justify this departure.

Therefore, Mr. President, taking it for granted that the committee who have bestowed so much labor on this bill have prepared all its details properly, I shall, at the proper time, offer an amendment to provide for the election of these commissioners instead of their appointment by the President. That is all I desire to say now.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, I believe the proposition before the Senate is to strike out that part of section 46 which relates to the bond given by persons who obtain licenses; but as my honorable friend from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] has discussed another topic which is legitimate in the bill, I will take occasion to make a remark or two in reply to his argument, not to be extended at all. I do not suppose that my honorable friend will contend that the language of the Constitution which gives the Congress of the United States the power "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever" over this District, and the language which authorizes the Congress of the United States to make rules and regulations in regard to the disposition of the territory are equivalent terms; that the latter is coexistent in its meaning and purport with the former. "Exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever." Is there anything beyond that in the way of legislation? Is it possible that any legislative power can spring up in this District outside of that? I fancy not. Will anybody undertake to say that a provision in the Constitution which authorizes the Congress of the United States to make rules and regulations in regard to the Territories is equivalent to that? Does the language, "rules and regulations," exclude all possibility of legislative authority in a Territory? That is precisely what we here authorize these men to do who have no legislative power whatever. We authorize them to make ordinances, rules, and regulations, for the regulation of this Territory, but that is not legislation at all; and if it were, it is not exclusive. My proposition yesterday was that this bill violates in no sense the true principle of local self-government. There never was intended to be any local government here independent of Congress, and until you change the Constitution no local government is possible. And what have the Supreme Court of the United States said about this power? They have said authoritatively that every act of a legislative character in this District, whether it is done by Congress directly or by a deputed authority, is in its nature necessarily national. Does my honorable friend believe that a local authority can be made here that will do an act which is local? What does that arise from? It arises from the fact that Congress is supreme and its authority exclusive, and therefore no local act can be done; and on that theory is it possible to conceive, legislating as we do here for the government of this District, that we can violate a local right, a local authority? None does exist, and in the nature of the case none ever can exist—I mean under the Constitution as it is. That is the theory on which we go. Why, Mr. President, if the Senator be correct, we have violated this principle without knowing it. Unconsciously and unwittingly we have been violating this principle of local government ever since we were a government in the first place. For the first few years, down to 1807, there never was any authority here except through commissioners; our power was absolute and unqualified. Did anybody ever dream that that was a violation of the rights of the people here? Nobody complained of it that I ever heard of, and certainly the decisions of the courts have all been in favor of it.

Mr. President, there is only one consideration about this, and that is a question of expediency. It has not been decided by the courts whether we can depute legislative authority to the District, and I am one of those who have very great doubt whether it is possible for the Congress of the United States to do any such thing. Exclusive legislative jurisdiction being given us, I doubt exceedingly whether it can be delegated. But suppose it could be, is it expedient to delegate it? That is the question. I deny that it is necessary. I deny altogether that the rights of the people of this District will be violated unless we do it, and I doubt exceedingly whether we do not violate the Constitution if we undertake to do it. But more particularly, Mr. President, upon another point I am clear and settled, and that is, that it is not expedient to do it. It is not at all expedient to do it, and any Senator who is conversant with the history of the past in regard to deputed authority and the exercise of deputed authority in this District I think must agree with me. What was this city in 1860? What had been the administration of local authority up to that time?

Mr. MORTON. Will my friend allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Maine, who doubts the power of Congress to depute authority, I want to suggest to him that this bill does provide for deputing legislative authority to three regents; it recognizes the deputation of power clearly and distinctly; and I will read a part of one section that shows it.

That the authority of making, amending, abrogating, and promulgating ordinances—

What is an ordinance? An ordinance is a law; that is what it is. Laws passed by city authorities are generally called ordinances, but they are to that city law, and they are made by legislative authority—shall belong exclusively to said regents, and they may exercise the same, in aid of the powers hereby conferred, to check vice and immorality and to enforce obedience to this act, but always consistent herewith, as they shall deem best for the public welfare.

In other words, this act is the constitution of the District, and legislative power is conferred upon these three regents within the purview of this act or constitution.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The answer to that, Mr. President, is to repeat what I said yesterday, that no legislative authority is granted to these persons. Their powers are strictly limited and defined, and they act all the time within the statutes of the Congress of the United States. They make ordinances, rules, and regulations for the execution of their duties; that is all. It is in no enlarged sense and in no general sense, in which we are speaking, legislation; it is simply the power to make rules and regulations.

I was observing, Mr. President, that there can be no question in this case save only that of expediency, and the question is whether it is expedient to repeat the past. Do we want to go back to the levy court, that anomalous jurisdiction? Do we want to go back to the old cities? Any of us who recollect what this District was under the jurisdiction of the former cities, how inadequate, how insufficient that system was, how this great capital of ours, which ought to be the pride of a great people, was neglected in these aspects which it was expected to present by those who planned and designed this capital city, will not want to return to the old system. Why, Mr. President, compared with all the capitals in the country, compared with all the considerable cities in this counry, this capital city of the nation under the administration of the old city governments in the District—I will not say was shameless, but it was below mediocrity. That was the condition of this great capital of a great people under that administration. Do we want to go back to that? Does anybody desire to go back to that? Nobody desires it or expects it.

Then, do we want to repeat the history of the last three or four years? I am not here to asperse the administration of the last three or four years. A great deal of good was done in that time; a great achievement was accomplished. This city was lifted out of a reproachful condition of things, and has been made, in many respects, a most admirable city, and there is great credit due to the enterprising gentlemen who were connected with that achievement. But the experiment was unhappily too ambitious and too expensive for repetition. We cannot afford to repeat that. This committee came to the conclusion, upon the most careful examination of the whole thing, that the only safe course to adopt was for the Congress of the United States to exercise that jurisdiction which it has to discharge; in other words, that sacred trust which is devolved upon it, to make this capital worthy of the people of this country; and in no other way consistent with an economical expenditure of money do I believe this thing can be done.

Now, Mr. President, let us return for a moment to the question under consideration, and that is the motion of the Senator from Delaware to strike out certain words which provide for a bond. That is substantially the proposition of my honorable friend from Delaware, to require the license fees to be paid in advance and then to dispense with the bond altogether. Sir, did ever anybody hear of a license having been granted to deal in intoxicating drinks that was not accompanied by a bond? What guarantee or what surety will the public have that when this fee is paid such rules and regulations will be observed in regard to the transaction of that business of the sale of liquor as the public interests require? I do not think there was ever an instance in legislation where a license system having any regard to the public interests was in force where a bond was not required.

Mr. PRATT. While my honorable friend is upon that point, I should be glad if he would refer the Senate to that portion of the bill which contains the conditions of the bond. I have not been able to find it.

Mr. MORRILL of Maine. I was just about to refer to that. That bond, my honorable friend will notice, is faithfully to observe the conditions of the license. Now, if you will turn to page 93 you will see what the conditions of the license are, what is to be observed. First, they are classified. Certain business is to be licensed for which no fee is chargeable. Secondly come wine and beer licenses; and thirdly liquor licenses. "Under the first class shall be embraced all licenses not embraced under the definition of either kind of the other two classes," and then it goes on to enumerate. Then follows what shall be done and what shall not be done by persons licensed, running over not many sections but many paragraphs, running down to and including page 97. All that relates to the conditions to be observed by these licenses. Those provisions are all with reference to the conduct of the persons licensed—what hours shall be observed, what persons shall be allowed to sell, and all that. I hope it is not the sense of the Senate by any means to allow the retailing of ardent spirits to be unrestricted and unconditional in this District. I therefore trust that the amendment of my honorable friend from Delaware will not prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I suppose in the course of debate in this body it is perfectly proper for the honorable Senator from Indiana, in discussing a proposition to amend the section giving a right of action upon a certain bond, to introduce the more fundamental question of the whole bill and its principle, which is simply to destroy the franchise of suffrage in toto and substitute the will of Congress exclusively to legislate upon the affairs of this District. Now, I have not the least doubt but that Congress have, if words have any meaning, exclusive power of legislation in all cases over this District. I do not think any words can be plainer in the Constitution than those by which this power is delegated, and therefore I apprehend that Congress may in their discretion confide this power of voting to as many as they please of the citizens or leave it with none of the citizens. That is a question of law. And I also have not the least doubt, as a question of fact, that negro suffrage has been a very sickening business to the unhappy people of this District and to those who brought it here; and I have no doubt that as a matter of fact this bill seeks to accomplish the complete abandonment of that most absurd attempt to govern this District through the instrumentality of its most ignorant and degraded classes. There is no doubt about that; and I propose hereafter that that question shall be more fully discussed, but not at a time when we are considering this little matter of the bond which it is proposed shall be given before licenses shall be granted to those who propose to embark in the business of the sale of fermented and spirituous liquors.

But, Mr. President, the honorable Senator who has this bill in charge has now had his attention drawn to the fact that the language of the section to which I have adverted does not embrace the power over this subject which he desires. It is a familiar rule of legal construction that the expression of one thing shall be taken to exclude the existence of another; and where, as in this case, you have given the right of action exclusively for breach of one condition of a bond, you exclude the right of action for other breaches.

He now proposes, as I understand, to supplement that difficulty and to give a right of action in favor of the United States Government in every case where such a bond is given for every breach of every condition of the bond. That only makes the case so much the worse, because it then embraces breaches of conditions which in my mind are utterly un-American, not to say anti-republican. Here, for instance, is one of the conditions of the bond proposed to be taken under section 46 before a license for the sale of fermented or spirituous liquors shall be granted, that "for faithfully observing the conditions of the license, the provisions of this act, and the ordinances adopted thereunder." As I pointed out, when it comes to giving a remedy it is confined to a suit for the unpaid portion of the license fee, and no right of action is given for any other breach.

Now, what are the conditions, and what provisions is this bond to be answerable for? By section 52 it is provided—

> That every person who shall be injured or damaged in person or property by any intoxicated person in said District, or in consequence, in whole or part, of the intoxication, habitual or otherwise, of any person therein, shall have a joint and several right of action, and may maintain the same for the recovery of said damage and compensation for said injury, in the supreme court of said District, in his or her name, (or in the name of any parent, guardian, or person having the care of any minor, for the benefit of said minor, or in the name of the next friend of any wife, for such wife,) against any person or any number of persons who shall, by selling or giving away or aiding or encouraging to be drank any said article, (for which a license and license fee are herein required for the sale of the same,) cause or contribute to cause the intoxication, in whole or part, of such person causing or contributing to such injury or damages. And every person, in whole or part, owning or renting or permitting the occupation of any building or premises for the sale of such article, or having knowledge that such article is to be or is being sold or habitually drank therein, shall be liable, jointly and severally, with any other person in this section made liable, in the same or different suits, for said compensation and damages, which may be exemplary. And any sums recovered in any such suit for the benefit of any wife or minor shall be paid over to such wife or to such wife's next friend, or to the parent or guardian of such minor, on such security or conditions as the practice of the court or its order, made to protect such wife or minor, shall reasonably provide.

Now, Mr. President, if there be a more utterly unjust, unreasonable, and abominable provision of law than this, which holds one man liable for an act or a result to which he has not knowingly contributed, I am not aware of it. It is that the owner or tenant of property where beer, or wine, or liquor is sold to a man who is not an habitual drunkard shall be held answerable if that man shall take one drink in his house, and afterward drinking in another place shall thereby become intoxicated, and, being intoxicated, shall commit some outrage upon the person or property of a stranger! Why, sir, the idea is perfectly monstrous to my mind. It seems to have been begotten in the very heyday of this acrid Puritanism in politics. I do not know that such a law would be sustained by a court. It seems to me that it is in conflict with the laws of natural justice; it seems to me to be in conflict with the very spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution of the United States; and yet it would be impossible, in the short time that I have had to examine this measure, properly to illustrate the extravagance of the injustice it contemplates and involves. Why, sir, it would amount to this: that a responsible and respectable vendor in the best hotel in the city of Washington, carrying on the lawful and commendable business of the entertainment of travelers, could be made the victim of some scoundrel who would induce some worthless fellow to take one drink at the bar of that hotel, and then commit some act of outrage by setting fire to a barn, and immediately the proprietor of that hotel would be held answerable in a court of law for damages at the suit of the owner of that barn because the scoundrel who burned it had managed to get a drink on his premises at some time on that day.

There is not only no time but there is no necessity for illustrating further the mischievous capacities of such a law; and yet it is against such a condition as that that a man is called upon to give bond! I mentioned at first that the bond was simply a cumbersome condition, precedent to the granting of a license to carry on a traffic, and that therefore it was better to make the whole fee for the license payable in advance and even at the time the petition was filed for its being granted. That would secure the revenue.

But I am inclined to believe the great trouble of this bill and of bills similar to it is this: It is an attempt to invade the domain of morals under the forms of legislation; it is an endeavor to invade the social habits of men under the form of revenue acts. This is a bill for revenue and police purposes, and there is no question that the proper regulation of a traffic of this kind is essential for the proper police control of a community. It is the right of the community, I doubt not, to protect itself; and as this community has no powers of self-government, it is the right and duty of Congress to protect the community; and I doubt not there will be a very variant opinions in this body, composed as it is of gentlemen from all sections of the country, brought up under very different influences, and looking at law and government with very different eyes. I know that in the State which is so ably represented by my honorable friend who has charge of this bill they believe it right, expedient, and wise to pass laws absolutely prohibitory of the sale or traffic in intoxicating drinks. The results of that legislation are to a greater or less degree before the country, and that the friends of prohibition claim certain beneficial results, and those who believe that "prohibition does not prohibit" and that it is anything in the world but a wholesome agent of that most desirable virtue, temperance, believe that it absolutely increases intemperance and that vice and immorality follow the track of these prohibitory laws and not the moral improvement and advancement of the people. I have seen a statement made by a zealous advocate of these so-called temperance laws, that in one town of fifteen thousand inhabitants, in the State of Maine, there were three hundred places where intoxicating drinks were sold, and yet by law no liquor could be lawfully sold in that town nor anywhere within the borders of that State.

I do not propose, however, to discuss the broad question of the wisdom or expediency of laws of total prohibition. That is not the question. I merely refer to it to show how diverse will be the councils, how different will be the views of gentlemen coming from different parts of the country, where the habits and social customs differ widely as we know.

JURIES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the permission of my friend from Delaware and my friend from Maine, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may be discharged from the consideration of the bill (S. No. 974) to enable the supreme court of the District of Columbia to proceed with its jury business, and that we may pass the bill now.

It is of course known to all Senators that under a recent decision of the general term of that court the grand and petit jurors have been brought into great doubt in respect to the legality of their summoning, and I am advised by the judges that they cannot safely proceed with the trial of persons now in jail and on bail until some steps shall have been taken.

This bill which I ask that the committee may be discharged from the consideration of was, with a view to this emergency, considered the other day in advance by the committee, so that this motion is equivalent to a report. My attention has been again called to-day to the fact that the judges are unable to take any step with safety, and I therefore ask that this action be taken now, which is merely a temporary provision for getting on with the grand jury until the 1st of February, when, under the existing law, fresh drawings of panels may be had.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the consideration of the bill (S. No. 974) to enable the supreme court of the District of Columbia to proceed with its jury business, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that until the 1st day of February, 1875, it shall be lawful for the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in its various terms, to cause to be drawn by lot and impaneled from time to time the proper number of persons for grand and petit jurors from those whose names are now deposited with the clerk of the court as jurors of the District of Columbia, selected by the persons designated to select jurors in that District; and such panels so drawn and constituted shall be deemed and held to be valid and legal but nothing herein is to be construed to impair the right of challenge to individual jurors, as now existing by law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state for the information of the Senate that the defect supposed to exist in the composition of the general panel of five hundred and twenty jurors in the general box is in substance merely technical; that is to say, the persons who put the names in put in by accident or mistake, as it is said, (and I have no reason to suppose that it was otherwise,) the names of men who were not eligible as jurors, above the required age, some of them not property-holders, and things of that kind; so that in drawing out fifty jurors it would happen under the ordinary law of chances that there would be some one drawn who did not possess the jury qualifications. The supreme court in its general term has held that that put in great doubt, and I believe they held that it absolutely vitiated, the whole panel. This bill enables them to continue to draw from that box for the time being until by law the general renewal of the box in February comes around; but if any one does come out who has not the proper qualification the right of individual challenge is preserved, so that they may get a jury conformable to law out of this box for the time being.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MINING LAW.

Mr. HAMLIN. With the consent of the Senator from Delaware, I ask the Senate now to take up the bill which I reported this morning, as I have prepared an amendment to make it conform to the section referred to in the Revised Statutes. It will only take a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2032) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872.

Mr. HAMLIN. In the third line I move to strike out the words "the fifth section of said act" and insert "section 2324 of the Revised Statutes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the development of the mining resources of the United States."

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, there are other provisions of this clause upon which I was commenting, which enter into the conditions of the bond which is proposed to be given, which to my mind are exceedingly inquisitorial and objectionable. By the forty-eighth section it is provided that—

> The members of said board, its secretary, and any person expressly authorized by the board, shall be allowed at all times to freely inspect any place or premises licensed, or that may be the proper subject of a license hereunder, and also any article hereinafter mentioned, which may be kept or found at such place. And any member of said board, or person by it authorized, may at any time inspect any place licensed or that requires a license, and whatever is sold or kept for sale or to give away thereat.

That is another condition which this bond is given to answer. Now, what does it mean? That anybody authorized by this board of excise shall be allowed at all times freely to inspect any place or premises where a license has been granted to the proprietor, and to inspect "whatever is sold or kept for sale or to give away thereat." There is under this provision no qualification, no restraint as to time. The hour of midnight, the early dawn, the broad sunlight, any time, may be selected. The hour when the proprietor may have retired with his family to rest is liable to invasion at the call of any of these inquisitors, whether they may be members of the board or its secretary or persons appointed by the board. No privacy can remain under the provisions of this act to the man who is unwise enough to apply for a license and obtains it in this District. There is no portion of his premises which is reserved from intrusion by day or by night. There is no hour of the day or night that any portion of his premises may not be invaded. It is a law that opens to malice, that opens to impertinence, that opens to hostility, the widest door to enter for the annoyance and injury of one man by another. It is the accursed business of personal inspection—the minding other people's business—which is encouraged by this bill, and which, it seems to me, lies at the root of so much of litigation in this country already, and which, so far from producing good feeling between men, produces nothing but ill feeling, and so far from curing evils simply makes them more secret so that they cannot be discovered and amended. Sir, the remedy is worse than the disease.

Mr. President, if I speak warmly on this subject, it is because in my soul I do detest and abhor this system of the inspection of my neighbor's social affairs and habits, and because I cannot contemplate here at this capital of the nation the enactment into law of provisions so utterly hostile to what I believe to be good government, good morals, and the welfare of the people, that I make the opposition I do to this feature of the measure before us.

Now, sir, it may be said that this bond is after all for a small sum, and that therefore it limits the obligation of those who become parties to it to the amount which is stated as its penalty. The act has omitted to state a penalty, and therefore I presume that the amount recoverable would be the value of the license petitioned for. It is not a matter, therefore, of any great value pecuniarily; for, as I said before, that can be best secured by making it payable in advance; and when a man has paid in advance, it would become very questionable in a court of law whether any other right of action would remain, and whether, having complied with the chief object of the bond, which was to pay the license fee in order to engage in the business, that would not be considered a performance of the obligation which would relieve him from any other and further payment. I am inclined to think it would; but whether it would or would not, it seems to me that this bond is cumbersome, expensive, and useless, so far as revenue is concerned, and when it comes to binding men to the performance of these other conditions which I have referred to, the objections to it are greatly increased.

Therefore I shall renew my motion that this portion of section 46 which is to be found at page 90, from line 11 unto line 31, shall be stricken out and in lieu thereof the following words inserted:

> All fees shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States in advance, and said board may provide a proper form of application to be filed with its secretary for all licenses, and prepare and use a seal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. As the Senate is about to divide on this question, I will make a single observation in reply to what has fallen from the Senator from Delaware. He seems to think that there is something very peculiar and exceptional in these provisions. On the contrary, there is nothing in this bill that is not common to all license laws so far as I know or believe, and the granting of a license without a bond I think would be an extraordinary performance.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Mr. President, this is not a very material question in this bill, and does not affect what I consider its vital character. If I understand the force of the amendment, it is simply to strike out the requirement of a bond. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Maine, my colleague on the committee, was not adopted, which was to make this bond refer to the subsequent provisions of the bill. The bond now refers alone to the fees imposed by this act, and has no reference to the subsequent provisions. You could not maintain an action on this bond for the violation of any of the subsequent provisions of this act. In the remarks submitted by the honorable Senator from Delaware he referred to the subsequent provisions of the bill—I do not remember the page—making the landlord responsible for selling to intoxicated people, and also the property-owner. Under this clause the securities would not be responsible for the violation of either of those sections of the law as it now stands. On the contrary, the person injured would only have redress against the seller or against the person owning the property upon which the sale was made. I prefer infinitely that the payment of this license fee should be in advance, but the bill was drawn in favor of leniency. The section provides for heavy license fees, from $50 to $500, and it was thought that some persons would not be able to pay as much without having some degree of credit or stay. I live in a State where all licenses are required to be paid in advance, and no bond is required to be given for the failure to comply with any provision of a license; but the individual is responsible to the criminal provisions of the law. If he violates any part of his license he is responsible in fine and imprisonment, but there is no bond required in my State for failure to comply with any provisions of any license law, and every license must be paid in advance. Therefore my natural inclinations would be that all licenses here should be paid in advance. If that be required, this bond is of no consequence, unless it applies to the subsequent provisions of this bill. I think it not a very material matter; this has reference to the police regulations imposed by this bill. Unless this bond is extended to subsequent provisions it amounts to nothing.

Of course there must be some compromise in these matters, for there is a great ferment all over the country in regard to the sale of liquors to people who become intoxicated and who cannot use them with propriety or discretion. There is a great contrariety of opinion everywhere, and there is a strong sentiment prevailing over a large portion of the country, for instance in Ohio and in my neighboring State, West Virginia. I suppose this is probably a copy of the West Virginia law. I do not know that the property-holder there is responsible.

Mr. DAVIS. In certain cases he is.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I thought there the seller alone was responsible for damages; but in certain cases, as I am told, the property-holder is responsible even by the West Virginia law. Personally I am opposed to a law of that kind. I do not like it. I am in favor of proper police regulations about the sale of liquor. I am in favor of a license fee of a proper amount and a considerable amount for the enjoyment of this privilege, and the persons licensed should be placed under proper police regulations and be punished by fine and imprisonment for their violation; but to go beyond that and hold the owner of the property for the time being, and the innocent holder of property in all probability, responsible for what may be done by individuals, would hardly seem to be right. It is not right, in my judgment, and therefore, so far as that part of the bill is concerned which makes the property-holder responsible, I shall vote to strike it out. Unless this bond has reference to that provision, the bond is of no consequence; and therefore if the fees be made payable in advance the bond is of no consequence, and it is not material, in my judgment, one way or the other, unless it is so made.

My honorable friend from Maine suggests that the bill be amended so as to make the bond apply to those two provisions. It does not do so now. The bond is only suable to recover the fees or parts of fees that remain unpaid. If they are paid in advance the bond is of no consequence; and unless it be extended to the other provisions of the bill it is of no consequence. Then it is of consequence; and until that is done I suggest to the Senator from Delaware whether a bond would be proper in the premises, and whether we may not as well strike out of the bill those two clauses to which he referred, in respect to holding the landlord and the proprietor's property responsible for damages for the sale of liquor to improper persons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONOVER. I move to strike out on page 19 sections 11, 12, and 13, relating to the board of health, and to insert in lieu thereof the following words:

That the board of health of the District of Columbia shall remain as now constituted under the provisions of section 26 of an act to provide a government for the District of Columbia, approved February 21, 1871, and that the President of the United States is hereby empowered, when vacancies shall occur therein from death, resignation, or otherwise, to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a successor or successors thereto; and the members of said board of health shall be subject to the provisions of section 4 of this act; and said board shall perform and discharge all the duties imposed by said twenty-sixth section of the act approved February 21, 1871, and shall discharge such other and additional duties as the board of commissioners may enjoin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I had some explanation given to me of an amendment similar to that which has been offered, by a party conversant with the operations of the present board of health in the District. I am not competent to judge of the work performed by the present board of health, and I do not propose to submit them to an ignorant criticism; but I have some knowledge of the scale of compensation which the people of this District, or the people of the United States, are called upon to pay for the services of this board of health. The salaries paid to the officers of the board, including the five members of the board, and the sum of $3,000 paid to the apothecaries for medicines for the board, amount to $37,140. On looking at this report I find that some $55,000 additional is reported as part of the expenses of the board, and I cannot discover from the examination I have been able to bestow that this $55,000 embrace any considerable portion of the $37,140. I do not think I am in error as to that. I take the tables accompanying the report of the auditing committee, to be found on page 72 and from that to page 76 of the report of this board of health made at the present session of Congress, and it does seem that for a community embracing in all 134,000 people upward of $85,000 for the operations of the board of health is rather a severe item. It may be that I have been accustomed to live among a very simple and economical people, who pay, however, their own debts in full and are enabled to do so only by economy and industry—two qualities which, it seems to me, have not been very closely observed in the District of Columbia, or certainly not by those who have governed it of late years.

I understand that one merit of the present bill is that the expensiveness of this system is greatly reduced. I showed these figures to the honorable chairman of the committee who reported the bill, and understood from him that one merit of the present measure was that it largely cut down these gross expenses. I live in a town of about forty thousand inhabitants, reasonably well governed, and with a board of health who I believe fairly perform their duties, and I do not believe the expenses of that board of health exceed $2,500 in a year, and I am sure that it will compare favorably with the city of Washington on the score of health or on general management to promote health.

I mention this because it is part of the whole system of this District to which the eyes of the American people have been turned rather closely within the last year or so, and as we are proposing now a system of reformation of affairs here, and this bill has been reported in response to a demand for something nearer decent government than has been known here for the last few years, I think that the question of economy in regard to this expenditure is one that the Senate should consider and respect.

If this amendment be adopted, I shall be disposed then to move a further amendment, for I think 50 per cent. of the amount that has been paid for these services would be quite sufficient as a proper remuneration.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hardly think, if the Senate understand this proposition, they will entertain it for a moment. The powers of the health board were found to be of a very uncertain and ill-defined character. They had large powers in certain directions and very large discretion, but they had no co-operative powers. They might, for instance, declare that a nuisance should be abated, but they had no authority to call upon the board of police or anybody else to help do it. What has been attempted here is not to abolish the board of health, but to regulate and define its powers and make it more efficient. That is all.

I hope that no attempt will be made to restore the old board as it is. I do not speak of the personnel of it at all, but I mean to say that I hope there will be no attempt in the Senate to continue the board as it exists at the present time. This bill has no reference to the personnel of the board at all, but it provides limits and defines their powers with the view of making them more efficient and working within certain well-defined and settled principles, whereas the present system is indefinite.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand the effect of this amendment is to continue in existence the present board of health, and I suppose to continue them at the same rate that they are now paid. That of itself is a sufficient objection to this amendment. By the report of the board of health, it appears that there is now paid to the members and officers of that board $37,000 in salaries alone, and the other expenses of the board of health make the expenditures of that department of this city government amount to over $80,000.

Now, sir, I live in a State where we pay some attention to economy, and I hold in my hand from the State treasurer of my State a statement of the entire expenses of our State government, including the salaries of all executive and judicial officers as well as the expenses of the legislative department of the government. Sir, the whole expenses of the government of the State in which I live do not amount to more than $33,000 a year. The salaries of our governor and of all our executive officers and of our judiciary, and the per diem of the members of the Legislature and the allowances made to the Legislature, do not amount to as much as the salaries paid to this board of health year by year. How could I vote to continue this board of health, and go back to my people and say "I have done my duty?" I must insist that economy in this District should be something in proportion to what we practice in our own State, or I cannot justify myself before my constituents for the votes I give.

I do say, sir, that the people of this District and the people of the country have a right to complain of the extravagance that has been practiced under the District government. We ought now, that the matter is before us, to see to it that the tax-payers of this District are not longer taxed exorbitantly for defraying extravagant expenses in this District. In my opinion $10,000 ought to pay the expenses of a board of health in this city; at any rate $20,000 would be a liberal amount for the purposes of a board of health.

Let us see to it then, Mr. President, in forming a government for this District, that we bring it down to the strictest rules of economy. For one I shall not vote to continue the board of health in existence with the present enormous salaries which its members and officers draw. So far as the members of the board are concerned, I am perfectly willing that they shall be members of the board of health that may be created under this bill; but I am not willing to continue them in office at the enormous and extravagant rates which they are paid for the services which they render.

Mr. MORTON. I am advised that the death rate in this city is lower than it is in any city in the United States, and I believe this board of health has been distinguished for its ability and for its devotion to its business and for its success. If Senators think there is too much paid for it here, that is another question; but if this board has been eminently successful, it seems to me we ought to consider well before we interfere with it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 19, chapter 3, line 8, of section 11, I move, after the words "shall be" to insert the words "learned in." It now reads, "shall be a lawyer." I propose to strike out the words "a lawyer" and insert "learned in the law."

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he also have the same amendment made in the first line of the twelfth section.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will have that amendment made wherever the word occurs. I believe it does not occur in any other place.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is all.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let the amendment apply to wherever that phrase occurs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question will be put on the amendment in that form.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. I do not propose to move an amendment, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to one clause of the eleventh section. It provides that one of the medical gentlemen who are to be on the board of health is to be appointed on the recommendation of Surgeon-General of the Army. Why is his intervention called for in the appointment of one and not of both?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is no special reason for that, except that the Surgeon-General of the Army is presumed to be always here, and the presumption is that his acquaintance with medical men would enable him to propose a suitable person. There is no other reason.

Mr. HOWE. It occurs to me that that might be a very good reason for giving him the appointment of both.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Not the appointment; it only gives him the right to nominate.

Mr. HOWE. But it commands that the commissioners shall appoint the very individual that he nominates, which would seem to be equivalent to selecting or appointing himself. If it is essential that he shall be consulted in reference to the selection of one, it occurs to me that he should be consulted in reference to the selection of both. I do not know but that there may be a very good reason for this. I do not know but that there may be a very good reason for requiring him to serve as a member of the board of health. This occurs to me, however, that somebody should be responsible for these selections. You would infer from the general terms employed that it was intended to make the commission responsible for the appointment of three members of the board, but they are not responsible, and they cannot be responsible, if they are required to act upon the nomination of anybody else.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend will see that they are not required to act upon that.

Mr. HOWE. Then I am mistaken.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My recollection is (if it is allowable for me to say anything in regard to what took place in committee) that the point was whether we would not detail an Army officer, as in the instance of the board of public works. The head of the board of public works, we have provided, shall be detailed by the President from the officers of the Engineer Corps. This question arose in that way; why not detail an Army surgeon here? On the whole we said, the object being efficiency and to get somebody resident here who might be relied upon, we would allow the Surgeon-General to propose a name for appointment. I do not think it is susceptible of the interpretation that he is to be appointed necessarily.

Mr. HOWE. I would like to have my friend look at the clause and say whether that is so or not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I see by looking at the language that it is imperative. I thought it was optional.

Mr. HOWE. I take it there is no question but what the construction I put upon the language is correct.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think it is.

Mr. HOWE. No one called my attention to this, and but for the debate that arose on the previous amendment, I very likely should not have noticed it at all; but it really seems to me as if you should give this appointment to somebody or other who will be responsible for the appointment. I do not care a fig who has it, if there is any conflict of authority, but I want somebody to be responsible.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator will accomplish his purpose by striking out all after the word "one" down to and including "notwithstanding."

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir; that would do.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator makes that motion, I shall make no objection to it.

Mr. HOWE. I did not propose to move an amendment, but I will do so after hearing the intimation of the Senator from Maine. I move to strike out the words indicated.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to my friend from Wisconsin whether it would not be well to have a diversity of education embraced in the material to be used in the appointment of these members of the board of health. An Army surgeon has received undoubtedly a different education from that of those who are educated at our ordinary medical colleges. Some of them have made for long periods a study of the question of health and in various latitudes. I suggest that there will be just as much responsibility upon the Surgeon-General for the appointment as there would be upon the board of commissioners. If it is to be made on his written recommendation, then evidently the Surgeon-General will be responsible for the appointment. It seems to me that it would be better to have an Army or a Navy surgeon appointed to one of these places than to take them all from civil life.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I wish to inquire how we are considering this bill, whether section by section, or whether there is a guerrilla warfare upon it running all over, here, there, and everywhere?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The bill having been read, the question would be on its passage if there were no amendments proposed. Of course it is open to any proposition from any quarter to amend it. Those having the direction of the bill having very little to say about amendments and being content to pass it as it is, it is open to any amendments that come from any quarter, I suppose.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not say that the way we are considering it is out of order. The bill has been read and is now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But my honorable friend denominated it guerrilla warfare, and I was vindicating the Senate from that charge. The course being pursued is not extraordinary; it is ordinary.

Mr. THURMAN. I really think the bill is one of that importance that it would have been advisable that we should take it up and consider it section by section, although I do not know that there would be any advantage gained by that. There are certain leading features in the bill upon which the Senate had better decide, because if they be decided in one way it will require the remodeling of this bill. In order to bring one of these questions to the attention of the Senate and have a vote upon it whenever there is a full Senate, for I am not exactly prepared to have a vote upon it now——

Mr. MORTON. I wish to offer an amendment, and I will say to the Senator——

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator is on the great and inestimable privilege of suffrage. That is his amendment.

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir; it goes to that question.

Mr. THURMAN. I have another question which goes to the great and inestimable privilege of health, and I do not know which has precedence. At all events, as I am on my feet now and want time to consider the amendment of my friend from Indiana, I move to strike out the whole of chapter 3 of this bill, providing for a board of health.

I do not very much believe in this board of health, which costs this city $75,000 a year. I know of no city of equal population that expends any such amount for any such purpose. I know of no necessity for a board of health clothed with all the powers that the present board has been exercising and that it is proposed that the board named in this bill shall exercise. We had until the late government was overthrown really three governments in this District, to say nothing of Congress. We had a Legislature, called the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia, engaged in making laws. We had a board of public works engaged in making laws, or what amounted to laws, and laws of the most severe character, for they took the property and the money of the people. And then we had a board of health making its ordinances, which were enforced, or at least the attempt made to enforce them in the courts; so that really the people of this District could scarcely turn around or look about that they were not met in the face by some lawgiver, and who was the lawgiver that was paramount, and to whom alone they were to look, they were utterly at a loss to know. That was one of the great vices—not the greatest but one of the great vices of the old government which we overthrew. Prominent among the departments of that government was this board of health, about whose operations a very great difference of opinion exists. Some persons think that it has been a wonderful blessing to the people, that it has been a sort of trinity of Hygeias, not one Hygeia but three, and has done infinite good. Others think that it has done no good at all, and that the whole effect of it has been to advertise the gentlemen who belong to it and to expend the money appropriated for it. I do not undertake to say which of these opinions is the true one. I am not accustomed to make accusations against people without having something upon which to found them. But without regard to what is the existing board or what has been done by it, I would say that, in my judgment, in a city of one hundred thousand people there is no necessity for such a board as is provided for in this bill, with the expenditure that will be entailed by it. In the little city in which I live, nearly half as large as the city of Washington and soon to be larger than the city of Washington, when we need a board of health our common council establishes it for the time-being, and never, I think, in the history of that city has it cost the people $5,000 a year.

Here, however, we have a board of health, with appropriations to the amount of $75,000 a year and every dollar expended, ay, every farthing. I think the best thing we can do is to simplify this bill. We have had too much machinery in the government of this District already. Now let us simplify it and cut it down, and as one means of doing it I move to strike out all about this board of health.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment is not now in order The Senator from Wisconsin has an amendment pending.

Mr. HOWE. I was just rising to say that the Senator from Ohio must have misunderstood the answer of the Senator from Maine when he asked the question whether this was a guerrilla raid on the bill. He was answered in the negative and not in the affirmative. But for that misapprehension I think the Senate would not have attempted to pile up one attack on another in this way. [Laughter.] I should like this little proposition of mine disposed of before we proceed to consider the larger motion, the broader motion, of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THURMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I really did not know that he had an amendment pending.

Mr. HOWE. I thought not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is on page 20 to strike out in the eleventh section, commencing in line 22, the words: "but one of the physicians to be appointed shall be appointed on the written recommendation of the Surgeon-General of the Army, which recommendation he is directed to make, anything elsewhere to the contrary notwithstanding."

Mr. HOWE. I want to say one word in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont. I have not a word to say against the expediency of having an Army surgeon on the board of health. I am quite willing both members should be Army officers, quite willing they should be Navy surgeons. This language, if it stands, will not secure you the services of an Army surgeon. All I want is that somebody should be required to appoint these officers; that there should not be a mixed jurisdiction about it. You require the commissioners to appoint, but somebody else to select, and nobody will ever know to any certainty who after all is responsible for the individual when he gets on the board of health. If you want to require that one Army surgeon shall be on the board, say so. Then you will know who is responsible for that individual.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not think this provision is very important, but it is very plain that it is in harmony with a great many of our laws. Many of our custom-house officers have to be presented by nomination to the Secretary of the Treasury by the collector, and the Secretary of the Treasury can only appoint them when so recommended. It seems to me that it is perfectly plain that the Surgeon-General will be responsible for the appointment of one of these surgeons. I think it would be better that the Surgeon-General should be responsible for and make the appointment. Therefore I shall vote against the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to strike out this part of the bill as reported by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE.]

The question being put, a division was called for, and the ayes were 7.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is a further count insisted on?

Mr. HOWE. I will not insist on the amendment. The Senate evidently does not care enough about the question to divide upon it, and if my friend from Vermont is opposed to it there will evidently have to be a division, unless I do "give it up." [Laughter.] But I want to remind him, while I surrender the point, that the ground upon which he opposes it is not well selected. There is no analogy between this case and the case to which he referred. You cannot vest the appointment of subordinates in the custom-house in the collector of customs under the Constitution, and you dare not assume to appoint them without the advice of the collector, and so you have resorted to that shift. There is no necessity for it in this case. It is a bungling piece of legislation, not absolutely without precedent, but it is without any sort of excuse.

With these remarks I withdraw the amendment I moved.

Mr. MORTON. I offer, Mr. President, an amendment, and I will state that it is simply moved as a test question. If it is adopted it will require several other changes to be made in the phraseology of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is in section 3, to strike out, commencing in line 3, the following words:

To be severally appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be known as the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia; and the members first to be appointed shall be nominated and confirmed, respectively, to and for the terms following, in the order of their appointment, namely:

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

To be elected by the qualified voters of said District.

So as to make the section read:

There shall be at the head of said Department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, to be elected by the qualified voters of said District, &c.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, this is the point of the bill that chiefly attracted the honorable Senator from Indiana. As I said, there is very clearly the grant of power under the Federal Constitution to Congress "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States." That grant of power is one of the most unrestrained and plenary grants contained in the Constitution. Its language is unambiguous and clear, and I do not doubt that under it the Congress of the United States has the power to govern this District in any form that it chooses. It is not a State which must have a republican form of government guaranteed to it by the Federal Government; but it is a circumscribed territory, the seat of the capital of the Union, which is subject to the exclusive control, by legislation, of Congress. I take it that there is the restriction even upon such legislation, that it shall be in accordance with the letter and spirit of other provisions of the Constitution, and that while the power of Congress over the District is exclusive as to its legislation, yet that is a limited power under the grants contained in the Constitution; that there is no such thing as a grant of unlimited power to the Congress of the United States in the Constitution, and that unlimited power is hostile and foreign to the theory of the government which the founders of this nation intended to establish.

I have no doubt it is within the power of Congress to pass this bill as it is now framed, and to prevent the exercise of the privilege of suffrage by anybody within the District. I have no question about that. It becomes, therefore, a question of expediency whether the control of the local and personal affairs of the inhabitants of the District shall be decided by the votes of a certain portion of those inhabitants, to wit, those who are males and over the age of twenty-one years, that being the usual limitation upon numbers in most of the States, which I suppose is intended by the honorable Senator from Indiana to be the rule within the District so that the people who act as electors are to be male citizens of the District of the age of twenty-one years and upward.

Mr. MORTON. The qualifications now fixed by law are those to which I refer.

Mr. BAYARD. But it is a qualified suffrage that the Senator proposes; the qualification being, first, of sex, that the person shall be a male, and next age, that the voter shall be of the age of twenty-one years and upward. Beyond these he proposes no other qualifications at present, whatever he may do hereafter.

Mr. President, I have no doubt that the evils which have afflicted the people of this District are very largely, if not almost altogether, due to the exercise of suffrage by those who are unfit to exercise it. I believe that negro suffrage in the District of Columbia has been the largest contributing cause to the present debt and the bad government of this community; not the sole cause; but I believe it has been perhaps the largest contributing cause. And when Congress, represented in both branches by an overwhelming majority of the republican party, saw fit to wipe out of existence the government which was then in force and which was founded upon this universal suffrage so far as color and race are concerned, they did it intending to relieve themselves from the abuses of the franchise of suffrage by negroes. Now they know it is an evil; they know it has brought ruin on this District and a debt which this people cannot pretend to pay; and the question just is whether they will persist in a course which has proved so detrimental or whether they will get themselves out of it by taking from the white people of the District the right to have any voice in the control of their local affairs.

The responsibility for that measure rests entirely with the party of which the distinguished Senator is so conspicuously an ornament. If the evil of negro suffrage has resulted in injury to the people of this District, he and his party friends caused it; and if they have destroyed suffrage, if they have wiped it out as a motive-power in the government of this District, it is their act, and they are peculiarly and solely responsible for it. And now it is again for them to determine whether they shall again renew this system, which has been so fruitful of loss and injury morally and pecuniarily to this community, or whether they will abandon it; and I can well understand the quandary in which they find themselves placed. The committee which has reported this bill is of course, as we know, in accordance with the dominant majority of the Senate and the other House, and they have simultaneously reported a bill in either House without reserving to the local population this very important power or right or franchise of suffrage which I think I once heard the honorable Senator say was a "God-given right," the right to vote. They have taken strange liberty with that "God-given right," and here in this District they have absolutely annihilated it, so that to-day the "God-given right" of voting is not exercised by any man in the District, wise or otherwise, black or white, fit or unfit to exercise so high a franchise as I esteem the right of voting to be.

Mr. President, my sympathies in this District have been chiefly with those whose property has been taken from them under the forms of government. I am not unmindful that bad government brings its punishment to all classes, and that good government must descend with equal beneficence upon all classes, and that a good government in this District will shelter and bless the colored man as much as it does the white man, and that the evils of misgovernment will ruin the colored man in his little fortunes quite as effectually as it will his richer white neighbor. Such injuries and the blessings cannot be separated into their consequences.

Now comes the question whether, in what we know of the condition of this District, of its population, and relations of the two races and classes who inhabit it, it is for the benefit of all that you shall restore suffrage to all together, the black with the white, or whether you shall protect the black and the white against the abuses of this great power of suffrage? That is the question. What is just? What is right? Well, sir, on that subject I am disposed to consult not only my own idea of the interests of the people of this District, but I am disposed to consult their wishes. I have always believed, and believe to-day, that the great safety-valve of government in this country is the right of the people, by the peaceful process of the ballot, to vote themselves free from suffering and to avoid the repetition of error. It is that peaceful process in this country which has taken the place of violent revolutions elsewhere, and we have seen the most wonderful and, in my opinion, most beneficent illustration of that principle in the elections which took place in this country in the last fall. So it should be here. I do hope to see the day when the control of the question of suffrage in this country shall be left where the federal idea of our Union of States intended it to be left, with the communities who are to be affected for better or for worse by it. So in regard to the people of this District I would endeavor to apply the principle. I admit the constitutional power of Congress to give them the privilege of voting or not. I believe the Congress of the United States can govern this District without the forms of suffrage given to anybody or to any class; and also they can govern it through the forms of suffrage should they see fit to do so. It is therefore a matter in which I desire to consult the wishes and the interests of the people to be affected. I always have thought that if the same condition of race and class had existed in the State from which you, Mr. President, come, as did exist in the State of South Carolina and in the Southern States generally, you never would have had negro suffrage forced upon the people of this country. It was so easy for persons in your section to call upon others to bear evils which they themselves were not to suffer, that they could afford to exercise power when others, strangers to them, were to pay the penalty. I was not bred in that school which taught me to make my conscience or my will the measure of other men's. I believe in leaving the communities of this country free through local self-government, that by their sufferings they may be taught and by their advantages they may be encouraged; but that they shall not be left without means of relief when suffering has been brought upon them by malice or mistaken judgment.

In the present case here is a community of about one hundred and thirty thousand souls—two-thirds white, one-third colored people—who have been the victims of misgovernment in a dreadful degree; who as an organized community are absolutely bankrupt to-day—insolvent to-day—with more beggars and unhappy members in its society than anywhere in this broad land. No thinking man supposes but that the District of Columbia, if left unaided, must succumb under the monstrous debt which has been imposed upon it by the agents of the United States without the consent of the people who are to be affected by it. This debt has been created mainly by a board of public works, appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by this Senate, in whose selection the people who hold the property of this District had no voice whatever. The laws that enabled them to impose this debt were involuntarily enacted, so far as the people of this District were concerned.

Mr. MORTON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator says the District has been made insolvent by a board of public works appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. I ask him if that is a sound argument for disfranchising this people entirely and putting them under the control of a like board to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. BAYARD. I am not saying yet whether I am in favor of disfranchising this people entirely or not, and I am not arguing in that direction. I am endeavoring to state the proposition so that, so far as I can, the people of this country shall know the pass to which the Senator and his party have brought the people and affairs of this District. That is what I wish now to do——

Mr. ALLISON. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Four millions of this debt created by the board of public works were under an act of the Legislative Assembly which was submitted to the people of the District and nearly unanimously approved by them.

Mr. BAYARD. Then what becomes of the other $18,000,000? That was not submitted to the people.

Mr. ALLISON. Five million dollars were created by the corporations of Washington and Georgetown before this new government had an existence, making $9,000,000 in those two items.

Mr. BAYARD. Possibly I am not as familiar with the precise history of the formation of the debt of this District as the honorable Senator from Iowa, and I do not know that the exact condition of this debt can up to this time be proved in any court of justice. I say further that I shall be quite in despair of ever knowing what is the precise pecuniary condition of this District until a new system and a new order of things shall have placed men in the control of the District in whose statements the public can have confidence. I believe, however, I am correct in saying that nearly the whole of the present debt of the District was created since negro suffrage was forced upon it by the action of the republican party—the greater part, however, since suffrage by white or black has been nullified by the same party—and the citizens left dependent upon the appointees of General Grant and this Senate.

I do not desire to use harsh phrases in respect of the action of the late government of this District. When I say it was a very bad government, when I say it was a very dishonest government, I simply say what Congress almost unanimously declared when it repealed the law which gave them political existence and wiped them out. That was a confession in open court, a confession of guilt. They were so unworthy that they were not fit to be in office, and the office itself was destroyed in order to get rid of the incumbents.

But, Mr. President, that debt was created partly by the board of public works, much more than half of it by the board of public works, who were the agents of the President of the United States and the Senate of the United States, and in no sense morally or legally the agents of the people of the District. Another portion of that debt was created under the forms of law by a so-called Legislature of the District, and that Legislature in large part was elected by negro votes and was composed partly of negroes; and when their course of action was such that unfitness to carry on the government was discovered by the Congress of the United States, it commenced withdrawing power from them. The honorable Senator and his friends exhibited their distrust of the capacity of governing a State through the forms of universal suffrage where negroes were in large numbers by gradually withdrawing power from them in this District under the late territorial government. The first step after that was to create a governor, secretary, and board of public works, who should have the chief power over the finances of this District, and yet in that choice the people who had this "God-given right" of voting should have no voice whatever. So about three years ago, after this universal suffrage had been in force a very short time and these evils had become quickly apparent, Congress repealed a portion of the law and reposed this large power in appointees of the President who were to be confirmed by the Senate, and, as I say, the greater portion of the debt has been incurred since that time.

Now, we all agree—I suppose everybody agrees—that such a government as has existed for the last three years in the District shall exist here no more, and the attempt now made by the committee is to replace it by another system of government, three commissioners whose powers are described and regulated by the act under consideration. Now comes in the honorable Senator from Indiana; and, vindicating by his amendment the opinions which he has heretofore expressed of the inviolable sanctity of the right to vote, he proposes that the question of the government shall be submitted again to a vote of the people of the District at large with the qualifications to which I have adverted. Well, Mr. President, I will not vote to restore power to the government that has led to these abuses. If I become satisfied that the people of this District, the property-holders, the responsible men, the honest and worthy men of the District, by a majority, desire that this right to vote shall be returned to them, I will let them take it and use it and gain or suffer by it as the sequel shall prove. But I say here to-day that I should, in my opinion, be guilty of a breach of faith, a breach of official duty as a member of this body to the people of this District, if I voted again to bring the curse of negro suffrage upon them as a means of government. I will not do it, sir. I am clear that it has wrought them evil in the past, and I believe it would continue to afflict them in the future. I believe their fortunes, their happiness, their morals, their rights as men and citizens, are safer in the hands of three honest, upright commissioners, if they can be chosen, than they would be under men elected by the course of suffrage which we have seen has controlled the District. That is my judgment. If I shall discern that their wishes are different, that they desire again to have this question committed to them in the form the Senator from Indiana now proposes, I will join with him; but I shall not be so false to my conscientious sense of duty, to my clear perception of the facts which time has stamped upon the history of this District government, as by my vote to aid in reproducing and replacing in power (if they have ever in fact been deprived of it) that set of men who have plunged this District in debt and brought disgrace upon the name of American government.

I think the bill reported by the Senator from Maine is vastly preferable in the present condition of things in this District to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana. The accident, perhaps the emergency, of my life here has compelled me to become the owner of a residence in this District necessary for the habitation of my family. To that extent I am subjected pecuniarily to the effects of misgovernment and mismanagement here, and to that extent I have a pecuniary interest in regard to which I may say I feel a considerable degree of hopelessness. Until a different spirit shall animate the powers that control this country and that control the head of the Government, and shall change the affiliations which he seems to have had and still maintains with those who have so misgoverned and plundered the people of this District, I cannot say that I have much hope of improvement.

In what I shall do here in the way of voting, I shall be guided by a sense of what is due to the people who are to be affected by my course. If I had nothing else to judge of than the small amount of real estate I hold here, a simple dwelling-house of a very ordinary description, I should be unwilling to submit even that insignificant property to the results of the suffrage which the Senator admires so much and which he desires to replace upon the people of this District. I do not think there is a man in the Senate who would voluntarily place his property under such control. Therefore I am not willing to do by others that which I would not have them do unto me.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, unless this bill be very greatly altered I cannot vote for the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, and I wish to state in a very few words, before the Senate adjourns, why I cannot vote for it. But before I give the reasons that induce me to vote against it, I wish to notice some considerations which will have no influence whatever upon my vote, because in the view I take they may be wholly laid aside.

In the first place, in reference to the observation made by the Senator from Indiana this morning that he was in favor of home rule, I do not agree that he is more in favor of home rule than am I, or that there is any man on this floor or in this country more in favor of home rule than am I. But the question what shall be the rule in the District of Columbia is a question settled by the Constitution of the United States itself; and when the Senator says that he is in favor of home rule, if he means by that the uncontrolled and uncontrollable right of every people to manage their local affairs for themselves, then I say to him that as long as the Constitution of the United States remains what it is there can be no such home rule within the District of Columbia, for you cannot confer upon the people of this District any home rule that another Congress may not take away; and therefore an absolute, uncontrollable, unlimited right of home rule cannot, under the Constitution of the United States, exist in the District of Columbia.

The Senator is answered on that question.

Again, my friend on the left [Mr. BAYARD] says that this is to test the question of the policy or impolicy of negro suffrage. With great respect to him, I do not so consider it. I do not consider that upon the passage of this bill the question of the capacity of the colored people for suffrage is necessarily involved at all.

What is our duty? Our duty is prescribed by the Constitution of the United States. That Constitution provides that the Congress of the United States shall have power—

> To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding, ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings.

So that the power of Congress over the District of Columbia, its exclusive power of legislation, is precisely the same that it has within the precincts of Fortress Monroe or Fort Hamilton or Fort Lafayette, or any other fortress belonging to the Government; and as no man domiciled within Fortress Monroe or Fort Hamilton or Fort Lafayette is a voter or can be a voter so long as he continues an inhabitant and domiciled there, so no man here can be a voter in this District unless we see fit to confer upon him for good public reasons a right to share in the municipal government in this District. Therefore you are not depriving any man within the District of Columbia of any right guaranteed to him by the Constitution or conferred upon him by nature when you say that you will have no suffrage in this District. He stands precisely on the same footing as every man stands who is an inhabitant and domiciled within one of your forts, arsenals, or other public buildings, in reference to which this provision of the Constitution has application.

Then, Mr. President, let us see what were the reasons for this. Why was it put in the Constitution that Congress should have this exclusive jurisdiction? The reason of it is very apparent. Would it do for one moment that there should be any jurisdiction that in any possible event might conflict with that of the Federal Government in one of the fortresses of the United States? Would it be tolerated for a moment that there should be in Fort Lafayette, or Fort Hamilton, or Fort Schuyler, or Fortress Monroe, a jurisdiction different from that of the Federal Government, and that might be arrayed in hostility against it? Does not every man see at once that the thing would be preposterous? And for precisely the same reason the Constitution declares that the power of Congress to exercise legislation here shall be an exclusive power, so that by no possibility can there ever be a government in this District which shall be in hostility to the Federal Government. That was the reason of it.

Mr. MORTON. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORTON. Do I understand the Senator to deny that Congress has the power to clothe the people of this District with the right of local self-government?

Mr. THURMAN. I have already said that they have no right to it unless Congress gives them municipal power. I have not denied that Congress has power to do that.

Mr. MORTON. Congress can do it?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly, to a limited extent it can.

Mr. MORTON. That is all I ask.

Mr. THURMAN. It has been questioned, but I do not doubt that Congressmen can, to a limited extent, create municipalities here, and in the creation of those municipalities may provide for a suffrage. It has done so; I do not doubt it; but I am saying that there is no right to it. It is a matter wholly within the judgment and discretion of Congress. We are not depriving the people of this District of any right that belongs to them either by nature or by the Constitution when we prescribe such a government as in the judgment of the Congress of the United States is the proper government for the District.

Well, sir, I was going on to say, when I was interrupted by the question of the Senator from Indiana, that it was for precisely the same reason which induced the provision that the legislative power of Congress should be exclusive over the forts, arsenals, magazines, and public buildings of the country, that it is made exclusive with the District of Columbia, in order that in this District there never by any possibility may be anything having the form or semblance of government or authority that can be arrayed in hostility to the Government of the United States. That was the reason for it.

Why, sir, we have seen the municipality of Paris stronger than the French Throne. We have seen the Hotel de Ville stronger by far than the Tuileries. We have seen the municipality of Paris bring a king to the scaffold and dictate the government of that country, and dictate it in letters and characters of blood. It never was intended that the Government of the United States, especially if its seat was to be in a great city, should be at the mercy of any municipality whatever, but that its authority within that district should be absolute and without any control. And hence, sir, for the wisest of purposes the power of Congress over this District is made absolute and made exclusive; and just in proportion as this city shall grow, just in proportion as its population shall increase, just in proportion as its wealth and power shall augment, just in the same proportion does it behoove the Congress of the United States to see that it exercises absolute and unlimited control here to the full extent given by the Constitution.

There is no assault in this upon the doctrine of universal suffrage. There is no assault in this upon the doctrine of home rule. There is simply a discharge of that duty which the Constitution has imposed upon us, and not simply for this reason of safety, for it is easy enough to conceive that if this city had possessed half a million people, as in times to come it may, it might well have been in the late civil war that you, sir, would not have sat in this Hall; that the Congress would not have sat in this building; but that you would have been fugitives from the capital of your country. That might possibly have been, and it might come to pass again if you allowed a municipal government here that might array itself in hostility to the Federal Government as the municipality of Paris has again and again been arrayed to the national power in France.

Mr. President, that is not all the justification for passing just precisely such a bill for the government of this District as Congress in its wisdom shall deem fit. There is still another reason, and that is that the people of this District are not the only people interested in it. They are not the only property-holders in it. The Government itself is the largest property-holder here by far, and has an interest, therefore, as property-holder that must be protected and the protection of which is paramount. This District belongs to the people of the whole country. Ohio has as much interest in it as the people here have in it. Massachusetts has as much interest, Indiana has as much interest, every State and Territory of the country has an interest in it; and when we govern it we are not governing other people as Russia governs subject Poland, but we are governing our own territory and our own property.

For these reasons I have no fear that I shall run counter to any principle of republicanism or democracy or any public sentiment that I ought to respect when I say that if I believe this bill is better than a suffrage bill, I am bound by my duty as a Senator to vote for the bill. Whether I shall vote for it or not will depend upon what is to come hereafter—whether it shall be amended and put into such shape as ultimately to command the assent of my judgment; but upon the immediate proposition of the Senator from Indiana I cannot hesitate how I ought to vote. I will not say that a frame of government might not be constructed allowing of suffrage that would work well. My impression is that the old municipalities did very well—the old municipalities of Washington and Georgetown and the like. I think they did very well in the main; at least I thought they did so well that I voted against and strongly opposed the adoption of the late government. I voted against that in the beginning.

Mr. MORTON. Those municipal governments were based on suffrage, were they not?

Mr. THURMAN. Undoubtedly they were, and I think they operated tolerably well. There were complaints, it is true. There was never any great complaint about them until negro suffrage came, if that is what the Senator wants to get at.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator brings it down now to negro suffrage.

Mr. THURMAN. Not any such thing, and the Senator is not at all ingenuous when he says so, for I had already stated in the outset that in my judgment, whether it was white suffrage or negro suffrage, the reasons for our framing such a bill as we think ought to be framed are wholly independent of the question of suffrage. But upon the subject of negro suffrage, if the Senator wants a word, the Senator made me a convert long ago by his Richmond speech to the doctrine that it was very dangerous at least to confer suffrage upon the negroes of this country and that we ought to move slowly in that direction. But the thing has been done, and what is done, let it be.

But upon the question of negro suffrage in the States and negro suffrage in the District, did it never occur to my able friend that it stands on a wholly different foundation? What has been the great argument, almost the only argument that a statesman could comprehend, in favor of negro suffrage in the States? That it was necessary for the protection of the negroes against hostile legislation. I put it to the Senator from Indiana if that is not the truth.

It was assumed that in the States where slavery had existed the white population would entertain a feeling toward the colored people which would endanger their safety, their liberty, their rights, unless the suffrage was put into their hands for their defense; and that argument was worth in their behalf all the other arguments that were uttered ten thousand times over. It was the only real, solid argument that a statesman could comprehend or assent to. Very well, you conferred it by the fifteenth amendment; you have it in those States where there could be this hostile legislation against them. But that reason wholly fails in the District of Columbia, for you cannot have hostile legislation against them here. You cannot have it, I say, because you cannot protect them against the legislation of Congress. As long as Congress is friendly to them they need no such protection, and if you should get a Congress unfriendly to them, it can take away the right of suffrage as quick as it can oppress them. So that, in any view you can take of the case, the great reason for conferring suffrage on the colored population of this country, and which has such prodigious force when applied to the States, has absolutely no force at all when applied to the District of Columbia; and, in considering the question here in this District, you consider it precisely as you would the question of conferring suffrage upon a minor or upon a woman or an alien, or upon anybody else. You consider it simply in reference to the capacity of the person to exercise that right beneficially to the public and for the good government of the District; that is all. It is not a question of protection here. It is not a question here of defense against unjust legislation. All that vanishes in this District, and you have to take this suffrage upon the sole ground whether it is politic, whether it is wise, whether it will conduce to good government in the District to extend suffrage to the colored race. But, as I said before, really that has nothing to do, as I humbly conceive, with the question now before the Senate. The question for us is to say how shall we exercise that exclusive jurisdiction which we have the power to exercise? And here permit me to say that wherever the Constitution confers upon us a power there is a correlative duty, a duty to exercise that power when the exigency arises.

This much I wanted to say now. I repeat that I do not say that a government might not be framed for this District admitting of suffrage, and that it might not work well; but I do say that the Congress is under no obligation to inaugurate any such government if in its judgment a better government can be framed and put in operation.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and thirty-three minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 17, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the special order.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. LOWE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4041) to establish the judicial district of Oklahoma; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

MODOC WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. NESMITH. A letter of the Secretary of War, laid before the House yesterday, transmitting the claims of the States of California and Oregon and citizens thereof on account of the Modoc war, was referred to the Committee on War Claims, when it should properly have gone to the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask that the reference be so changed.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD FOR OFFICIAL REPORTERS.

Mr. LUTTRELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be instructed to inquire into the propriety of making provision to supply a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, bound, to each of the Official Reporters of debates of this House.

RECEPTION OF KING KALAKAUA.

Mr. ORTH. The joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, appointed to take measures for the proper notice of the presence at the capital of His Majesty Kalakaua, King of the Hawaiian Islands, have directed me to submit the following:

The Senate and House of Representatives will receive the King of the Hawaiian Islands in the Hall of the House of Representatives to-morrow at fifteen minutes after twelve o'clock. The Vice-President and the Speaker will preside. Senator CAMERON, chairman of the joint committee, will present the King, and the Speaker will welcome him. The southeast gallery will be reserved for the families of the President, Vice-President, members of the Cabinet, Senators, and members of the House. The diplomatic gallery will be reserved for the diplomatic corps exclusively. The other galleries, except the reporters' gallery, will be open to the public.

Mr. SPEAKER. I move the adoption of this report; and I ask that the Senate be notified of our action, and that seats be provided for the Senators on the right of the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the adoption of the report. Seats will be provided for Senators as indicated by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. COBURN. I desire to inquire what committee will regularly be on call, if the call of committees should proceed.

The SPEAKER. The call would begin with the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COBURN. I hope we shall have the morning hour. A great many committees have reports to make; and we ought to have our morning hour regularly, instead of postponing that business.

Mr. GARFIELD. Several committees are not quite ready. I think we shall really gain time by going on with the appropriation bill and letting the reports of committees come in when they are ready; otherwise I would not antagonize the regular morning hour.

Mr. COBURN. I would like to hear from the Committee on Commerce whether they are ready to report or not. If they are, I think we ought to go on with the reports of committees.

Mr. GARFIELD. I insist on my motion.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to; there being ayes 102, noes not counted.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Office of the Adjutant-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; nine clerks of class four; fifteen clerks of class three; twenty-five clerks of class two; one hundred clerks of class one; two temporary clerks of class four; three temporary clerks of class three; ten temporary clerks of class two; thirty temporary clerks of class one; ten messengers, at $840 each; in all, $264,000; and the said temporary clerks are for one year only, and no longer.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "one hundred" and inserting "sixty-five," so that it will read "sixty-five clerks of class one." Before proceeding to the consideration of this amendment I want to correct an error in the report of the debate yesterday relative to the Soldiers' Home. I did not correct or look at the notes of my remarks, and I am made to say that the Second Auditor has now employed in the service under the act relating to the home from eighty to one hundred additional clerks. I am made to say that that number of clerks is now engaged in such service. That is a mistake; I did not say that, as will be seen at once from the amendment which I offered. I did say that at one time, not now, one hundred temporary clerks had been engaged in that service. I did not desire to do the Auditor any injustice, but only to state the facts. The Auditor gave me his own statement that twenty-two clerks were now engaged in this service; and I estimated that three or four more were engaged in turning back to claimants the pay of officers and soldiers that had once been turned over to the asylum, as required under the law when application is made to have it turned back.

The amendment now presented I submit for the consideration of the committee. I have had eight years' experience in the Departments of this Government; and I want to say for the Adjutant-General that I have known no more industrious, courteous, or honest official in the service of the United States. He says in the letter which was read from the Clerk's desk yesterday that thirty-five of his clerks are now employed in the useless service discussed yesterday, and that if taken from this work they could be put to more profitable employment. I want now to hear the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in reference to this matter, which I understand he has investigated fully.

I offer the amendment, not necessarily for adoption now, but for the consideration of the committee, in order that it may be decided whether these clerks are necessary or not.

Mr. COBURN. Last year we made a reduction of the clerks in the War Department—about all that it was thought possible to make.

The proposition in the present bill is to cut down the number still more. I will call the attention of the committee to the mode in which the number of clerks is cut down.

In the corresponding provision of last year to line 1051 there were authorized by the law three temporary clerks; in line 1052 there were six temporary clerks; in line 1053 twenty temporary clerks, and in the same line sixty temporary clerks of class one—forty-four more than this bill provides. These clerks are employed by the Adjutant-General in copying the muster-rolls as a part of their duty. The muster-rolls are made upon perishable paper. They have been turned over and examined until they are becoming fragmentary. They have been pasted together, patched, and marked so as to retain some kind of form. It will take perhaps seventeen hundred vol umes of these muster-rolls to complete the entire volunteer army during the rebellion. They have about one hundred and twenty already copied. A large number of these clerks have been employed in this copying. In addition they are employed in examining and classifying papers which are in the Adjutant-General's Department, assorting a vast mass of papers which have been unassorted in relation to every manner of war claim which may be made against the Government. I will mention a single case where by examination of the archives they found evidence which has saved $500,000 to the Government. Various other sums have been saved by the examination of these records by these clerks. This work is going on all the time.

There is a vast amount of clerical work to be done there which I will not now go into; which I cannot call the attention of the House to in as good a style as the Adjutant-General has done in a letter which I hold in my hand, and which is in answer to some interrogatories I put to him. I ask the attention of the House to the reading of that letter, which I send up to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 16, 1874.

SIR: In reply to your inquiries of this date, I have the honor to state as follows: You ask—

First. What will be the effect of cutting off forty-four temporary clerks and sixty-seven enlisted clerks in my office?

The law of last session provided that the enlisted men should be discharged at the end of the fiscal year 1875. The appropriation bill of this session provides for an additional reduction of forty-four of the temporary clerks, and for the discharge of all of them at the end of the fiscal year 1876. This would leave two hundred and five clerks in all at the end of 1875, and one hundred and fifty in all at the end of 1876.

There are one hundred and four rooms full of records in active use. The work has actually increased in the present year over the past. This office cannot control the increase. The cases come from other Departments and outside sources. This office has either to act on all, or to to neglect some. If it has not clerks to act on all, the question is, which shall it neglect? The answer to this question involves interests of the Government through claims commissions, &c., where thousands of dollars are saved by information from records here; and interests of volunteer soldiers, their widows and orphans. Which shall be disregarded? I state only what an actual inspection of all the rooms will demonstrate most clearly. The office cannot now do its work satisfactorily, and will have to close one or more branches if the force is reduced still lower.

Second. What work are they engaged on, and can this work be advantageously delayed?

They are engaged on work relating to claims against the Government: 1. For cotton, supplies furnished during the war, &c. The records of discontinued commands furnish evidence in such cases. Sometimes this evidence defeats fraudulent claims to the amount of thousands of dollars, in one case over $500,000. It is known that some claims have been paid which would have been defeated by papers subsequently found, if it had been known the papers were here. Want of clerks sufficient alone prevented the discovery from being made in time. 2. Claims for pension, bounty, arrears of pay, &c., for volunteers and their widows. Lapse of time enables claim agents to manufacture specious claims of this sort, and at the same time makes examination of them all the more laborious and important to prevent fraud and loss to the Treasury. The number of such claims is largely greater this year than last. The clerks engaged on these are most all volunteer soldiers. From the nature of all this work delay is nothing more or less than loss of the amounts to the Government.

Third. Will the force of messengers I have allowed me by law be able to do the duty of messengers by day and watchmen by night? If not, why not?

The law allows ten messengers in all. This office now occupies twelve buildings outside the War Department, and one hundred and four rooms. There are now forty-four enlisted men employed as messengers, and nineteen as watchmen. Ten messengers could not do the work of carrying the mail all over the city, (to save postage,) to the Capitol, (to save time,) and to the Post-Office—carrying work and messages back and forth between the different rooms and buildings, (to save the more valuable time of officers and clerks,) and cleaning all the rooms, furnishing water, &c., to them. After men have been on duty of this sort seven to eight hours per day, it can at once be seen that they cannot go on watch outside from four p. m. till eight a. m., and all day Sundays and holidays. When the clerks and day messengers leave the offices, the watchmen come on guard. There is a trusty man over them, as sergeant, who holds them to their responsibility. Inspections are made of the guard and of the buildings two or three times in the night. If the enlisted men are discharged, the only course to adopt will be to lock the buildings and leave them. The risk of fire would be great, for several instances have occurred where the watchmen have prevented it. The risk of robbery would, in my judgment, be very great, for the value of these records has been too often felt by disappointed claimants not to be well known. There may be some men who after going so far as to make up a fraudulent claim would not stop at destroying any evidence they could reach which would defeat it.

Fourth. Describe the condition of the records of my office and their places of deposits, stating the dangers of fire and plunder, or mutilation, without watchmen.

The last part of this question is answered in the previous reply. The outside buildings are very insecure, old dwelling-houses, surrounded by other buildings liable to catch fire. As to the records, the muster-rolls and records of war of 1812 (now much referred to under recent pension law) are very much worn, and so are some of the large record-books, from necessary, frequent handling. They must be copied, or forever lost, or else the use of them must entirely cease. It is hardly necessary to say that the muster-rolls of companies, hospitals, &c., furnish the information on which all questions of pay, bounty, and pension depend, and are in hourly use. If the clerical force is diminished, the work of copying these books cannot go on. There will be no one to do it.

The present clerks are tried and faithful men. If they are discharged now, and others are appointed at a future time, they may not be so trusty, and the Government may suffer much by the change, in addition to the loss entailed by cessation of the work which now saves, sometimes in one case greatly more than the cost of the entire clerical force of the Department, for a year.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

Hon. JOHN COBURN,
House of Representatives.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. Chairman, I only want to add a few words to what has been said by the Adjutant-General in relation to this matter. It may be thought the dispensing with the duties in relation to the soldiers' home will so much diminish the work that there will be nothing to be done by these clerks in the Adjutant-General's Office; but, so far from that being the case, there is ample work for a larger force than they now have on hand. In point of fact, the work has considerably increased within twelve months, and probably will not be less. I made particular inquiry as to this matter of the Adjutant-General. If any of the members of the House would take occasion to examine the enormous amount of records in his charge and the condition in which they now are, they would find that this work ought not to be delayed. I am almost ready to say the mass of papers would fill this room which are now to be found in the buildings under the charge of the Adjutant-General. The work of classifying them is absolutely enormous.

Now, sir, there are many just claims and there are many unjust claims against the Government, the evidence of which is there to be found. The man who has a just claim has a right to have it settled at an early day; and in cases of unjust claims the evidence on the part of the Government should be known and preserved, and readily reached at the proper time. If this be not done, if we cut down the clerical force of this office, the Government may suffer as well as individuals.

As to the reduction of this force last year, it was then cut down to the lowest limit possible. The bill now proposes to reduce it forty-four more. That will necessitate the closing of certain rooms and dispensing with certain necessary business. Indeed I firmly believe, as I believe the Adjutant-General conscientiously says, an increase of this force would be in the interest of economy and for the good of the public generally. He went on under the law which formerly existed in relation to this matter and did cut down his force a considerable number, and he should be authorized only to do so in his discretion under the present law. I hold in my hand an amendment which meets his views, which puts the force at the same number at which it was last year established, and strikes out the clause in the last part of this section of the bill—"and said temporary clerks are for one year and no longer." The Adjutant-General may need them longer than one year, and I think that clause should not be inserted in this appropriation. It is proper he should have the discretion to discharge them when their duties cease and their work is done. At least it will be perfectly within the power of any subsequent Congress to apply the proper remedy if the number should be found too large.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment will be read for information.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to withhold his amendment until I have made an explanation.

Mr. COBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. I want to say, as I said at the outset, that I introduced this for the purpose of hearing the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN,] the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. I was satisfied myself, from conversation with General Townsend, that this force ought not to be reduced, he having assured me that were he relieved of the duties imposed on his office under the acts of 1865 and 1866 relative to the military home he should transfer this force to copying the rolls, now very much mutilated, into books, where they might be preserved. I think the committee will all agree with me in the opinion that this force ought not to be disturbed, and I withdraw my amendment, that the gentleman from Indiana may submit his for the rearrangement of the force.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York having been withdrawn, the Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN.]

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1051, after the words "one hundred clerks of class one," strike out these words: "two temporary clerks of class four; three temporary clerks of class three; ten temporary clerks of class two; thirty temporary clerks of class one;" and insert the following:

And three temporary clerks of class four; six temporary clerks of class three; twenty temporary clerks of class two; and sixty temporary clerks of class one.

Also, strike out the words, in lines 1056 and 1057, "and the said temporary clerks are for one year only, and no longer."

Mr. GARFIELD. I am glad my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York, has withdrawn his amendment to cut down this force thirty-five more. I think that would be cutting far too deep, and the letter read at the request of the gentleman from Indiana shows that. But in the bill, as we have it in print before the committee, there is a reduction of forty-four of the temporary force granted last year. Now the gentleman from Indiana moves to restore these forty-four clerks, that is, to add to the force forty-four above what is in the printed bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to suggest to my friend from Indiana that the letter of Genreal Townsend was probably prepared before the action of the committee yesterday relieving thirty-five of his clerks, and was predicated on the work done heretofore in his office. Yesterday, by the action of the committee, thirty-five of his clerks were released. That ought to be taken into account in this discussion.

Mr. GARFIELD. As stated by the gentleman from New York, we yesterday dispensed by law, if this becomes a law, as I have no doubt it will, with the services of thirty-five clerks or with the work that thirty-five clerks are now performing in that office. Therefore our reduction is now only a little more than that number. The reduction which the committee has made as it stands in the printed bill is forty-four or only nine more than the number of clerks whose services we yesterday made unnecessary after the 1st of April next. I hope therefore the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will not prevail.

Mr. COBURN. My whole object in moving my amendment was that the number provided for in this bill of the force of the Adjutant-General's Office might be raised, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] admits that it is necessary to have these additional clerks, or rather the old number of clerks, restored on account of the other work that has to be performed. That is the only point in the whole matter. That is all there is in it. The only question is whether we will retain the same number of men as we had last year. And what I endeavored to show, and what the letter of the Adjutant-General was intended to show, was that, notwithstanding the dispensing with the work referred to, it would still be necessary to have these men, because there was other work of very great importance upon which they should be engaged. That is the substance; that is the gist of the whole matter. It will take ten or twelve years to finish up these muster-rolls unless these clerks are retained. It should be completed much sooner. I hope, therefore, the committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. I hope they will not.

Mr. RANDALL. I have great confidence in the disposition and judgment of the Adjutant-General, but at the same time I think that our economy as exhibited yesterday goes for naught if we agree to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. I hope, therefore, the committee will adopt the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York and the chairman of the committee, and let the economy of yesterday stand unimpaired.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman from Indiana forgets that the action of the committee on yesterday virtually gives the Adjutant-General thirty-five more clerks, by relieving them from work they are now doing and transferring them to more important work. It is really an increase of his force to the amount of thirty-five men.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us have a vote.

Mr. COBURN. Before the vote is taken let me say that I understood, and the Adjutant-General understood, at the very time that these questions were propounded, that it was proposed to dispense with these clerks. The object of this amendment is that the Adjutant-General may go on vigorously with his work. It has already been delayed too long. These men are authorized now by law, and I venture to say it will not be twelve months until additional clerks will have to be authorized. Anybody who will go and examine these records and see their condition will at once perceive that that work ought to be completed, and a larger force ought to be employed upon it than is now employed.

Certainly the Adjutant-General has no interest in expending money. He has no interest in increasing his force. What advantage can it be to the Adjutant-General to have ten or fifteen or twenty more clerks, except that the work of his office may be done and the interests of the people subserved.

That is all there is in it, and he has faithfully and honestly, whenever it has been possible to do so, discharged clerks at the proper time and cut down his force in large numbers heretofore. And now it is proposed that this Congress shall intervene without thoroughly understanding the subject. It seems to me an act very unwise and impolitic. No man can have any object in pressing an undue retention of this force. There is the work; there are the duties to be discharged. The public necessities demand that these clerks shall be retained, and economy and common sense demand that these men, experienced in their business, shall be kept in their places.

Mr. MAYNARD. I wish to ask the gentleman who makes this motion a question, and by the answer that he gives my vote will be very much influenced. It is whether this matter has been investigated by the Committee on Military Affairs and the recommendation comes from that committee, or is it introduced upon the gentleman's own motion?

Mr. COBURN. It has not been formally submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, but I have talked with members of that committee about it, and I understand what they think on the subject. It is not, however, a matter that has been submitted to us formally.

Let me say one word further upon this matter. The gentleman from New York admits that these clerks are necessary, but under his amendment all of the temporary clerks have to be dispensed with at the end of the year. He admits that the sixty-five or seventy clerks left have plenty of work to do, and yet he proposes to strike out every one of those clerkships and abolish the whole at the end of one year. This work cannot be completed by that time, and they should be retained.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. COBURN; and on a division, there were—ayes 34, noes 48; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WHEELER and Mr. COBURN were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported ayes 42, noes not counted.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move in line 1053, after the word "thirty," to insert the word "nine," so that it will read thirty-nine temporary clerks of class one. We have dispensed with the services of thirty-five clerks, but the committee cut the number down forty-four, and therefore I think that that increase should be made. You cut down the clerks allowed for the purposes of the military asylum thirty-five, but there are actually forty-four cut off.

Mr. SPEER. What assurance has the gentleman that the thirty-five clerks will be discharged?

Mr. GARFIELD. Because the law makes it imperative.

Mr. SPEER. But how do you determine the number to be discharged at thirty-five?

Mr. WHEELER. I had a letter read yesterday which said that thirty-five clerks were employed under the act in relation to asylums, and by the action of the House yesterday their services were dispensed with.

Mr. SPEER. Is there not danger that we may be really increasing the number of clerks by this?

Mr. GARFIELD. We made an estimate of how many we thought the number might be reduced, and we made forty-four. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] has since made a careful examination, and thinks that thirty-five can be dispensed with.

Mr. SPEER. And is this reduction imperative on the Department?

Mr. GARFIELD. O, yes; it is.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBURN. I now move to strike out, in lines 1056 and 1057, the words "and the said temporary clerks are for one year only and no longer."

These temporary clerks will be needed for five years at least. Let any man look at the work devolved upon them. Why should they be discharged? Let any man go up there and take a look at the amount of work to be done, and he will say that it cannot be done in one year. I have gone up there and looked at it, and there is no evidence before the House to show that the work can possibly be completed within that time. Why, then, discharge experienced clerks, who are acquainted with the exact duties to be performed there at this time? You might as well cut off the doing of the work at once. Not one-tenth of it can be done within that time.

Mr. RANDALL. A complete answer to the gentleman from Indiana is that we are now estimating and appropriating for the coming year, from July, 1875, to July, 1876. If we find, in December next, it necessary to continue these clerks we can do so, and we shall have six months to do it in. I hope, therefore, the House will not agree to this amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division there were ayes 16, noes not counted.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the office of Military Justice:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; one clerk of class four; one clerk of class three; two clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; in all, $13,840.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] what is the use of this Department of Military Justice? Before the war this Department was not known to the Army at all, and all records and military reports were revised by one of the secretaries of the President; and not until 1862 did we know anything about a Judge Advocate-General's Department. And now this Department costs some $13,000 a year. It is the opinion of officers of the Army that the Department ought to be abolished. I think myself it is time it was wiped out, and that there is no necessity for this appropriation. I move to amend this clause so as to reduce the number of clerks of class one from four to one.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that amendment will not be adopted.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 42, noes 44; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 27, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

In the Office of the Quartermaster-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; eight clerks of class four; ten clerks of class three; twenty-four clerks of class two; forty clerks of class one; eighteen copyists, at $900 each; one female messenger, at $30 per month; one messenger, at $840; eight laborers, at $720; one engineer, at $1,200; one fireman, at $720; and five watchmen, at $720 each; six temporary clerks of class two; ten temporary clerks of class one; ten temporary copyists, at $900 each: in all, $172,080.

Mr. RANDALL. It is known to the Committee of the Whole that the Army has been reduced, in pursuance of law, from thirty thousand to twenty-five thousand. Yet we find here in this bill that the Quartermaster's Department is given the same force that it had when the Army was five thousand stronger than it now is. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether that committee took into consideration the fact that the Army was reduced when they reviewed the bill of last year and were making up the bill of this year? I find that the amount is exactly the same, and the number of clerks employed the same also. It seems to me that in view of the reduction of the Army there should be a corresponding reduction in this appropriation.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will notice that we have cut down from the estimates of this year for this Department twenty-six clerks. I do not see why the footing does not show it. It ought to show it.

Mr. RANDALL. It does not show it. That is what misled me.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman had the law before him——

Mr. RANDALL. I have the law.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will notice that the estimate is for thirty clerks of class two, fifty clerks of class one, and twenty-eight copyists. We have given them twenty-four clerks of class two, forty clerks of class one, and eighteen copyists. But the true answer to the remark of the gentleman is this: The cutting down the number of private soldiers in the field does not in any appreciable quantity cut down the amount of force needed to carry through the regular accounts in the Quartermaster's Department, at least not in any such proportion. There is no cutting down of the number of military posts, or the number of these accounts that come in from these posts. I believe the posts are multiplying rather than diminishing.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like the privilege of making a correction in the footing.

Mr. GARFIELD. The footing is not incorrect in this bill, I believe, but in the law of last year.

Mr. RANDALL. The same mistake occurred once before.

Mr. GARFIELD. If there is any error it will be corrected.

The Clerk read the following:

In the Office of the Surgeon-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; six clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; eight clerks of class two; one hundred and fifteen clerks of class one, (twenty of whom shall be temporary;) one anatomist at the Army Medical Museum, at $1,600; one engineer in division of records and museum, at $1,400; one messenger, at $840; twenty-two watchmen and laborers, (six of whom are temporary,) at $720 each; in all, $188,080.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move as a substitute for the paragraph just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The substitute was as follows:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; eighteen clerks of class four; twenty-eight clerks of class three; thirty-six clerks of class two; sixty-eight clerks of class one; one chemist, at $2,000; one assistant chemist, at $1,800; one microscopist, at $1,800; one anatomist, at $1,600; one engineer, at $1,400; one fireman, at $720; twelve messengers, at $840 each; fourteen watchmen and laborers, at $720 each; in all, $241,180.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask the careful attention of the committee to the reading of a letter from the Surgeon-General's Office, for it gives information which I think ought to govern our action upon this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1874.

SIR: Permit me to invite your attention to the present organization of the clerical force of this office. When the estimates for the coming fiscal year were prepared it was my intention to ask for a number sufficient to dispose promptly of the work of this Bureau; but it was subsequently thought best to follow the figures in the appropriation bill for the present year, and submit separately for consideration of Congress reasons for some additional clerks.

In consequence of the action of Congress at the last session I have been obliged to close the laboratory of the office, to dispense with professional assistants in the Army Medical Museum, and to discharge a large number of clerks heretofore employed in replying to official inquiries from the Commissioner of Pensions as to cause of death of deceased, or the hospital history of discharged, soldiers. As a result of this, the work is going steadily behind despite my best efforts. The number of cases of this kind on hand awaiting reply July 1, 1874, was nine hundred and seventy-five, and on November 30, 1874, the number was twenty-one hundred and eighty. Meanwhile other collateral work of great importance has necessarily been neglected. Thus, the volumes containing the alphabetical register of soldiers discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability during the late war, are so worn by the constant use of the searchers, that there is serious danger that portions of the valuable record they contain will be lost unless they are recopied into new books at an early date. Books for this purpose had been obtained and the work just commenced when the force was reduced last summer.

There are also among the archives of the office many hospital registers, containing a record of the admission to hospital and final disposition of sick and wounded soldiers during the late war, which were already much worn when originally received at this office, and which, by constant use, have become so tattered that the records they contain are in danger of being lost forever if they are not recopied. It may be added, that the alphabetical registers of deaths and discharges used in this office were made up from the monthly reports of sick and wounded, and that a complete examination of the hospital registers, turned in at the close of the war, for the purpose of extracting all the deaths and discharges they contained, which may have escaped being embodied in the monthly sick reports, has never been made for want of clerical force. That this work is necessary is shown by the fact that special search in individual cases very frequently discovers in the hospital records the names of dead and discharged soldiers which are not contained in the alphabetical registers. A complete examination of the hospital records for this purpose alone would require the services of eight men for several years.

Again, the classification of clerks in this office is peculiarly unfair. According to the scale of all the Departments, exclusive of the War Department, the one hundred and thirty-four clerks in this office would be graded as follows: Of class one, thirty-eight; of class two, thirty-nine; of class three, thirty-one; of class four, nineteen; above class four, seven. It cannot be denied that the performance of clerical work in this Bureau requires as high a degree of talent, education, and skill as in any other branch of the Government service, and there is no reason why the clerks in this office should be graded lower than the average of other Departments.

I therefore earnestly request that you will use your best efforts to induce the House of Representatives to substitute for the clause relative to this office in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill the following:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; eighteen clerks of class four; twenty-eight clerks of class three; thirty-six clerks of class two; sixty-eight clerks of class one; one chemist, at $2,500; one assistant chemist, at $1,800; one microscopist, at $1,800; one anatomist, at $1,600; one engineer, at $1,400; one fireman, at $720; twelve messengers, at $840 each; fourteen watchmen and laborers, at $720 each: in all, $241,180.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. K. BARNES,
Surgeon-General.

Hon. S. W. KELLOGG,
Chairman of Committee on Reform in the Civil Service,
House of Representatives.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have moved an amendment in accordance with the request of the Surgeon-General except we fix the pay of the chemist at $2,000 instead of $2,500. I do that upon my own responsibility, because I understand that is the pay of the chemist in the Department of Agriculture. This amendment calls for a pretty large increase, and I would not desire to vote for it unless it was absolutely for the interest of the Surgeon-General's Department, and of the people of this country. If the facts stated by the Surgeon-General in that letter are correct, then I say it is the poorest kind of economy for us to reduce the force in that office so that he cannot do the ordinary work, especially in regard to pensions. I have no doubt of its correctness. I have before me his report, made this session, and it shows that in the cutting down process of last year, which this House went in for as far as it could, when we cut down the estimates for the clerical force of the War Department something like $200,000, we struck altogether too deep in the Surgeon-General's office. This report shows that while there were only nine hundred and seventy-five unsearched cases on hand on calls for information on the 1st of July last, the result of the reduction of the force has swelled the number of those back or unsearched cases to abont twenty-one hundred on the 30th of November; and the Surgeon-General says in his letter that it is impossible for him to answer the simple calls for pension information alone with the clerical force that he now has. I do not think there is any man on this floor who will consider it good economy to keep the clerks of the Pension Office waiting week after week and month after month for information from the Surgeon-General's Office before they can proceed with their work. I venture to say there is scarcely a man in this House who has not had letters from some applicant for a pension or his agent, and the reply comes back to him from the Commissioner of Pensions that the matter was referred to the Surgeon-General for information at such a date, and no reply has been received. That tells the whole story. I say there is not a man of us but what ought to be willing to give the Surgeon-General's Office force enough to answer promptly the inquiries in regard to pensions, so that those who deserve pensions may receive them, and the fraudulent claims will receive such careful attention as will insure their rejection. Those of us who know Surgeon-General Barnes know that he would never ask for an increase of force unless demanded by the duties of his Bureau, and would never ask an increase to make a place for any one; and his only desire is to have the work done promptly, as it ought to be done. If you reduce that force so that these pension claims cannot be properly investigated as they come up, you open a door for fraudulent pension claims; and in that way you may lose ten times more than you appear to be saving by this supposed economy.

There is another point; and upon this subject my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STRAWBRIDGE,] knows more than I do. In consequence of the meagerness of our appropriations last year it has been necessary to stop the laboratory of that Department. Many men on this floor can doubtless tell much better than I can how necessary that laboratory is. I have the impression that it is most important not only to the medical fraternity of the country, but to all of us, and to the cause of medical science, to have the information that has been obtained and would continue to be obtained from that laboratory if its operations were not suspended. Last year we struck out the provision for the chemist and assistant chemist and otherwise cut down the force, so that it was necessary to suspend this laboratory. I offer this amendment. If it proposes more than the Committee of the Whole think it ought to be given, it can be modified; but I know that the Surgeon-General never would ask for it were it not all necessary for the proper and complete work of his Bureau.

There is another point to which I wish to call attention, and that is the vast disproportion between the number of clerks of class one in this establishment and the clerks of other grades. Here you give the Surgeon-General one hundred and fifteen clerks of class one, eight of class two, four of class three, and six of class four. In other words, there are one hundred and fifteen clerks of class one, receiving $1,200 each, while there are twenty clerks of all the other grades. Now, if the work of this establishment demands, as it does, as high an order of clerkship as the other Departments, then there ought to be a larger proportion of clerks of the higher grades. According to the proportion in the other Departments there should be in this establishment forty-six clerks of class one, thirty-six of class two, twenty-eight of class three, and eighteen of class four. My amendment proposes only about one-half of the proper relative increase of the higher classes. Still I am not so strenuous about the number as I am upon providing force enough to do the work properly; but an increase in the number of the higher grades of clerks in this office is just and right and for the interests of the service, and I trust it will be made now.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are two or three suggestions which I would be very glad to have the Committee of the Whole hear. In the first place, the Secretary of War has sent to us no recommendation for an increase in this office. In the second place, nothing has come to the Committee on Appropriations on this subject. We would naturally expect that the appropriate officers would send to us if they spontaneously desired an increase of force. Those are two suggestions which appear to me a little striking.

Now, my friend from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] is very active. He is evidently a volunteer in the interest of this Bureau. He did a great deal of gallant volunteer service last winter, and this winter he is repeating it. Here is a long letter from a Bureau stating the general service performed by that Bureau and complaining that its clerks are not graded as high—that is, do not get as high salaries—as the clerks in some other Bureaus. Now, the gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment which proposes to regrade those clerks.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION IN THE ROTUNDA.

The committee rose informally; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the women's centennial executive committee of the city of Washington, in aid of the national centennial exhibition, have leave to occupy the Rotunda of the Capitol, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, during the afternoon and evening of December 17th instant, for the purpose of celebrating the destruction of the tea in the harbor of Boston on the night of the 16th of December, 1773.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session; when

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, said: For the purpose of considering in the House the resolution just received, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3813) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution just received from the Senate be taken from the Speaker's table and adopted.

There being no objection, the resolution was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. GARFIELD. When the committee rose I was about to say that the bill as now before us in print gives the Surgeon-General one hundred and thirty-three clerks of the first, second, third, and fourth classes. The amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut proposes to give that officer one hundred and fifty clerks, an increase of seventeen; not a great increase in the number, but an increase of $83,000 in the amount of money to be expended. The increase, therefore, is not of brains and hands, but chiefly an increase of pay. For instance, that office has now six clerks of class four; the gentleman's amendment gives it eighteen. It now has four clerks of class three; the gentleman's amendment gives it twenty-eight. It now has eight clerks of class two; the gentleman gives it thirty-six. It now has one hundred and fifteen clerks of class one; the gentleman would give it sixty-eight. The difference between one hundred and fifteen and sixty-eight he grades up into the higher classes; and thus he proposes to pay in this small Bureau of the War Department an additional $83,000 for getting seventeen more brains to work there. I hope the House will stand by the committee on this bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will allow me one word—I know my friend from Ohio will hear it in answer to what he has said here——

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. When my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, says I was a volunteer last winter in amendments I offered to his appropriation bills, I think he is slightly mistaken; for if he will remember the action of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, of which I was made chairman, was based upon an order of this House, to investigate and make report in regard to these very matters. So, therefore, whatever I did last year I did under the orders of this House, and I had as good right as he without that order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I admit the gentleman was drafted last year and was not a volunteer.

Mr. KELLOGG. Now one word more. My friend has been here a good deal longer than I have. I will not call myself an old member yet. I have not got quite up to that high position, perhaps, in his estimation. I may be somewhere in that happy position of a medium state, or on the boundary between the old and new members, where I can see clearly sometimes the assumption and the arrogance on the part of the old members in crowding down the new members, and where I can sympathize frequently with the troubles of the new members in getting a fair chance with their business before the House. If it be an unpardonable thing for me to respond to the call of a friend in one of the Bureaus of the Government to bring a certain matter up for the action of the House without first asking the gentleman, because it did not happen to have come regularly from the Committee on Appropriations, then I perhaps should beg my friend's pardon; but I shall do no such thing; I do not understand it in that way. It has not come, he says, in the usual, regular way to the Committee on Appropriations. It was sent, as I understand, to the Secretary of War. Perhaps the Committee on Appropriations notified the Secretary of War he must keep down his estimates to those of last year. At any rate the Secretary thought best to transmit the estimates precisely upon the basis of the appropriations made last year. For that reason he did not make any additional estimate for the Surgeon-General's Office.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to keep a single man of this clerical force more than the duties of the Surgeon-General's Office absolutely call for. If your pensioners are being delayed, if the calls from the Pension Office cannot be promptly answered and the business of that Bureau is running behindhand, if you are keeping clerks idle in the Pension Bureau because of the lack of sufficient force to do the business of the Surgeon-General's Office; if the delay in the Pension Bureau arises from the fact that they cannot get the information they need promptly from the Surgeon-General's Office, then I say to my friend from Ohio that in my judgment it is the poorest and most miserable economy on his part to insist in keeping down this force to where it now is.

If in the amendment I propose I make too many of the higher grade of clerks, then let the committee amend it so as to make it as it should be. The bill certainly does not give a fair proportion now. I have, however, only put in my amendment about one-half the usual ratio of higher grade of clerks as compared with the other Departments of the Government; and I call on my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to tell the committee whether there is any good reason, where clerks have been in the service a long time, why they should not after long and faithful service have a chance to get $1,400 or $1,600 a year in the Surgeon-General's Office and in the War Department, as other clerks have in the other Executive Departments of the Government. Why keep these one hundred and fifteen clerks for all time in class one, and allow this office of the Surgeon-General only twenty clerks of all the three higher grades? My friend, too, forgets another thing, that I have included one chemist at $2,000, and an assistant chemist. He does not take this into consideration in making his estimate. If I have made too many clerks of a higher grade, then give these seventeen additional clerks that are asked for, to be divided up among the other classes, leaving one hundred and fifteen in class one. At any rate, do what is just and right; and do not charge me with being a volunteer in trying to increase clerks of a higher grade, when I simply seek to carry out the recommendation of one of the Bureaus of the War Department, for which, I am satisfied, there are the best grounds in the light of real economy and public policy. I cannot forget the ratio of higher grade clerks in this office is not one-fifth part of what is in the other Bureaus. The Surgeon-General knows what he needs better than any man of us; and he is the last man to ask for more than the business and the wants of his Bureau demand at our hands.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLOGG. I propose now to add "ten" instead of "seventeen" clerks, and also move to strike out "six" and insert "eight" in line 1099; so it will read, "eight clerks of class four."

I will not take further time, but simply ask for a vote.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division, ayes 22, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Office of the Paymaster-General:
One chief clerk, at $2,000; seven clerks of class four; eight clerks of class three; fifteen clerks of class two; thirteen clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; four watchmen, at $720 each; five laborers, at $720 each; two temporary clerks of class two; three temporary clerks of class one; in all, $77,720.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out the appropriation for watchmen, and I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether that committee has ever had in view any proposition looking to the guarding of the various public buildings in this city by details from the Metropolitan police force. It is well known to the committee that a large part of the expense of the Metropolitan police is paid by the Government of the United States—I think 60 per cent. of the entire cost. It seems to me the Government, in view of that fact, should have the right to claim from that police force the duty of watching its public buildings.

Mr. SPEER. The Government paid toward keeping up the Metropolitan police force in this city last year $204,500.

Mr. RANDALL. I am obliged to my colleague. We paid, then, more than $200,000 dollars last year to keep up this Metropolitan police force, and yet we are not allowed to use it for the purpose of guarding our public buildings. I am informed the chief of the Metropolitan police has said he will at any time make detail of officers to watch our public buildings.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Metropolitan police force are of course an out-door police force, while the watchmen provided for in this bill are interior watches of the buildings, who must be wholly under the control of the chief officers of the buildings. The Metropolitan police force must be under the control of the captain of that force, to be placed in the various parts of the city according as necessity may require. It will not do at all to have anybody in charge of watching the interior of one of our buildings who might be subject to be ordered away by any one else than the chief officer of the building, who ought to have control of the charge of the interior.

Mr. RANDALL. This Metropolitan police force is paid $200,000 by the Government of the United States, and I wish to ask the gentleman under what show of equity, if it is not made useful for watching our public buildings, should we pay anything for its support?

Mr. GARFIELD. They are of great value in watching the approaches to the buildings. But the watchmen here referred to are men who go through all the stories of the buildings in regular reliefs, in order to afford protection not only against any burglaries that may be attempted, but in regard to fire; and they have charge of the keys of the various rooms. In nearly all of these buildings officers are at work until a late hour. The watchmen are there as messengers to such officers as may be working there. I submit that this interior watch force is vitally important, and should be under the control of no one except the officer who has supreme command of the building. The force provided for here is the same as last year.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether provision is not made for special watchmen for all the Government property in this city, including the various reservations, &c.? If that be so, I would further ask what duty do the Metropolitan police perform? What public property do they guard, and why should the Government pay them $200,000 a year for pacing the streets and avenues of the city?

Mr. GARFIELD. That is a discussion which will come up properly in another bill when we come to the appropriation for the Metropolitan police. But I will say this now, that the Metropolitan police should be maintained by the property interests of the city, and as we have no reference whatever in the employment of these watchmen to the watching of the approaches to the buildings, the care of keeping mobs away, or nuisances away, or anything of that sort, it is very proper that we should pay our share of the expense of the external watch of the city.

Mr. SPEER. Do we not provide by a special appropriation for this external watch?

Mr. GARFIELD. Only for a few squares.

Mr. SPEER. Is not the watching of all the approaches to this building provided for by special appropriations for watchmen?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not at all.

Mr. SPEER. The gentleman is certainly mistaken there. We all have seen the squads of watchmen around this building.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am not mistaken. The special watchmen I speak of are for squares, &c., remote from the center of the city. We employ no watchmen for the approaches to this building except the Metropolitan police.

Mr. SPEER. Does the captain of the Metropolitan police, who is paid $2,000 a year, stay constantly in this building?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly he does.

Mr. SPEER. Is it no part of his duty to go outside?

Mr. GARFIELD. He has charge of the interior of this building.

Mr. RANDALL. I only desired by offering my amendment to have an explanation of this matter. I think the whole, or at least a great part, of this money ought to be saved.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment; to insert some lines which have been accidentally omitted.

On page 48 of the bill, after line 1169, add these words:

For superintendent of building on Tenth street, occupied as the Surgeon-General's Office, $250.

I submit in explanation of this amendment the following letter from the Surgeon-General:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 12, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to state that in making up the estimate of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30,1876, by the office of the Surgeon-General, it was omitted to estimate for the salary of the superintendent of the building on Tenth street occupied by this office, and I would respectfully request that an item appropriating $250 for that purpose may be added to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. K. BARNES,
Surgeon-General.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

General Land Office:

For the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; recorder, $2,000; three principal clerks, at $1,800 each; three clerks of class four; twenty-three clerks of class three; forty clerks of class two; forty clerks of class one; one draughtsman, $1,600; one assistant draughtsman, $1,400; two messengers; three assistant messengers; seven laborers, and two packers; in all, $171,920; also, for additional clerks on account of military bounty lands, namely: For principal clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class three; four clerks of class two; thirty-five clerks of class one; and two laborers; in all, $52,640: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, at his discretion, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to use any portion of said appropriation for piece-work, or by the day, month, or year, at such rate or rates as he may deem just and fair, not exceeding a salary of $1,200 per annum; also, for three clerks of class four; two clerks of class three; four clerks of class two; and twenty-one clerks of class one, to be available from and after the 1st day of March, 1875, and to the 30th day of June, 1876, and no longer, $52,533.33.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment:

In line 1332 strike out these words: "and to the 30th day of June, and no longer."

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Will the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations state what is the occasion for these additional clerks?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is explained in a very elaborate letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which I desire to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks, showing that on account of work which has accumulated in that office very great injury occurs to people having business with the General Land Office. Numerous cases of this sort occur: A man's case in regard to title to land on which he has settled hangs over four or five years until it is reached; and at the end of that time he finds that the land has been granted to sombody else, to some railroad corporation or some one else, and then both his time and his land are lost. We were satisfied by statements made by the Commissioner that a sufficient force should be put into that office not only to clear up the back work, but to keep up the current work thoroughly and fully, as it ought to be kept up.

Furthermore, we find that the organization in the Land Office today is the organization that existed twenty years ago. They have substantially the same force they had twenty years ago, and the amount of work accumulated in the Land Office, the current annual business, is very greatly increased. The letter which I now submit as a part of my remarks explains this matter fully.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND-OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 20, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the condition of the public business required to be transacted in this Bureau, and to the urgent necessity for an immediate increase of its clerical force.

My predecessor, Hon. Willis Drummond, under date of January 26, 1874, addressed a letter to Hon. WASHINGTON TOWNSEND, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, concerning the reorganization of the clerical force of the General Land Office. That letter will be found embodied in the report No. 251 H. R., Forty-third Congress, first session, to accompany bill H. R. No. 1060. With the recommendations of that letter I fully concur. To its statement of facts I beg to call your attention as in large measure evidencing the necessities to which I now respectfully ask your further attention.

As therein stated, the clerical force now employed is the same as that authorized by the acts of March 3, 1853, and March 3, 1855. In other words, the recognized wants of twenty years since, when the population of the country was twenty-seven instead of as now forty millions; when the work of supervision was over ten instead of seventeen surveyors-general; over the operations of fifty-three instead of the now ninety-six land offices, are made the measure of present necessities. Then the annual surveys were in round numbers 4,000,000 of acres, now they are 30,000,000; then the disposals were 3,000,000 acres, while in 1873 the disposals were 13,000,000 acres.

Nor do these exhibits of increasing quantity indicate the actual increase of the added labor of these twenty years. Since 1862 the homestead, the mining, and the timber-culture acts have been added to the body of the laws relating to the disposal of the public domain, and now and in the future will constitute the principal channel through which title will be obtained to the public lands.

Under these laws the work of adjustment, as compared with the old system of cash disposals, is enormously increased.

My predecessor, in the letter referred to, estimated that the work of examining one of this class of cases was equal to that required for the examination of eight private entries. In my judgment he underestimated the difference. Every case of entry under these laws, whether contested or not, requires a careful and painstaking examination, not merely as to form of proof and interference with prior entries but,an actual reading of testimony required to be produced as to compliance with special provisions of law governing in the given case. In case of contest arising under these laws as well as under the several acts granting lands in aid of the construction of railroads, of which there are a very large number, the record of the hearing had at the local land office, which is sent up for the review and decision of this office, not unfrequently embraces hundreds of pages of testimony.

Perhaps no better illustration of the change of the attitude of affairs since the date of the enactments under which this office is now conducted can be instanced than that relating to the work of draughting. The act of July 4, 1836, which is still the law controlling in that respect, authorized the employment of one draughtsman and one assistant draughtsman. The number now employed on that duty is nine, and the number actually required to do the work of that character is twelve. The demands growing out of the mining acts of 1866, and subsequent amendments, alone require the constant services of the number allowed by law.

In addition to the laws already noted which have added to the labor theretofore imposed upon the office, and in view of which no provision whatever for additional clerical force has been made, I call your attention to the fact that under the act for the discontinuance of the office of surveyor-general in districts where the body of the public lands have been surveyed, and constituting the Commissioner of the General Land Office ex officio surveyor-general of such districts, a large amount of labor is devolved upon this office in conducting the survey of fragmentary tracts, such as unsurveyed islands and the reclaimed beds of shallow lakes, sloughs, and ponds. These operations extend over the States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Alabama, Mississippi, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Arkansas. The office of the surveyor-general in the latter State was closed March 12, 1850. At that time the surveys in the field were completed; the office work, however, had not kept pace with the work in the field, and although the archives were transferred to this office, they remain in the same unfinished condition (for want of adequate force for their completion) in which they were left fourteen years since.

By the act approved April 8, 1864, the duty of conducting the surveys of Indian and other reservations of land was transferred to the General Land Office. No provision, however, was made for the additional force necessary to perform this great labor. The surveys under this act conducted under the supervision of this office during the past three years in the Indian Territory alone, aggregate a surveyed surface equal to 35,675 square miles, embracing an area of 22,832,725 acres of land.

This work alone so added to the already overburdened capacities of this office would (if performed in the usual way) have required the services of two surveyors-general and the ordinary complement of assistants.

Without entering into further detail, I confidently declare that the now current business of this office requires for its transaction a force larger by at least thirty clerks than was necessary at the date when its present organization was provided. There are now employed on work incidental to the legislation of the past twelve years not less than that number, who are drawn from the force found to be necessary under pre-existing laws.

This condition of affairs resulted in so seriously paralyzing and delaying the transaction of the ordinary business, that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, an additional force of thirty clerks was allowed; but for that year only, and with their aid, the then arrears of current business were to some extent brought up. I find, however, that there is yet very much of this work to be done. In other words, it is my duty to state that there are yet on the files of this office a very large number of cases which ought to have received attention years since, and that the delay is often found to have worked calamity to a most deserving class of citizens—the homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands. It not unfrequently happens that on taking up cases which have for years awaited attention, it is found necessary to cancel the entry of a tract (for conflict with a railroad grant or other prior selection) upon which the settler has expended his all, both of money and labor, in improvements which by the cancellation are lost to him.

The business of the office is not and cannot be conducted on its present organization with that care and deliberation essential to safety, and so especially requisite in a business which lays the foundations that evidence the source of title of three-fourths of the whole area of the nation.

Another result incidental to lack of adequate force, and which will tell most deleteriously in the future and with increased force from year to year, is found in the fact that the constant pressure of current business has prevented proper attention being paid to the arrangement, systematizing, and indexing of the records of the office. To such an extent is this true, that there are many branches of its business to which there is no avenue of approach, save by the recollection of the clerk who is or may have been in charge of the particular subject-matter a reference to which is required. These remarks apply to the general files and records of the office, and not to the additional matter to which I now call attention.

By the act approved July 4, 1836, it is provided, (United States Statutes, volume 5, page 111, section 4,) in defining the duties of the recorder of the General Land Office, that "he shall prepare alphabetical indexes of the names of patentees and of persons entitled to patent." This law has remained in force to the present time, and the necessity for such indexes is apparent on mere suggestion; their supposed existence is proved by letters constantly reaching the office, asking information which could alone be given by the aid of such an index. The work of their preparation has, however, never been commenced. There are now sixty-four hundred volumes of patent records, containing thirty-two hundred thousand records. There are added each year eighty volumes, containing an average of five hundred patents per volume. To complete the work of indexing with that care which is requisite would employ the services of sixty clerks for two years.

I do not advise that this number be employed; but am of the opinion that a less number of clerks, and the allowance of a longer period for accomplishing the work, would be the truer economy. I am of the opinion that provision should be made for twelve clerks for this special work, to be kept employed until the work is brought up to date.

The present number of clerks authorized by law, including the chief clerk, is one hundred and fifty-four. This, I repeat, is the measure of the necessities of twenty years ago; the mere routine labor has since that time more than doubled. Work in the nature of investigation has increased much beyond that proportion.

Seventy-five clerks, in addition to those now allowed, could be constantly and profitably employed; with not less than forty additional can the current work be properly performed and arrears brought up. I urgently request that sufficient additional appropriation be made to permit of the increase to that extent.

This office holds the original evidences of title to real estate whose present value is estimated at a minimum value of $4,749,489,940, and every year appeal is made to those records for information, certified copies, the correction of mistakes, &c., in increasing volume. It is charged with the custody, survey, and disposal of unsold land which estimated at $1.25 per acre, aggregates a value of $1,272,752,946.

These figures alone sufficiently evidence both the importance of the Bureau, the enormous labor and responsibility now imposed upon it, and the certainty that for years to come additional clerical aid must be provided to meet its most ordinary requirements.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. S. BURDETT,
Commissioner.

Hon. J. A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. As I understand it, these additional clerks are really required as an addition to the force in the General Land Office?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Then why not add this number to the force of the General Land Office?

Mr. GARFIELD. These clerks have always been used in that way.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Pension Office:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, $3,000; deputy commissioner, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,000; medical referee, $2,500; twenty-six clerks of class four; fifty-two clerks of class three; eighty-four clerks of class two; one hundred and twenty-two clerks of class one; twenty-five copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; twelve assistant messengers; eight laborers; two watchmen; one engineer, at $1,400; and one assistant engineer, at $1,000; in all, $445,580.

Mr. RANDALL. Why is this increase?

Mr. GARFIELD. The letter of the Commissioner of Pensions will explain.

The Clerk read the letter of the Commissioner, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 19, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the fact that for more than two years past the clerical force of this office has not been sufficient to enable it to dispose promptly of the current work, and I therefore recommend that application be made to Congress for a temporary increase of the force.

The provisions of the act of March 3, 1873, increasing pensions of widows and children of officers and pensions allowed in cases in which there was but one minor child imposed upon this office a large amount of labor, which is not yet fully disposed of.

Since the passage of that act about thirty thousand claims of widows and orphans for increase of pension have been adjudicated under its provisions. In consequence of the additional labor imposed upon the office by the act referred to, the force engaged upon the claims of widows, children, and dependent relatives is in arrears with the current work, which, with the lapse of each year since the termination of the war, presents cases more difficult to adjudicate.

On the 30th of October, 1874, there were 33,717 original claims of widows, children, and dependent relatives pending, an increase since the 30th of June, 1873, of 4,112 in the number of pending claims of this class. But few claims of widows and children for increase under the act of March 3, 1873, are now presented; but as the claims of widows, children, and dependent relatives for original pension have accumulated, the office will not be able with its present force to take action upon them as promptly as a due regard to the interests of claimants demand. A large addition to the work of the division of the office engaged in the settlement of claims of invalids for pension was also made by the provisions of the act of March 3, 1873. Under the fifth section of that act, providing that the rate of eighteen dollars per month shall be proportionally divided for any degree of disability for which the second section makes no provision, a large number of invalid claims which had been adjudicated under the act of July 14, 1862, have been readjudicated. Of 16,123 claims for increase of invalid pension adjudicated during the last fiscal year, a large proportion were claims for the benefit of this provision. Claims arising under this provision are not yet fully disposed of. The provision of that act under which claims which have been rejected on account of the absence of record evidence of the cause of the disability or death of the person on whose account the claim was made can be reopened has also added to the work of the office. During the last fiscal year, 1,654 claims were reopened under this provision.

The act of June 18, 1874, providing an increase of pension for those persons who have lost a leg above the knee or an arm above the elbow, and also the act of that date providing an increase of pensions for those persons who are so totally and permanently disabled as to require the regular aid and attendance of another person, have caused a very considerable addition to the work of the office. No additional force was provided to enable this office to execute the acts referred to. With the lapse of each year since the termination of the war original claims for invalid pension presented require additional labor on the part of this office in order that justice may be done between the claimant and the Government. Owing to the death or removal of witnesses by whom the facts of the cases presented could have been proved claimants find it difficult to obtain the evidence required to enable the office to give a decision on their claims. In such cases the amount of correspondence necessary on the part of this office is much increased. From the combined effect of these causes the force engaged upon the claims of invalids has not been able to dispose of the current work. On the 30th of October, 1874, there were 28,215 claims for original invalid pension and 8,841 claims for increase of invalid pension pending, an increase since the 30th of June, 1873, of 5,287 in the number of pending claims for invalid pension, and an increase of 3,805 in the number of pending claims for increase of invalid pension. On the 30th of October, 1874, there were 61,932 claims for original pension of all classes, and 10,456 claims for increase of pension pending in this office. When claims cannot be promptly disposed of additional labor of answering inquiries in regard thereto, which would not otherwise be made, is required of the office, and the progress of the work is thus still further retarded. Justice, therefore, to all persons having business with the office appears to me to require that Congress should provide for a temporary increase of the clerical force. If there should be no further legislation requiring the reopening of cases heretofore settled, an increase of four clerks of the fourth class, eight of the third class, twelve of the second class, and five copyists will enable the office to dispose of the accumulated work, and to transact promptly business which may be presented.

Very respectfully,

J. H. BAKER,
Commissioner.

Hon. C. DELANO,
Secretary of the Interior.

The Clerk read as follows:

For photolithographing or otherwise producing copies of drawings of current and back issues, for use of the office and for sale, including pay of temporary draughtsman, $40,000.

Mr. MYERS. In line 1431 I move to strike out "forty" and insert "one hundred."

I desire to make a brief statement in this connection, and afterward ask a question of my friend, the chairman of the committee, which I hope will be satisfactorily answered. I believe the amendment I offer is in the interest of economy. It certainly is in the interest of the inventors of the country. By the act of 1836 the Patent Office was established, and it was directed that the moneys received into the Treasury from this source should constitute a "patent fund." That fund has now reached the sum of $806,000. Up to a few years since the Commissioner of Patents employed such aid as he needed, and the control of this fund, for the purposes of paying therefor, was to a certain extent within his power. A few years ago, however, we declared that no money should be paid out by the Commissioner of Patents except in pursuance of specific appropriations by law. Perhaps this was very well; but I propose to call the attention of the House to the fact that we have this very large sum, the result of the contribution of the inventors of the country, and the recommendations of the Commissioner in their behalf should have additional weight with us for this reason.

In 1872 we commenced the photolithograpic process for the Patent-Office Gazette, and also the photolithographing of the back patents. There are constant applications for these back issues. We received last year for all the copies, photolithographic and otherwise, $67,000. How much of that was due to the back issues I cannot exactly tell, but certainly one-third. If, however, as I am informed by the Commissioner, their reproduction by this method would be of great advantage, we ought to have all these back issues photolithographed at once. The Government would in a few years save by the present outlay; the inventors of the country and applicants generally would be benefited, and, above all, the examiners would be largely aided by the immediate reprint of all the back issues. There had been 122,304 patents issued by the Government when this plan, which has worked so admirably, was inaugurated, and the demand for copies from these is constantly increasing. I understand that the Commissioner of Patents appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and asked for the increase of appropriation I now propose. I feel especially at liberty to make this motion because I have been intimately connected with the subject, and because this system of photolithographing the drawings of patents every week as issued having been adopted upon my own motion. The work of thus reproducing the back issues has to be done. Do not let us do it by dribbles. I hope my friend from Ohio will support this amendment. It certainly would be gratifying to the people of the country most interested; and I refer to the large sum now in the Treasury known as the "patent fund" merely to recall the fact that in paying this additional sum now we shall do so from money which has been reaped from the inventors of the country. We should consult their best interests, and in doing so will always best develop the inventive genius of our people. Will the chairman [Mr. GARFIELD] give me a good reason why this should not be done?

Mr. GARFIELD. There is a great deal of force in what the gentleman says in regard to the importance of the reproduction of the back issues of patents. The Commissioner of Patents was before the Committee on Appropriations and pressed that matter. We propose to make an amendment in the next clause, allowing the Commissioner to use any portion that may be left of the $40,000 connected with the Official Gazette for this very matter referred to by my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MYERS.] We think that is as far as we ought to go, for two reasons; first, we ought not to make any larger appropriation than is indispensable. And, second, they are so overcrowded for room in the Patent Office that if we should give them $60,000 additional in this clause it would require the employment of some seventy-five copyists and draughtsmen, and there is not room enough in the Patent Office building for them. They would be compelled to rent a large building, at a great expense, for their accommodation. We think it better to appropriate enough to fill up the rooms we have, and by taking a little longer time we can get the whole work done.

Mr. MYERS. How much does the gentleman think will be left of the other appropriation?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know how much; whatever it is, we propose to give for this purpose.

Mr. CONGER. The amount reported by the Committee on Appropriations for drawing and photolithographing is so near that recommended by a former Commissioner and the present Commissioner—and as this is a new business, one commenced within a few years, the amount appropriated in this bill for drawing and lithographing being $155,000—I myself feel very much pleased that the committee have, in pursuance of the recommendation of the Commissioner and the Committee on Patents, made so liberal an appropriation. I think it very necessary and essential to the interest of inventors, who pay all these expenses in the end, that as large an amount as it is possible shall be appropriated. And the amount here proposed is so liberal, that I cannot ask for an additional appropriation. I think myself this appropriation will be sufficient, considering the room there is for these workmen, to carry on this process of photolithographing—sufficient for this year. And I shall hope that another year an appropriation might be made sufficient to bring up the photolithographing of all the back issues of patents for the use of those who have paid millions of dollars for Patent Office expenses.

Mr. MYERS. I will not press my amendment further, although I wish it might be carried into effect this year. But in accordance with the judgment of both the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Patents I will withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For photolithographing or otherwise producing plates for the Official Gazette, including pay of employés engaged on the Gazette, $40,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend the paragraph just read by inserting after the word "Gazette," where it last occurs, the words "and for making similar plates of patents issued between July 1, 1869, and January 1, 1872."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Education:

For the Commissioner of Education, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class four; one statistician, with the compensation of a clerk of class four; one clerk of class three; one translator, with the compensation of a clerk of class three; one clerk of class two; four copyists, at $900 each; one messenger, $840; and one watchman; in all, $18,360.

Mr. MONROE. I wish to move several amendments to this paragraph. I will begin with one to increase the number of clerks of class four from one, as proposed in this paragraph, to two. If, after the explanations I shall give, the Committee of the Whole shall see fit to adopt this amendment, I shall move two or three others, the object of the whole of which will be to restore this paragraph to the condition in which it was in the estimates as they were forwarded from the Bureau of Education.

I am aware that in the mood in which we naturally and, I must add, very properly all are, to cut down expenditures, it is not a very pleasant duty to rise in the midst of this committee and propose to increase an appropriation. As I almost always vote with the Committee on Appropriations for reductions, I certainly would not move an increase of appropriation here if I had not become convinced of my own personal knowledge that it was my duty to do so. The duties which I have been called upon to discharge in connection with the committees of which I am a member have led me to pass much time in the Bureau of Education. I think I can clearly say that I have a personal knowledge to a large extent of the value and importance of the work that that Bureau is called upon to perform. And I am prepared to say, on my responsibility in my place here, that I believe the estimates which were furnished by the Commissioner of Education in regard to the clerical force which he needed and the appropriations which he required were made just as low as they could be made. It has been the habit of the Commissioner of that Bureau, in accordance with the suggestions made to him, to put his estimates just as low as he can put them and efficiently and properly discharge the duties of that Bureau. And it is my opinion, from personal observation, that the bill of the Committee on Appropriations has cut down his estimates so low that his force will be so reduced that he cannot carry on the work of his office with proper efficiency.

Now, I say this positively, and I beg leave to call the attention of the committee for a moment to the comparative force allowed and the comparative appropriations made in this bill: first, for the Department of Agriculture; second, for the Bureau of Statistics; and, third, for the Bureau of Education.

If the committee will compare for a moment the work which these several Departments have to do and then compare the appropriations made by the Committee on Appropriations for them, I think they can but feel the appropriations for the Bureau of Education are fixed far too low. Why, sir, in the Treasury Department the head of the Bureau of Statistics corresponds, I suppose, with all the boards of trade in all the principal cities and towns of the United States. Well, the Commissioner of Education must correspond with all the principal cities and towns. The head of the Department of Agriculture must correspond with all the county agricultural societies and other like associations. Well, sir, the Commissioner of Education (and I may say it is but a small part of his duty) has to correspond with every county in the United States. Indeed, the work of correspondence in that office has become something wonderful; something which any member of this House would scarcely believe if he had not personal knowledge of it. I happen to know the fact that the number of regular correspondents of the Bureau of Education—the number of regular correspondents connected with schools, colleges, libraries, and educational institutions of all sorts in all the cities and towns and States and Territories of the Union—is now more than eight thousand. In order that the committee may understand a little of the extent and importance of the correspondence in that Bureau, I ask the Clerk to read this very brief paper, which will give the committee some idea of the variety and great number of parties with which that Bureau has to correspond:

The Clerk read as follows:

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE BUREAU OF EDUCATION.—The correspondence of the Bureau at the close of this sixth year of its existence reaches to the 48 States and Territories, to 206 cities, 132 normal schools and normal departments, 144 business-colleges, 54 Kindergärten, 1,455 academies, 103 schools especially engaged in preparing pupils for the colleges, 240 institutions for the higher training of young women, 383 colleges and universities, 73 schools of science, 115 of theology, 37 of law, and 98 of medicine; with 583 libraries, exclusive of those connected with institutions of learning, 26 art-museums, 53 museums of natural history, 6 art-schools, 40 institutions for the instruction of deaf mutes, 28 for the blind, 9 for the feeble-minded, 400 for orphans, and 45 for the reformation of misguided youths. The list of institutions in correspondence with the Bureau, already over 4,000, is steadily increasing, and must increase, with the growth of population and of schools, to fully 5,000, while that of individual correspondents, now much over 8,000, must soon reach a far greater number.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. STORM. I do not care to speak on this question, but will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE.]

Mr. MONROE. I am much obliged to the gentleman, because I very much need a few minutes more in order to get these facts before the committee. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there are large portions of this Union in which school-systems of all sorts are in a state of formation, are in their infancy. You would have no conception, if you were not daily in that office, of the enormous number of letters coming from every section asking for information on an immense variety of subjects, information about building school-houses; plans for building, heating, and ventilating; systems of instruction; and the thousand questions which you, who are familiar with this matter, will at once understand, so that the regular correspondence of the office has become something immense; and my impression is, although I am not as familiar with these other Departments—the Bureau of Statistics and the Bureau of Agriculture—as I am with the labor of this Bureau, it is much larger than either of the others in this respect.

Now, in view of this brief exhibit of the labor of these different Departments, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the very different provision made for the work in them. I have it here before me from authentic sources. I do not make this comparison for the purpose of securing any reduction of the appropriations for these other Departments. I have cheerfully voted for them, because I am one of those who believe we cannot have too much light in this place on any great question pertaining to the common welfare. I am always ready to join in the cry for light. Give us more light. It is the one principal condition next that of honest purpose in having any useful legislation in this House. We cannot debate intelligently, we cannot vote intelligently, least of all we cannot legislate usefully, unless we understand the condition of the country in regard to those great interests. Now, what is the comparative provision made for these other Departments? I turn to the bill of this Committee on Appropriations, and I find this year they propose to give to the Department of Agriculture in round numbers about forty clerks. They propose to appropriate $185,000 for that Department. I come next to the Bureau of Statistics. They propose to give it about forty clerks and about $70,000. When we come to the Bureau of Education, we find that this Committee on Appropriations give that Bureau not $185,000, not $70,000, but $35,000. They propose not to give them forty clerks, but only ten clerks. The comparison in detail is as follows:

Comparison between the amounts allowed to the Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Statistics in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior; the first and last from the recommendations of the House Committee on Appropriations, the second from the Official Register for 1873.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Salaries of Commissioner, chief clerk, entomologist, chemist, assistant chemist, superintendent of gardens, statistician, disbursing clerk, superintendent of seed-room, librarian, botanist, microscopist, four clerks at $1,800, five clerks at $1,600, six clerks at $1,400, seven clerks at $1,200, and twenty-four others	$77,180 00
For collecting statistics and compiling and writing matter for monthly, annual, and special reports, as provided	15,000 00
For other purposes	92,950 00
Total for 1875-'76	185,130 00

BUREAU OF STATISTICS, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Salaries of Chief, chief clerk, and thirty-six other clerks and eleven other employés	$63,060 00

All other expenses of this office are provided for in the appropriations for the office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

BUREAU OF EDUCATION, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Salaries of Commissioner, chief clerk, statistician, translator, three clerks, and six other employés	$18,360 00
For collecting statistics and compiling and writing annual and special reports, &c.	11,000 00
For other purposes	6,210 00
Total for 1875-'76	35,570 00

The amendments I propose, if the committee will sanction them and allow me to complete what I wish to add to the paragraph, will give the Department of Education something like five clerks more, if I have reckoned correctly, and that is all. It will give them fifteen or sixteen clerks, instead of ten or eleven; and I know, Mr. Chairman, that that is the lowest force with which the work of that office can be properly and efficiently done.

I wish to ask the committee if they think this is a time in our country, when the general diffusion of knowledge is so necessary, when the common education of the whole mass of the people has become in the opinion of all sound thinkers indispensable to the very national existence and the national life, and certainly indispensable to any real and grand national prosperity—I wish to ask the committee if they think this is a time to begin to take off this small portion from the estimate furnished by the Commissioner of Education of what is necessary in order to carry on this work?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HALE, of Maine. We find that when this appropriation bill comes up an attempt is always made to aggrandize the Bureau of Education. There are evidently many men here who believe that because education is a good thing for the people, and because culture and intelligence are important, therefore it is the business of Congress to appropriate money so long as there is a popular demand for more education. If I believed that, Mr. Chairman, I should agree with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE,] that the sum of money appropriated in this bill is very meager. Seventeen thousand dollars spread over the Territories and population of the United States as a means of furnishing education and educational facilities is a very small amount. It is a mere bagatelle. It can do but little. If there were not provided in the different States of the Union systems of education, appropriated for by the several States, institutions for education upheld by the benefactions of money and lands from the States, there would then be great cause why we should raise this amount from $17,000 to $170,000, or $1,700,000.

But the fundamental error of all this argumentation, all this talk in favor of increasing the appropriations to this Bureau, in my mind lies here: that it is not the business of the Government of the United States under our laws and the spirit of the Constitution to build up a great directing educational establishment. That, I believe, we have never heretofore tried to do; and, in limiting this appropriation and guarding it to the extent that we have always guarded it, we have borne in mind and maintained this principle.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] says that there are numerous inquiries constantly being received from all parts of the country as to educational matters. Undoubtedly; but it is not the province of Congress to furnish a directing bureau of education to say to a correspondent in Iowa, or in Maine, or in Massachusetts, or in California, that such and such a system should be established; and when you magnify this Bureau and begin to extend it, it is a sure step in the direction of a supreme and directory Bureau. All of these things begin in this small way.

I, for one, assent that there shall be here, under the direction of the Department where it is placed, a small Bureau that shall from time to time perform what may perhaps be called statistical labor, in the gathering of reports from different States and different countries, and yearly, or oftener, if deemed advisable, presenting a report, so that the public may see, to this extent, what is going on. For that purpose and in that purview, I believe, lies all that should be given to this Bureau.

I think the appropriation given in this bill is ample. There is a clerical force besides the superintendent or Commissioner of the Bureau, as he is called, of some twelve or fifteen men. Now the amount of figures or statistics that may be collected and reported on this subject-matter without the Bureau taking any directory charge of education must be very large. I find no fault with the accomplished chief of this Bureau. I believe he does his work well and works his clerks well. He is an enthusiast in his business and believes, as all such men do, that this is the one important feature of the Government. He believes all the time that he ought to be sustained; and being a man of that sort, active, and energetic, I have no doubt he keeps his clerks well at work, and that with the force we have given him in this narrow path in which we directed him to tread he has done his best. But I do not believe in going on and swelling this appropriation further.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] at the end of his remarks admitted everything that the mover of this amendment claimed. He stated that the Commissioner of Education ought to have fifteen clerks to do this work. And this is just what the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio demands, and no more.

The Commissioner of Education, confining the work of that Bureau to what the gentleman from Maine accurately defines as its proper function—that is, supplying the different States and Territories forming their school-systems with such information of what is going on in other States and other Territories and other countries, by means of statistics as can only be gained by a central office, doing for the education of the country just what the Government does for its agriculture, just what the Government does for its commerce, just what the Government does for its inventions—requires a little larger force than is reported in this bill; and that is the whole of it. Mr. Chairman, I believe that every thousand dollars the Congress of the United States has appropriated to the Bureau of Education has already saved in the past, and will save in the future, $50,000 in police-expenditures and in expenditures for an army to suppress violence and keep order throughout our territory.

Two policies present themselves in dealing with the problems which are upon us; the one charging that ignorance is massed upon the one side and the other charging that disloyalty is massed on the other. Two parties present themselves; the one asks you to send down there bayonets and the other asks you to give them such aid as the Federal Government may properly do in increasing their intelligence and establishing their systems of education; one demands of the Federal Government bayonets, the other demands of the Federal Government such aid as it gives to commerce, such aid as it gives to agriculture, for educational purposes, in furnishing the necessary assistance in building up systems of education.

This is a request simply for an additional number of clerks to enable this Bureau to perform properly and efficiently the duties that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] has indicated as the proper duties of this Department. This is no political question. I am willing to appeal to gentlemen on the other side of the House whether those interested in education of their own political faith in States where the democratic party is in the ascendency will not testify that the aid, the sympathy, the valuable encouragement received from this Bureau has not been great? Is there not a growing feeling in all parts of the country, if I apprehend aright, in favor of this Bureau?

Mr. COX. I have listened to the gentleman from Massachusetts for many years in reference to this educational system. I am not only opposed to increasing the number of clerks in this Bureau, but I would be in favor of striking out the whole $35,000—everything pertaining to education from the Federal stand-point.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Or any other.

Mr COX. No, sir. It does not follow because a man opposes this Federal interference he is therefore in favor of ignorance. Ignorance makes that statement, not intelligence. I am opposed to this whole bureaucracy. I voted against the Freedmen's Bureau bill when it came here years ago, because I found no warrant in the Constitution for establishing an eleemosynary system. And so I do not believe to-day that there is any warrant in the Constitution for this system which is involved in the Educational Bureau.

The gentleman from Massachusetts undertakes to place this matter in the category of commerce, and finds a power in the Constitution for this purpose equivalent to that.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The gentleman totally misunderstood my point.

Mr. COX. Then will the gentleman tell me what he did mean?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I did not say that there was any power in the Constitution in regard to education like the power of regulating commerce. I spoke of the power to prepare educational statistics as resembling the power to take care of commerce.

Mr. COX. I will accept the gentleman's statement. I will say that I have been opposed to all this bureaucratic system, Freedmen's Bureau and all; ay, to the Agricultural Bureau, if you please. And what good has this Bureau done? It has depreciated the value of the State school-system. It has done no good except to collect statistics which could just as well be collected in some other mode. I remember well when this thing commenced with a small appropriation. It was then said by gentlemen on this side of the House that that was only the entering-wedge, and the institution has since grown until the people who seem to understand that powers are being aggregated in this Federal center have themselves spoken. And even the eloquent gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] was compelled, in addressing the State republican convention of Massachusetts, to say that the republican party had to call a halt in centralizing power or his party would be lost. I know they speak that way. I know that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] speaks that way to-day very well; but what we want is not so much talking, but something done really available in stopping these everlasting increases of appropriation. Sir, as I have said, I am opposed to the creation of all these Bureaus. The only way is to cut them up by the roots, and it will be done by the next Congress if not by this; for, although we may not have a majority in the Senate in the next Congress, we shall have power in this House to stop the passage of the laws.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I join issue with my friend from New York when he says there is no power in the Constitution under which to establish a Bureau of this character. You will find in the Constitution that Congress has power to do many things that are there set forth in the ninth section, and at the end of that section Congress has specific power to make all laws that may be necessary to provide for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or any Department thereof. There is no special power mentioned in the Constitution whereby Congress can institute a United States bank. There is no power in that instrument whereby there can be instituted a Bureau of Education or of Agriculture or a Bureau of Statistics. The question of the power of Congress was mooted when the question of the charter of the United States Bank came before the Supreme Court of the United States, and John Marshall, the greatest jurist that ever sat on the bench, decided that under that clause there was power to create such a bank. He said:

> Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to the end, which are not prohibited but which consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.

Under this construction of the Constitution we have created the Bureaus mentioned, for Congress has the right to decide whether such Bureaus are necessary and proper; if Congress decides that they are, the question of constitutionality ends.

Now, what is the object of the Bureau of Education? It is to collect together information to enable the States more effectually to carry out their systems of education. The Congress of the United States has power to call upon the citizens of the United States to perform certain duties, and as citizens of a State are citizens of the United States as well, we have a right to call upon them to perform national duties. We make them collectors; we make them inspectors of revenue; we appoint them to offices in the Land Department, and to other important positions; and it is right and proper that we should institute a system of education whereby they may have the opportunities to become fitted to perform the duties that we impose upon them. We do not propose by this institution to establish a centralizing and directing power over the educational systems of the States. We do not wish to interfere with or control them. All we ask, all we claim, is that we may aid the States in carrying out their systems of education, by furnishing them with information concerning the different plans of education that prevail throughout the nation, and thus enable them to select those which they think best adapted to their own condition.

I am glad to say that the educational institutions of this country, this Educational Bureau especially, are properly appreciated abroad, more so than they seem to be at home. There was an earnest demand at the Vienna Exposition that, for the education of the people of Europe, we should send abroad everything connected with the educational institutions of this country. We sent our maps, our desks, our school-house, all the machinery whereby we carry on our systems of instruction throughout the States. And out of the two hundred and eighty-five articles presented by the Educational Bureau we took forty-eight premiums, diplomas of honor, medals, and thirty more than were taken by all the rest of the United States together. There were forty-eight of these rewards given to this Bureau, while all the manufacturers and everything pertaining to the industry of the United States received but thirty diplomas and medals.

Surely this spoke well for the value of our means and appliances of education thus submitted to the inspection of the people of Europe. It was, I think, our greatest honor.

There is no reason that I can see why we should appropriate $175,000 to the cultivation of the soil of the country and only $35,000 to the education of the intellect of the nation. It is an unjust disproportion. It is far more important that our people should be educated than that the soil should be tilled. It is of the greatest importance that our people should have that kind of knowledge which will enable them properly to perform their political duties and appreciate republican institutions. It is not sought through this institution to dictate to any man what shall be his political conduct or to what party he shall belong. All that we ask through the aid of it is that we may be able to present to the people of the different States collected statistics to show both the benefits and defects of our State systems of education, so that we may select from the good and avoid those which fail to answer the purposes of their creation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say but a word, and then I hope we may have a vote. The Committee on Appropriations, I believe, were nearly unanimous in opposing any increase of these appropriations. For my own part I think there ought to be an additional appropriation for this Bureau, and I am led to the conclusion that I should follow my own opinion in this matter and vote for a small increase.

I rise, however, more particularly to reply to a single point made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] Now as hitherto he persistently represents this Bureau as an interference with the self-government of the States, as some attempt to centralize and control education by the Government. It is most distinctly and positively set down in the law that no such purpose is involved in it at all. That purpose is excluded by the language of the law, not negatively, but affirmatively excluded.

And I would ask the gentleman where he finds in the Constitution any possible right for us to obtain commercial statistics if we cannot obtain educational statistics as well? Is it any more centralization for us to obtain statistics of any kind for the information of Congress than for us to obtain information of this kind?

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will allow me I will say I was replying to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR,] who introduced a bill in 1871 for the establishment of a national system of education.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, yes; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] introduced a bill last year to change the name of a schooner from "Tweed" to something else; but that did not affect the merits of the Bureau of Education, nor did the bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. COX. It shows the tendency of the views of gentlemen on that side of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. The views of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] on the bill of the gentleman from New York showed the tendency of his views.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The bill introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR,] which the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] designates as a bill for a national system of education, was only a bill for the appropriation of a portion of the proceeds of the sale of public lands to the States in which there was the most illiteracy.

Mr. COX. I refer to another bill introduced in the Forty-first Congress.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. That bill applied only to the States where they had no school-system at all.

Mr. COX. I know.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the democratic party propose to signalize their coming into power by attempting to put out the eyes of the Government, to destroy their opportunities for obtaining intelligence as to the condition of the people; if we are to enter upon a system of building penitentiaries in which to lock up those guilty of crime, and are to take no steps for obtaining information as to whether it is not possible by a better system to avoid building penitentiaries, by adopting a course which would prevent crime, then it is time we should know it.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I desire to say to the committee that I cannot consider this question as one to be passed upon simply as a question affecting education. I hold that a member of this committee may be as warmly in favor of the highest degree of education and culture as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] or the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] and still be opposed to increasing the force of this Bureau of Education. And for this reason: the education of the people, the schools of this country, is committed, and should be committed, to the care of the localities in which those schools exist. There is no State in the Union that would sooner rebel against any Federal interference with its system of schools than the State of Massachusetts; there is no section of this country that would sooner resist any Federal interference with its methods of education than New England; and there is no section of the country, I believe, that has any better schools or any higher system of education. And this has come to be their distinction, because their people believe that they are the best guardians of their educational interests, and they do not care to have the views of other people imposed upon them in this matter of education.

It may be true that the information collected by this Bureau may be of some value. So you might create a hundred bureaus in this Government to collect information that would be of some value to the people. And those who press these appropriations upon our attention seem to proceed upon the assumption of that as the only question at issue, whether the information collected by this Bureau is valuable or not. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is not an element which should have the smallest influence in deciding this question. We might inquire into a great variety of subjects; we might get information that would be valuable upon large numbers of topics; we might print that information at the public expense, and distribute it throughout the country; and it might be a source of some profit to the people. But that would be no reason why our action would be warranted by the Constitution or by precedent. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] suggested that we had as much right to collect this information as to collect information in respect to commerce—commercial statistics. I apprehend, sir, that there is a wide distinction. The subject of commerce is committed to Congress by the Constitution itself. The subject of education is not committed to Congress. We have a right to collect information that may guide us in making tariffs, in imposing internal-revenue taxation, in regulating commerce, because legislation upon those subjects is a part of the duty of Congress under the Constitution; but no duty with respect to education is imposed upon Congress.

These Bureaus, when once established, are ready and willing at all times to magnify themselves; they can make work to do of course. I have no doubt that twenty additional clerks could be employed in this Bureau, and that General Eaton could find something for them to do, something that might be of value. But is that any reason why they should be employed? Is that any reason why we should enlarge the force? Not at all, in my judgment. I believe this matter of education, as was forcibly urged at a former session of Congress by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] should be left to the States, who are best able to take care of it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is the gentleman opposed to a Department of Agriculture, which is nothing but a bureau for the collection and dissemination of statistics?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I say with no hesitation that there is no more reason for a Department of Agriculture under this Government than there is for a department of boots and shoes, or a department of surgery, or a department of anatomy. These might all give information that would be of value, but there is no warrant in the Constitution for creating any such Department.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that debate be closed on this paragraph.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MONROE, there were—ayes 39, noes 59; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MONROE and Mr. COX were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 85.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MONROE. Mr. Chairman, I regard this expression as decisive of the question that the Committee of the Whole will not make so large an addition as I proposed in the speech I made awhile ago; but I apprehend that the committee might be willing to add one or two clerks of lower grades to attend to a portion of the writing of the office, which has been much neglected, and which I know to be much needed. I shall therefore make one more motion; and I hope this very moderate request will carry with it the committee. If I should be disappointed in this hope, I shall——well, "the court will reserve its decision" as to what will happen after that. I move to amend by inserting after the word "two," in line 1446, these words: "two clerks of class one."

Mr. HEREFORD rose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I submit that debate on this paragraph has been closed by unanimous consent. Of course amendments are in order. I asked unanimous consent that debate might be considered as closed on the paragraph, and I understood it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the paragraph.

Mr. HEREFORD. I submit that I was on the floor, and have a right to be heard. I rose for the purpose not only of opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE,] but to move to amend by striking out the whole appropriation embraced in lines 1441 to 1449. In this connection, I desire to say that I think it is high time this Congress should commence the work which we have promised the people to do, the work of retrenchment and reform. To-day, when thousands and tens of thousands of people throughout the United States are without bread, it is high time that the American Congress should redeem its many pledges of economy. I agree with my friend from New York [Mr. COX] and my friend from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] that there is no warrant in the Constitution for making one dollar of such an appropriation as this. There is a broad difference between making appropriations for gathering statistics concerning commerce and gathering statistics concerning education. The Constitution has in express terms given us power over commerce, but not over the systems of education. The sooner the American Congress allows the people of the States to govern themselves in reference to their domestic matters, the better it will be for the people of each State and the better it will be for the people of the whole United States. I am in favor to-day, as I ever have been, of allowing the people in these matters to govern themselves. Let us have local, home, self-government. There is too much government to-day by the Federal authority. I am opposed to this centralization of power. We should not take the power from the people and centralize it in the hands of the General Government.

Mr. Chairman, I wish I had time to-day to refer to a celebrated speech which a former minister of Spain to England made in this very connection, and where he gave as an instance his own government of Spain, which for over three hundred years had legislated for everything, taking all power from the people. He stated the result was, that although the nation for a time grew powerful the individual became dwarfed. Thus it ever has been, as all history teaches us, and thus it ever will be "until the last syllable of recorded time." The more the General Government exercises this power, the more you take away from the individual the privilege he ought to have, the more you teach him to rely upon the Government and not upon himself, of course the less reliance he will have upon himself, and the less will he make exertion to help himself, and the less will either the individual or the State develop itself.

I am in favor, then, of standing by the Constitution, and for that very reason I am opposed to the General Government imposing upon the people of the States any system of education. On the contrary, let each State attend to this matter for itself. If they are taught that they must do it for themselves, then they will do it, if not better than, certainly as well as, the General Government. I hope, Mr. Chairman, the whole paragraph, commencing with line 1441 and ending with line 1449 will be stricken out, and if it is stricken out the people will save $18,336 in this one item.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on this subject. If there be unanimous consent, however that all debate shall close on the pending paragraph relative to the Bureau of Education and the vote shall be taken upon the pending amendments, I will withhold my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and debate is closed on the pending paragraph.

Mr. MONROE's amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. HEREFORD to strike out the whole paragraph.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 21.

Mr. HEREFORD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. HEREFORD were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 35, noes not counted.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent, namely: Stationery, $2,000; cases for library, $500; library, $1,000; current educational periodicals, $250; cases for official records, $250; other current publications, $225; completing valuable sets of periodicals and publications in the library, $200; telegraphing and expressage, $200; collecting statistics, and writing and compiling matter for annual and special reports, and editing and publishing circulars of information, $11,000; fuel and lights, $275; office furniture, $250; contingencies, $1,060; in all, $17,210.

Mr. COX. I move to strike out the whole of that paragraph.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. MONROE. I beg leave to correct what I suppose is an error of the press in the printed bill. I do not know what the Clerk is reading from.

The CHAIRMAN. The printed bill.

Mr. MONROE. After the word "dollars," in line 1454, it is evident the following words, from the estimate furnished by the office, have been omitted: "current educational topics, $250." I suppose that is a mere mistake of omission, as the next sentence begins with the word "other," and from the fact the footing at the bottom of the paragraph includes it.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman's purpose can be accomplished by striking out the word "other."

Mr. MONROE. I withdraw my motion, as I see there has been a transposition of this item, and will therefore only move to strike out the word "other."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that in this paragraph there are various items for contingent expenses; and then, when we come to line 1462, we have "for contingencies, $1,060." Of course that is not the total of all the items for contingencies.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is for contingencies not otherwise named. We have followed exactly the language of the last appropriation bill.

Mr. COX. I move to strike out that item as indefinite.

Mr. GARFIELD. We always have to insert such an item.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. COX, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Surveyors-general and their clerks.

For compensation of surveyor-general of Louisiana, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $2,500.

Mr. MOREY. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out "$2,500" and insert "$5,000."

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations is willing to allow that amendment. The Department asked for $7,200. We are satisfied that the amount had better be $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that an increase?

Mr. GARFIELD. An increase on what is in the bill, but a decrease from the estimates.

Mr. MOREY. It is a much less sum than is estimated by the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not an increase over the appropriation of last year?

Mr. MOREY. No, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

For compensation of the Postmaster-General, $8,000; three Assistant Postmasters-General, at $3,500 each; superintendent of money-order system, $3,000; superintendent of foreign mails, $3,000; topographer, $2,500; chief of division for the office of mail depredations, $2,500; chief of division of dead letters, $2,500; chief of division of postal stamps, $2,500; superintendent of Post-Office building and disbursing officer, $2,300; chief clerk to the Postmaster-General, $2,200; one chief clerk to each Assistant Postmaster-General, at $2,000 each; one chief clerk in money-order office, $2,000; one chief clerk in office of superintendent of foreign mails, $2,000; superintendent of blank agency, $1,800; assistant superintendent of blank agency, $1,600; four assistants, at $1,200 each; two assistants, at $900 each; seventeen clerks of class four; sixty-eight clerks of class three; fifty-three clerks of class two; seventy-seven clerks of class one, four of whom are hereby authorized in lieu of four clerks of said class heretofore paid out of appropriations for mail locks and keys; and so much of this appropriation as is necessary to pay the salaries of two clerks of class four, two clerks of class three, and one clerk of class one shall be available from and after the 1st day of March, 1875, and the sum of $2,666.66 is hereby appropriated therefor: Provided, That hereafter no payment shall be made as salaries to clerks of class one, two, three, or four in said Department out of appropriations made for other purposes; fifty-seven female clerks, at $900 each; one messenger of the Postmaster-General, $900; one messenger to each Assistant Postmaster-General, at $840 each; five assistant messengers, at $720 each; captain of the watch, $1,000; and nine watchmen and twenty-seven laborers; one engineer, $1,600; one assistant engineer, $1,000; one carpenter, $1,250; one assistant carpenter, $1,000; one fireman and blacksmith, $900; one fireman, at $720; one fireman and steam-fitter, at $900; three female laborers, at $480 each; one stenographer, $1,800; and for temporary clerks, $10,000; making, in all, $473,518.66.

Mr. RANDALL. I find that there is here an increase of expenditure over last year of about $30,000. I would like to receive from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations some explanation of this. This is not a time when we ought to increase the number of employés in the Departments.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. TYNER,] to give the explanation sought by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is an appropriation for certain clerks here of $2,666.66. Will my colleague indicate for what officers this appropriation is made, and what is the salary for each office?

Mr. TYNER. The confusion was so great that I did not hear the interrogatories put to me by my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] and by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL. There is in this paragraph an increase over last year of about $30,000. We are desirous of knowing wherefore this is.

Mr. TYNER. I will answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania by saying that the paragraph provides for the appointment of about seventeen—I believe precisely seventeen clerks more than the corresponding paragraph in the appropriation bill of last year. Of these, three are of class four, five of class three, three of class two, and six of class one; making, in all, seventeen.

Mr. RANDALL. What is their aggregate salary?

Mr. TYNER. I have not a memorandum of that before me. The gentleman can easily determine that by taking the fourth-class clerks at $1,800, and so on, and summing up the amounts.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought the gentleman had the figures before him.

Mr. TYNER. I have not; but I will say to the gentleman that six of this number are simply intended as transfers, appropriations being now made for them elsewhere.

Mr. RANDALL. And are there reductions in the other items corresponding to this increase?

Mr. TYNER. If the gentleman looks at the paragraph he will see that some of these clerks have heretofore been paid out of the appropriation for locks and keys in the Post-Office Department; and when we come to the post-office appropriation bill it is my intention, if I should have charge of that bill, to move a reduction in that item so as to make it correspond with this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

Mr. GARFIELD. I see there is a necessity for a verbal amendment on line 1563. After the word "laborers" these words should be inserted: "at $720 each."

Mr. KELLOGG. The law fixes the rate to be paid to laborers.

Mr. GARFIELD. It does; but we have inserted the amount in this bill elsewhere.

The question being taken on Mr. GARFIELD'S amendment, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department: For stationery, $9,000; fuel for the General Post-Office building, including the Auditor's Office, $7,400; for gas $4,500; plumbing and gas fixtures, $4,000; telegraphing, $3,000; painting, $2,500; carpets, $5,000; furniture, $5,000; keeping of horses, and repair of carriage, wagons, and harness, $1,200; hardware, $1,200; for rent of house numbered 915 E street northwest, $4,200; miscellaneous items, $9,000; making, in all, $56,000.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I offer the following amendment:

In lines 1585, 1586, and 1587 strike out these words: "for rent of house No. 915 E street northwest, $4,200."

I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he knows the facts in connection with the renting of that house?

Mr. GARFIELD. When inquiry was made by the Committee on Appropriations in regard to it, we were informed by the Postmaster-General that the amount of work put upon him by the last Congress required more force; and when that force was appointed to do the work it was necessary for him to put one whole division of his force into another building. He made all the effort he could to secure a suitable building, and the best he could do was to rent this one; and he has put into it the topographical division of the Department, which is in charge of the preparation of maps for the various agencies, &c.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I would further ask the chairman of the committee, from whom the house was rented?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know the details of the contract at all.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I would ask the chairman of the committee by whom the contract was made for the renting of the property?

Mr. GARFIELD. By the Postmaster-General, I suppose. Postmaster-General Creswell.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I desire to submit to the House the substance of a statement which has been put in my hands in regard to that property. I am sorry that I do not have it here. This piece of property was purchased about a year ago at a trust sale for $13,000. The consideration named in the deed was $13,000, and I understand that in trust sales the actual consideration paid is set forth in the deed. Shortly afterward the Freedman's Bank, being the purchaser, made a conveyance of that property to another purchaser for the consideration named in the deed of $18,500, and shortly after that it was conveyed to another individual, who is very conspicuous in this city, at a consideration named as $18,000; and very soon afterward this property is rented to the Government at $4,200 a year for a period of five years.

I move to strike it out as unconscionable if these facts are true. They were given to me by a gentleman who says they are taken from the records. I was not aware until I heard it read here that this feature appeared in the bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I know nothing about the circumstances of the case except that the building was rented, and at that time the head of the Department presumably had a right to make the rental. If there was a contract made, does not the gentleman think it should be examined before we strike out the appropriation? Let me say that at the last session the Committee on Appropriations put its foot sternly upon all renting of outside buildings. We found the different Departments had taken buildings outside at large rents; at some places too large, we thought. A clause was embodied in one of the appropriation bills providing that after that there should be no rental of any property in Washington outside of Government buildings, except upon estimates made to Congress and appropriations therefor.

Mr. SPEER. Does the gentleman state that the Postmaster-General has authority of law to rent buildings as he pleases?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Up to that time the power was exercised by various heads of Departments, and I do not know that it was disputed.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Does the gentleman state that there is any authority of law for the Postmaster-General to make any such lease as this? I doubt very much whether the Postmaster-General did make this rental.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I know nothing about that.

Mr. SPEER. Who is the present owner of the house?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Mr. Alexander R. Shepherd is the owner of the house.

Mr. SPEER. That is what we expected.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It is what I never knew before.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I insist on the motion to strike out, and if it shall turn out that the facts are not as they have been stated, I shall be willing to do justice and what is right about it.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Do I understand the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] to say that there is nobody on the floor who knows anything about this appropriation?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. O, no.

The committee rose informally.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 974) to enable the supreme court of the District of Columbia to proceed with its jury business; and

A bill (S. No. 1009) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3032) to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, and proceeded with the consideration of the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire as a member of the Committee of the Whole very respectfully to suggest to the Chair that when the committee is acting under the five-minutes rule and the Clerk from the Senate arrives, he had better wait until the member speaking has concluded his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been the practice.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire simply to say to the gentleman from Maine——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] to order for speaking with his back to the Chair.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I am in order. There is a rule which allows a member to turn his back upon the Chair when speaking from the Clerk's desk. I rose to put a question to a member of the Committee on Appropriations and I turned to that member, as I had a right to do.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I did not mean to say that it was doubtful as to the authority to make this lease, but that before the provision embodied in one of the appropriation bills last year prohibiting such contracts I said I believed the heads of Departments had the right to make such leases. I suppose they had the right to do it under the general rules for conducting their Departments. There may be some doubt about it; it is a matter of law. I can only say that the right was recognized and acted on year after year and never interfered with until the Committee on Appropriations a year ago put a prohibition on the practice in one of their bills.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. If there be any doubt as to the right of the Postmaster-General to make such a leasing, we ought not to make any appropriation until that doubt is settled.

Mr. TYNER. I usually agree with the fairness and logic of my friend and colleague, but I am compelled on this occasion to say that the reason he presents in support of the motion to strike out this item does not strike my mind as a reasonable one. It is that the house belongs to Governor Shepherd.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. O, no.

Mr. TYNER. If there is anything else, I want my colleague to state it now, so that I may either admit it or deny it.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. It is because the amount that is proposed to be appropriated, according to my information, is an amount entirely disproportioned to the value of the property; it is unconscionable.

Mr. TYNER. As to whether my colleague is right on that point I do not propose to say a word. I propose only to explain the circumstances that resulted in the leasing of this building, and to state them precisely as they came before the Committee on Appropriations last year. Before the Postmaster-General rented this building he appointed a commission, consisting of five or six individuals, and charged them with the duty and right of examining every building for rent within two squares of the Post-Office Department. That commission did examine every such building, and received proposals for the renting of buildings so located, and they presented to the Postmaster-General a report stating the cost of each building, and this was the lowest rent offered.

Mr. SPEER. Who was on that commission?

Mr. TYNER. The commission was composed of some of the officers of that Department, together with some officer in the Treasury, whose name does not occur to me.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Was it Mullett?

Mr. TYNER. I am not able to answer my colleague, because the facts were stated verbally to the Committee on Appropriations, and I am depending now entirely upon my recollection as to what was then said.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I think that my colleague will find that it was Mr. Mullett.

Mr. TYNER. I do not know whether it was Mr. Mullett or not. But it does not matter who it was. If my colleague knows that there was fraud in this lease, let him charge it here, and then the House may be willing to bear him out in his proposition to strike out this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. TYNER] think it was a prudent thing for the Postmaster-General to bind the Government for five years, beyond the time he would naturally occupy the place?

Mr. TYNER. If my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] were to ask me if a certain house on Capitol hill was worth a certain amount of rental, I would say to him that I know nothing more about the rentals of buildings in this city than I do of buildings in London.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman not know that no private individual in christendom would pay a rental of 25 per cent. upon the full value of a piece of property such as this?

Mr. TYNER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is assuming that this property is of a certain value.

Mr. RANDALL. The deed states that it was bought for $18,000.

Mr. TYNER. I do not know that, nor does the gentleman from Pennsylvania know it.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that the gentleman's own colleague rises here and states the fact, and I believe it.

Mr. TYNER. I am not here to dispute that statement; nor am I here to defend the Postmaster-General, because this contract was made by an officer now out of the Department. I am here, however, for this purpose, to say that there was a lease for this building for a term of years, which lease has not yet expired. As to whether the Postmaster-General had the legal authority to execute any lease of that kind is a question I am not prepared to answer. I only know this: that the heads of other Executive Departments have been in the habit of making such contracts, and in every legislative appropriation bill we provide for the payment of the rent of the buildings so leased; and they have made such leases on precisely the same authority.

When this matter was presented last year to the Committee on Appropriations, the committee came to the conclusion that the entire practice of permitting the heads of the Departments to go outside and rent buildings was a loose one, to say the least of it, and they therefore provided by law that it should not be repeated in future, except by authority of Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. On yesterday I exposed a contract made by the same Postmaster-General, by which five times as much was paid for departmental or official stamps as was paid for the stamps in general use by the public; and here is another contract made by that very same official. For one, so far as I am able, I am going to put my foot upon such practices, and prevent any money being taken from the Treasury by this kind of contract.

Mr. TYNER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has introduced a resolution, which was referred to a committee of which he is a member, directing that committee to investigate the contract about which he has just spoken. That contract, however, is one which has nothing whatever to do with the proposition now before this committee; and I submit respectfully to that gentleman that his sense of propriety ought to have indicated to him the necessity of waiting until his own committee shall have made that investigation and submitted their report upon it before he dragged that matter in here to influence the consideration of the House upon another matter.

Mr. RANDALL. I know the facts from a veritable witness. And I tell the gentleman that I am not going to stand upon any decorum when I see a wrong done; the very moment I see such a head I am going to hit it.

Mr. TYNER. Nobody denied the gentleman that privilege; but he should be sure he sees the head before he strikes.

Mr. SPEER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. TYNER] concede for one moment the legal authority of the Postmaster-General to bind this Government for five years? If for five years, why not for twenty or fifty years? Is it not a subject for the action of Congress? And does it rest with any binding force at all until Congress gives it that force by law?

Mr. TYNER. Under the law as it now exists unquestionably the head of any Department would be compelled to seek the authority of Congress before he made any such lease. I answer the gentleman by saying that so far as I know there is nothing but custom which authorized the Postmaster-General or any other head of a Department to lease a building.

Mr. SPEER. That is a bad custom, and we will now begin to change it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying that I do not know anything about the merits of this particular lease; but we all know that some of the Departments have not buildings large enough for them to transact their business in. My friend on the Committee on Appropriations says he draughted that provision of law, and got it through last year, which prevents the heads of Departments from making such leases without the authority of Congress. Perhaps he will ascertain very soon, if he has not already, that the operation of that provision of law has not been such a saving as perhaps he intended. One of the Departments here has several buildings outside of its own, for some of which it pays a higher rent than it could now get them for under a new contract. But it has been decided by the Comptroller that under the law it could not make a new contract or renew the lease without authority of Congress.

If it were not for that provision a saving of from four to six thousand dollars could be made at once, I understand, by one Department alone in the matter of two or three buildings outside of that Department.

I say this for the purpose of calling the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the matter, so that some provision may be made whereby the heads of these Departments shall not be in the power of owners of real estate; so that they may have the necessary authority when they come to renew leases. If from four to six thousand dollars can be saved by a single Department in the rental of two or three buildings, the Department ought to have the power to save this sum.

Mr. KASSON. Why cannot the Department renew the leases?

Mr. KELLOGG. Because, under the provision inserted in an appropriation bill last year, all discretion on the part of heads of Departments is cut off; they cannot even renew a lease.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to call attention to the state of the facts in this case; that is, the legislative facts. This matter was very fully debated upon two former bills. I do not see that any discovery has been made or any fact brought forward that has the slightest bearing upon the merits of the pending proposition except one—the suggestion that the rate of rent in this case is too high. I never before heard, the Committee on Appropriations never before heard and never cared, who was the owner of the building. The question from whom the Postmaster-General shall rent a building is of no possible consequence. The question whether he pays a proper rent, a rent which is not too high, and gets a proper building for the business, is a question that it becomes us justly to consider. Now, the Postmaster-General, so far as I know, had no restriction of law upon him in this matter, no restriction except his own conscience and his own sense of duty. He was ordered by Congress to do a certain class of work. Congress did not point out where he should put his clerks. There was no law saying within what four walls they should sit. He believed (and I do not know anything to the contrary) that he had full authority to rent a building.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. GARFIELD] whether he thinks that because Congress has pointed out certain duties to be performed by the Postmaster-General he has therefore an implied authority to go on and provide the buildings necessary to enable him to discharge those duties?

Mr. GARFIELD. I take it for granted that if Congress empowers and directs the head of a Department to do a certain work, the law so empowering him implies and carries with it all requisite power to do all the necessary things to accomplish that object.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Then he could erect a post-office building.

Mr. GARFIELD. If he were ordered to construct a post-office building and were given a million dollars to do it, I suppose that the plan of the building, the selection of the site, &c., would all be entirely under his direction.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. But the difficulty with the chairman of the committee is that he is unable to inform the House that any such authority has ever been given to the Postmaster-General.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will hear me through I do not think that he and I differ very much in regard to this.

In the recess following the adjournment of Congress (and the law laying this particular duty upon him was passed the last day of the session) the Postmaster-General did proceed to make a rental of a building; and when Congress met the following winter he sent in a letter saying that he had so done, asking first a deficiency appropriation to pay the rent for the year in which he had made the rental, and asking furthermore a similar appropriation for the current fiscal year. The Committee on Appropriations looked over that matter. We could not find that he had exceeded the authority of law. Perhaps he did; but we did not find that he had. We believed, however, that it was unwise to allow an assumption of a right to rent a building because a certain duty had been imposed upon the officer. For this reason the Committee on Appropriations in reporting a deficiency appropriation last winter inserted a restrictive provision, the appropriation being in these words:

For rent of the house No. 915 E street northwest, for further accommodation of the clerical force of the Department, from June 6, 1873, to June 30, 1874, $4,448.86. And hereafter no contract shall be made for the rent of any building in Washington not now in use by the Government, to be used for the purposes of the Government, until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress.

Now, so far as I know, that is the first restriction ever laid upon the head of a Department in regard to rent of buildings. For instance, in the Second Auditor's Department at least three buildings have been rented and occupied for years and their rental paid for, although, so far as I know, there never was any specific line or letter of law authorizing them to be rented, except as we have carried out the rental obligations by appropriations for that purpose. The War Department has sometimes paid as much as $70,000 a year for rent. The Attorney-General's Department rents the Freedman's Bank building, and rented it before Congress made any appropriation for the rent. The Department of Justice was established, and there was no building provided for it. It proceeded to rent a building and occupied it, and then come to Congress asking us to make an appropriation for the rent. The Pension Office rented the Seaton house, a great hotel building, in which the clerks of the Government were put. We subsequently ratified the rental by appropriating money for paying it.

I merely say here that the business of renting rooms for the use of a Department is as old as the Government, and until that clause I have just read to you, so far as I know, not a line of legislation ever prohibited it before. The Committee on Appropriations, however, thought it ought to be prohibited, and put it on in connection with this very building, because we thought that was a large rent. But the gentleman in charge of the post-office appropriation bill, my friend from Indiana, [Mr. TYNER,] and another gentleman from the committee, were appointed a sub-committee on this subject. I never saw the bill and have no judgment about it. The Postmaster-General declared it was a large house, with a large number of rooms, and that the rent was not exorbitant. It struck me to be a high rent, and lest it might be a precedent that would lead to high rents under circumstances of that sort we put on the clause referred to.

Mr. TYNER. If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations intends to convey the idea that I as a member of the sub-committee reported this was not an exorbitant rent, I beg to correct him.

All that was done was to call the Postmaster-General before us, who said there had been a certain committee appointed to look into this matter and reported in its favor. I say to my friend from Ohio, as I have already said in this debate, that I have no idea of the rent of buildings in this city.

Mr. GARFIELD. I remember that a committee—a committee not of this House, but a committee appointed on the part of the Postmaster-General—looked into this matter concerning the rent to be paid for this building. The Postmaster-General himself stated to the Committee on Appropriations that it was the best offer he was able to procure for the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say if my friend from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] or any other gentleman on this floor has any knowledge which leads him to believe this rent is too high, and that we can now, without violating contract obligation, put it down, I am willing to put it down. Let it be reduced, but we ought not to strike it out of this bill. We are bound to pay a reasonable rent for the use of the building, and we are bound to pay the contract price of the rent, unless it can be shown the contract is an illegal and improper one.

Mr. SPEER. Why, the gentleman should not forget this appropriation does not go into effect until next year.

Mr. GARFIELD. But the contract runs for five years.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. It seems to me this is a very simple matter. There is no express authority of law for the head of a Department to rent property; but when we require him to perform certain duties which involve the employment of a large number of clerks and the possession and use of records and books, and make no provision for a place where that business shall be carried on, that implies the authority to provide such a place. But how and to what extent? Not to provide that place forever. We have not authorized him to carry on those duties forever. We have made an appropriation for a single year, and the incidental power to provide shelter for the clerks and a place where the records can be kept will attend simply on that appropriation. He therefore has no right, no authority, to bind the Government, either in law or honor, except for the year for which the appropriation is made. Here is an undertaking by an officer of the Government to bind the Government by lease for five years, which, if he may do, he may bind it for twenty-one years or for ninety-nine years. Now, we are called upon not to appropriate for the year for which he has made a lawful provision to do the work, but for a new year. Therefore it seems to me the House should properly appropriate a sum for the place to carry on that work which they think reasonable for the next year, without any regard to the five-years' lease which the Postmaster-General has assumed to make.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask my friend if he does not know enough about this matter to know you can often save money by renting for five instead of for one year?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Yes; and you can often save money by buying property instead of renting it.

Mr. KELLOGG. One word more.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Let me answer your first question. You might save by leasing for ninety-nine or one hundred and ninety-nine years instead of for five, and that would be a good argument in favor of a law to authorize the heads of Departments to buy or hire buildings for a long term of years. But, unfortunately for the gentleman, there is a much better argument on the other side, that it is a power too liable to abuse and corruption to be lodged in any one officer. Undoubtedly Congress will sometimes lose money by requiring an estimate to be submitted to that effect for authorizing a lease for a term of years to be made by anybody; yet on the whole it will save not only in money, but in an honest and pure administration of the Government by adopting the other policy. I hope, therefore, the committee will strike out, without any regard to this five-years' lease, so much of this appropriation as they deem to be in excess, or rather shall not be satisfied is required, because the burden on the Committee on Appropriations is to satisfy us affirmatively of its necessity.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire further to ask my friend from Massachusetts if it has not been the practice all over the country where we did not own Government buildings to lease buildings for post-offices for five years?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Undoubtedly it is. And it is to the correctness of that practice that this debate is addressed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] to strike out certain words.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I move to amend the paragraph proposed to be stricken out by striking out "$4,200" and inserting "$2,200."

Mr. TYNER. I would suggest that the committee by unanimous consent pass over this clause, so that more precise information may be obtained in regard to it.

Mr. RANDALL. O, no; let us act on it now. And then if we are wrong we can retrace our steps.

The question being taken on Mr. G. F. HOAR's amendment, there were ayes 66, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I move further to amend by adding these words:

Provided that the above sum shall not be deemed to be paid on account of any lease for years of such building.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I now withdraw the motion to strike out the clause.

Mr. RANDALL. I find an increase in several items of these contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department. Under the head of plumbing and gas-fixtures there is an increase of $1,000; under the head of painting, $500; carpets, $2,000; hardware, $400; miscellaneous items, $1,500. There is an aggregate increase of $6,900.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will remember that the Department has been fitting up the lower portion of the building, making an additional story of it. There will be twenty additional rooms.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the committee will sit until we get to the paragraph relating to the Department of Agriculture.

The question being taken upon the motion of Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, it was not agreed to.

Mr. DURHAM. I move to strike out the last word of the pending paragraph, for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the committee. The law requires that each head of a Department shall render an account at the end of each year of the contingent expenses of his Department during the year. Has that been done done by the Postmaster-General?

Mr. GARFIELD. That law was passed at the last session of Congress, in June, and the reports it requires from some of the Departments have come in. A part is now in the hands of the printer. We have not received that report from the Postmaster-General.

Mr. DURHAM. I simply desire to suggest that the law should be enforced. I have examined three different reports, and this is not in one of them.

Mr. GARFIELD. We expect to have these reports from all the Departments.

The Clerk commenced to read the paragraph making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3813) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

THE SINKING FUND.

Mr. DAWES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4042) making provision for the payment of the sinking fund, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

OHIO RIVER COMMISSION.

Mr. NEGLEY, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial from the Ohio River commission; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

NOLAN S. WILLIAMS.

On motion of Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Nolan S. Williams, executor of Alfred A. Williams, late of New Orleans, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and accordingly (at four o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. CESSNA: The petition of the Grand Temple of Honor of the State of Pennsylvania, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic-liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: The petition of Sons of Temperance of Washington, District of Columbia, of similar character, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a letter from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, inclosing a communication from the commissioners of the sinking fund, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, the petition of Daniel Genau, and others, to be paid for clothing taken by the board of health of the District of Columbia, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, the petition of John B. Hayes, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Nicholas White, of Washington, District of Columbia, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of citizens of the District of Columbia, for a free bridge at Georgetown, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: Papers relating to the claim of W. P. Haliday and S. B. Haliday, of Cairo, Illinois; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DONNAN: The petition of John B. Chapman, for relief, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOLMAN: The petition of Henry H. Robinson, esq., a citizen of Indiana, to restore the President's salary to the accustomed sum of $25,000 by a due repeal of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1873, and also for further legislation to recover any payment in excess thereof, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUBBELL: The petition of Caleb Green and 60 other citizens, of Central Lake, Antrim County, Michigan, for a post-route from Elmira to Central Lake, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of Samuel W. Abbott, postmaster at Menomonee, Michigan, to be reimbursed $5,510.50, stolen from his office in money and stamps on the night of September 4, 1874, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KELLEY: The petition of the Pennsylvania State Temperance Union, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic-liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LAMPORT: The petition of the National Temperance Society, of similar import, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LAMISON: The petition of Augustus Bacon, for compensation for services as engineer under military order, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: A paper for the establishment of a post-route from Cloverdale to Mercuryville, Sonoma County, California, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. PACKARD: The petition of Mrs. M. P. Willitts, of Brookston, Indiana, for increase of pension to widows and orphans, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PIERCE: The petition of Rev. A. A. Miner, president of the Massachusetts State Temperance Alliance, and others, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic-liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. POLAND: The petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars, of Vermont, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. STARKWEATHER: The petition of citizens of Connecticut, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. SWANN: The petition of Charles Myers, for back-pay and bounty, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia: The petition of Wade H. Powers, Wise Court-House, Virginia, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 18, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

RECEPTION OF KING OF SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the reading of the Journal of yesterday be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate take a recess.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Until what time?

Mr. CAMERON. Until one o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate take a recess until one o'clock.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to say to the Senate that the form prescribed for the ceremonies of to-day is that the Senators individually shall now, if they think proper, go to see the King of the Hawaiian Islands, who is in the President's room, and then we are to proceed in a body to the House of Representatives, where he will be received officially by the Vice-President and the Speaker of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion that the Senate take a recess until one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The recess having expired, and the Senators having returned from the Hall of the House of Representatives, the Vice-President resumed the chair.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of Ann Atkinson, of Washington, District of Columbia, praying to be allowed a pension on account of services rendered by her husband, Henry Toler, as a soldier in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. ALCORN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Mrs. C. J. Lake be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next at twelve o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. RAMSEY. There is a good deal of executive business, and I hope the motion will be withdrawn so as to let us attend to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will consent to that.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After half an hour spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 18, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. There are a number of ladies outside who cannot obtain seats in the galleries, and I move that they be admitted to take seats upon the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to admitting ladies on the floor of the Hall during the proceedings attending the reception of the King of the Hawaiian Islands.

No objection was made, and the permission was granted.

SETTLERS ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 1023, for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, be taken up and passed.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have little doubt that this matter is all right; but I shall object to the passage of any legislation in the confusion now prevailing.

BURLINGTON AND MISSOURI RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in further answer to the House resolution of June last concerning the Burlington and Missouri Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

OBSTRUCTION OF THE OHIO RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to obstructions to the navigation of the Ohio River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

NORTHERN SIOUX INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an estimate of appropriations required during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, for the subsistence of the Northern Sioux Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BALANCES OF APPROPRIATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to balances of appropriation for hospitals for the years 1872-'73 and 1873-'74; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BRIDGE OVER ALLEGHENY RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to a bridge over the Allegheny River at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ARMAMENT OF PERMANENT WORKS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the armament of permanent works, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FIRST LIEUTENANT WILLIAM HARPER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the petition of First Lieutenant William Harper, Sixth Cavalry, requesting to be relieved from stoppages against his pay amounting to $602, the value of forty-three Remington revolvers for which he was responsible and which were stolen from him; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

APPROPRIATION FOR HEAD-STONES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending that the appropriation of $1,000,000 for head-stones, under the act of March 3, 1873, be made permanent and available until the work is completed; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RETURNS OF COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in compliance with the act of the Revised Statutes of the United States, an abstract of returns from collectors of customs, showing the number of seamen registered as having received certificates of citizenship during the year ending September 30, 1874; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS FOR INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of May 29, 1872, sundry claims for Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

RECEPTION OF THE KING OF THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

At fifteen minutes past twelve o'clock, the Doorkeeper having announced the presence of the Senate of the United States, the Senate, headed by the Vice-President and Clerk, entered the Hall and took seats assigned to them upon the right of the Speaker.

At twenty-five minutes past twelve o'clock His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, attended by his suite and escorted by Senator CAMERON and Mr. ORTH, members of the joint committee of reception, entered the Hall and took his position in the center aisle, fronting the Speaker.

Senator CAMERON. Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to present to you His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands.

The SPEAKER. Your Majesty! On behalf of the American Congress I welcome you to these Halls. The Senators from our States and the Representatives of our people unite in cordial congratulations upon your auspicious journey, and in the expression of the gratification and pleasure afforded by your presence in the capital of the nation, as the nation's guest.

Your Majesty's appearance among us is the first instance in which a reigning sovereign has set foot upon the soil of the United States, and it is a significant circumstance that the visit comes to us from the West and not from the East. Probably no single event could more strikingly typify the century's progress in your Majesty's country and in our own than the scene here and now transpiring.

The rapid growth of the Republic on its western coast has greatly enlarged our intercourse with your insular kingdom, and has led us all to a knowledge of your wisdom and beneficence as a ruler, and your exalted virtues as a man. Our whole people cherish for your subjects the most friendly regard. They trust and believe that the relations of the two countries will alway be as peaceful as the great sea that rolls between us—uniting and not dividing!

Chief Justice ALLEN, of the Hawaiian Islands, said: I regret, Mr. Speaker, that His Majesty is so afflicted with a severe cold and hoarseness that he is unable himself to read the reply to your beautiful address, and he has requested me to do it, and with your permission I will read it:

Mr. SPEAKER: For your kind words of welcome I most cordially thank you. For this distinguished mark of consideration I tender to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives my highest sentiments of regard. It is in accord with the very courteous and generous treatment which I have received from the Executive department of the Government, and from all the people whom I have had the pleasure to meet since I landed on the shores of the Pacific.

I appreciate the complimentary terms in which the honorable Speaker has referred to me personally. For any success in government and for our progress in a higher civilization we are very much indebted to the Government and people of this great country. Your laws and your civilization have been in a great degree our model.

I reciprocate most cordially the hope for the continuance and growth of friendly relations between the two countries.

I am most happy, gentlemen, to meet you on this occasion.

The Speaker then left the chair and exchanged a few conversational remarks with the King, who thereupon withdrew from the Hall, accompanied by his suite.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the appropriation bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I call for the regular order of business, and I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. It is, which takes precedence, a call for the regular order or a motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of going into Committee of the Whole on the special order?

Mr. GARFIELD. The motion to suspend the rules, of course, for it suspends the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not entertain any business until the floor is cleared of those who were admitted to it by courtesy. The Chair desires to give ample time for retirement to those who were permitted the privileges of the floor for the reception, which has now concluded.

INJURY BY GRASSHOPPERS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Earlier in the day when there was so much confusion here I objected to the consideration of a bill for the relief of settlers who have suffered from the grasshoppers. I now withdraw my objection.

Mr. CROUNSE. I hope the bill will be now considered and passed.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be again read.

The bill (S. No. 1023) was read at length.

The first section provides that it shall be lawful for homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands, whose crops were destroyed or seriously injured by grasshoppers in the year 1874, to leave and to be absent from said lands until July 1, 1875, under such regulations as to proof of the same as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe; and where such grasshoppers shall reappear in 1875, to the like destruction of the crops of settlers, the right to leave and to be absent as aforesaid shall continue to July 1, 1876.

The second section provides that during such absence no adverse rights shall attach to such lands, but the settlers are to be allowed to resume and perfect their settlement as though no such absence had been allowed.

The third section extends the time for making final proof and payment by pre-emptors, whose crops have been destroyed or injured, for one year after the expiration of the term of absence provided for in the first section.

Mr. BECK. I object to that portion of the bill which provides for what may happen hereafter. I object to providing for injury done by grasshoppers that may appear next year.

Mr. CROUNSE. Rather than have this bill defeated, I will consent to have those words stricken out.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. This is a very important bill, one that will affect many land titles, and will give rise to many lawsuits. It seems to me it employs very uncertain language. It says that if a man is "injured or considerably injured," without placing any limit. It seems to me the bill should prescribe proof of a certain degree of injury, so many dollars to the acre or something that affords a definite and fixed rate. These measures that are enacted to cure some great public evil which appeals to our sympathies are the very measures in which come in the greatest defects of legislation. It seems so me that the Committee on Public Lands can bring in and ought bring in some enactment which will give a definite and clear description of the cases for which they desire to provide relief. Has this bill been before the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. TOWNSEND. This bill has been before the Committee on Public Lands, and has the unanimous approval and indorsement of all the members of that committee. There is nobody here but what knows the fact that for the last two years three or four of the Western States have been scourged by grasshoppers as if by fire, and the people there are now, many of them, in a state of starvation arising from the absolute destruction of their crops. The object of this bill is to give the men thus suffering the right to defer their payments to the General Government for one year, and to allow them the privilege of removing from their farms and going East to make a little money, allowing them to be absent six months from their farms. Otherwise, if they should absent themselves, as many of them must do in order to get the means of supporting their families, their lands will be forfeited, and pre-emptors and homesteaders might come in and jump their claims.

With regard to that portion of the bill which provides that the same privilege shall be accorded for any scourge from grasshoppers that may take place hereafter, that arises from the fact that it is very well known that the grasshoppers, after devastating the country during one summer, lay their eggs in the ground, and there is always a second crop of grasshoppers coming up the next year. It is to provide for that contingency that that section is in the bill.

Mr. BECK. I do not object to the bill, and I approve of all that has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TOWNSEND.] But when the first section was read I thought it was hardly proper for us to provide for calamities that may happen in the future. As to that which has passed, I think we ought to provide for it; but we ought not to anticipate evils that may never happen. That does not seem to me like wise legislation. But if the Committee on the Public Lands desire to go even that far I will make no objection, although I do not think it is a wise provision.

Mr. LOWE. Allow me to make a single suggestion as to the provision extending the benefits of this act to the second year. These grasshopper scourges come occasionally, once in eight or ten years. The first year they come they lay their eggs, and the following season there is a crop that will do some injury; but the season after that they leave, and are not to be expected again for several years. The remedy provided here for the ensuing year is a part of the remedy applicable to the previous season. I hope the bill will be allowed to pass, for if it does not pass soon it will be of no use at all.

Mr. McLEAN. I object to the bill.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. McLEAN withdrew his objection.

No further objection being made, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] calls for the regular order of business, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] moves that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the appropriation bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I beg to say a single word. We are approaching toward the close of the present Congress, and so far, during this session, I may say we have given no attention to private bills. We considered one private bill on last private bill day and disposed of it. There are honest people, not a few of them, in the United States, who believe that they have just claims against the Government. They come here, go before our committees, and their claims are examined and passed upon by our committees either favorably or unfavorably. It is certainly not the most favorable aspect of free government and its administration that such claimants find it so difficult to get a hearing upon their claims. And those who do get it are generally crowded into the last ten days of the session, when bills are passed under a suspension of the rules, with very little opportunity for investigation and inquiry. Here and there are cases, and there are a few of them, that are confessedly unconscionable and unrighteous jobs, and they get through Congress at that time, and not earlier in the session when they can receive something like careful consideration. I hope the House will grant this day to private bills, according to the rules. The appropriation bills will not fail. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] need not have the slightest concern on that point. Every one of the appropriation bills will pass in due time, and will receive all the consideration it deserves.

RAILWAY FROM THE ATLANTIC TO THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. HURLBUT, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Railways and Canals the bill (H. R. No. 1194) chartering a double-track freight-railway from tide-water on the Atlantic to the Missouri River, and to limit the rates of freights thereon, with an amendment in the form of a substitute; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. GARFIELD to go into Committee of the Whole on the special order, the motion was agreed to; there being ayes 91, noes not counted.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

For postage on seeds, reports, circulars, and letters, $52,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the chairman of the committee will explain this appropriation of $52,000. According to my view the recipients of these seeds ought to be required, and I have no doubt would be willing, to pay the postage.

Mr. GARFIELD. I should be very glad if they would. An appropriation of this kind was voted in last year by the House, not having been proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. The committee in reporting the present clause are simply conforming to the instructions of the House.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The only way we can get anybody to take these seeds is to pay the postage on them.

Mr. RANDALL. Then we ought not to buy seeds for distribution.

Mr. GARFIELD. The amount appropriated for seeds has for three consecutive years been increased in this House above the estimates and above the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations. If the House would return to the old line of expenditure on this subject, I would be very glad.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. This item for postage of seeds ought not to be struck out. These seeds are purchased and are to be distributed. If they are distributed the postage must be prepaid. If this appropriation for the payment of postage be struck out, the seeds which have been purchased will remain on hand, a dead loss.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well; I have not moved any amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of the district judges of the United States, including the salaries of the retired judges of the eastern district of Texas, eastern district of Wisconsin, and of the district of Delaware, $193,000.

For salaries of the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia and the four associate judges, $20,500.

For compensation of the district attorneys of the United States, $19,350.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to offer the same amendment to this clause that he indicated in regard to marshals; in other words, an amendment providing for mileage of the district attorneys.

Mr. GARFIELD. That amendment would be more appropriate upon the next paragraph, which has not yet been read. I will remark that a gentleman present has just informed me that a retired judge of the eastern district of Texas has recently died. If that be so, there should be an amendment in the clause making an appropriation for the salary of district judges. Perhaps some gentleman from Texas can state the fact in this matter. If not, the clause can be corrected, if necessary, in the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has made a suggestion with reference to mileage. I may state that a bill on that subject is now before the Committee on the Judiciary, and will be reported at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. CONGER. That bill may not pass.

Mr. GARFIELD. Any amendment on that subject will be more appropriate to the next clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of the district marshals of the United States, $11,900: Provided, That the provisions of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, approved June 16, 1874, which prohibits the allowance of mileage to persons holding employment or appointment under the United States, shall not be so construed as to apply to the legal traveling-fees of United States marshals or deputy marshals.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to amend by adding to the clause just read the following:

And all accounts of said marshals, or their deputies, for expenses and mileage incurred subsequent to the 1st day of July, 1874, shall be audited, allowed, and paid in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, in the same manner as if said act had not been passed.

I desire to state——

Mr. CONGER. I wish to offer an amendment to this amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I trust the gentleman will let me finish my statement. The clause which the committee now propose to add is designed to correct a construction of law which the Committee on Appropriations believe not to have been intended by the House in passing the mileage restriction last year. In the Army appropriation bill a clause was reported requiring that hereafter persons holding appointment under the United States should be paid actual traveling expenses instead of mileage, in accordance with the practice in the Army. The question was raised at that time whether this would apply to others than Army officers, and the general opinion was that its operation was restricted to the Army, because it was put upon the Army bill. But by a decision of the Attorney-General it has been declared to apply to others as well as Army officers. I am disposed to think that the strict letter of the law did apply to marshals and deputy marshals as well as Army officers. But these marshals and deputy marshals receive a very small salary, two or three hundred dollars apiece, the balance of their pay being expected to be made up by fees. The traveling fees allowed under the mileage law of 1853, a special act relating to deputy marshals, has been decided to be repealed by the provision in the Army bill of last year. The committee did not intend to reach this class of officers, but it has substantially taken away a large share of their pay in the form of fees allowed in that act. We therefore declare in this proviso we so far modify the proviso in the Army appropriation bill of last year as that it shall not apply to marshals and deputy marshals, but that they shall be settled with and their mileage fees paid in accordance with the act of 1853, under which they have hitherto been paid.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I now rise to move to strike out this proviso to the section under consideration. I had risen to make the point of order upon this proviso that it embraced new legislation, and therefore was not in order to an appropriation bill, but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, if I understood him correctly, has informed us that under a suspension of the rules the House had heretofore authorized such a provision to be submitted to this bill in Committee of the Whole. I was not aware its insertion had been allowed; but if so, it is in order, and therefore I move now to strike out the proviso.

To my mind, Mr. Chairman, this is another illustration of the viciousness of general legislation in appropriation bills. I do not myself believe the law passed at the last session of Congress was not intended to apply to marshals and their deputies. On the contrary, so far as I understood the debate at the time, the change was to apply to all civil officers. However that may be, the Attorney-General has decided the law does apply to civil officers generally. Now, it may work hardly in some cases, and some provision should be made for such cases, but I am satisfied that we cannot do justice to that subject by legislating upon it here. The Judiciary Committee has now before it, Mr. Chairman, a bill embracing this whole subject. They have considered it, and will, as soon as they have an opportunity, report upon it, and then the House can legislate independently and intelligently on the subject. I apprehend that under the system of mileage proposed to be revived by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio we shall again have great abuses in respect to certain mileage fees. We have upon our tables an executive document relating to this very matter. But this letter of the Attorney-General and the accompanying papers, so far as I have read them, furnish no reason for believing the abuses which existed under the old law will not continue if this proviso be adopted. It is well known that the marshals have been in the habit of sending through the mails writs to be served by some local officer in the district or county in which the person resides upon whom the writ was to be served deputizing him for the purpose, and when the writ is returned mileage has been charged for this constructive service. The method of service was proper, but the charge in such cases was an abuse. The abuses which thus resulted under the old law were serious and deserved correction, and will result from the restoration of the law in that respect if this proviso be adopted. I think it would be better, therefore, for the House to strike out the proviso altogether, and leave the Committee on the Judiciary to report to the House a bill in which this particular subject shall be treated by itself. I make, therefore, to apply when in order, a motion to strike out this proviso.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, as I had charge of the Army appropriation bill at the last session of Congress, I wish to reply to some attacks which have been made upon it. The Committee on Appropriations then made no report on this subject at all. This provision in the Army appropriation bill was put in on motion of the gentleman from Kentucky. I want gentlemen to understand, however, that the committee of conference and the House on that occasion knew precisely what they were about. This provision was intended to apply to marshals and their deputies. That there was great abuse under the old system cannot be denied. I am not able myself to agree in the action of the Committee on Appropriations in consenting to restore the old law. I think the Judiciary Committee ought to bring a bill in here providing for compensation to be paid by name; that is, that the service ought to be designated and paid for by name. These marshals and their deputies ought not to be paid constructive mileage fees. A marshal or deputy-marshal who has subpœnas to serve frequently sent them through the mails to some friend living five or six hundred miles off, not traveling a foot of the distance himself, and when they were returned served, pocketed the entire mileage fees. I think this should be regulated so we shall pay only for the identical service by name.

Mr. POTTER. Let us strike out this proviso, and let the Judiciary Committee report a bill to be acted on by itself.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I have taken occasion during the recess, in the office of the district marshal of Michigan, to examine one hundred cases, perhaps, of regular fees of marshals under the old law and of the fees which they would receive under the present law, as provided for in the Army appropriation bill of last year. In that one office deputy marshals have gone hundreds of miles to serve writs and arrest offenders, and have expended in the aggregate between four and five thousand dollars of their own money in the service of the United States, without knowledge any such construction had been put upon the law; for this construction by the Attorney-General has been made only within a very short time. To-day no marshal will take a writ, no marshal will dare take a writ, unless he is rich enough to bear the expense of serving his country for nothing; for that will be the effect of serving it under this construction of the law. The law allows two dollars for the service of a writ in an ordinary case. Even if it be sent, as the gentleman suggests, by mail to the deputy marshal four hundred, or five hundred, or one hundred miles off, requiring a service or an arrest, there is two dollars allowed and no mileage. The deputy marshal must go within the bounds of his bailiwick, wherever it may be—frequently in parts of the country where there is no public conveyance—at an expense of fifteen or twenty dollars, to serve the writ and return it by mail.

Mr. POTTER. May I ask the gentleman whether, if the marshal is obliged to pay the deputy for the service, he is not allowed for it now; not mileage, but the actual expenses?

Mr. CONGER. He is allowed according to a fee-bill only.

Mr. POTTER. He is allowed the actual cost.

Mr. CONGER. He is not allowed the actual cost.

Mr. POTTER. That is the law.

Mr. SPEER. He is allowed the actual expenses of traveling, but not the fees at so much a mile.

Mr. CONGER. Then suppose that to be the case; the actual expenses of traveling are computed according to the cost of travel by public conveyance, and not by the hire of teams in new parts of the country; not by traveling through the wilderness. And more than that, no man is allowed one dollar for expenses unless he brings a voucher, and the Department construes the voucher to be a fee bill receipted and certified to by the proper officer, and will not take even the affidavit of the party as to the necessity of the expense.

Now, whatever gentlemen may think about it, if they will go into the office of any marshal in the United States they will find there accumulated fees, not to the marshal, but to the deputies, to the amount of thousands of dollars, withheld from men who are little able to bear that expense.

This, with the last amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, restores to men their fees for services which they have performed before there was any announcement by this Government at all that they were not to receive the usual fees or the usual mileage. And has it come to this, and will gentlemen advocate it, that we will pass a blind law in Congress, and that it shall remain for six or seven months on our statute-books, and be a blind law in itself, and have no construction from any Department?

Mr. SPEER. There is nothing blind in the law, as will be seen if the gentleman will permit me to read it. It is as plain as the sun in the heavens.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman says so because his perception is so remarkably clear.

Mr. SPEER. Let me read the law, and I think it will be clear even to the perception of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. I have no doubt that the gentleman can see what others cannot see. As Shakespeare says,

> He has gotten him glass eyes, and like a needed politician,
> Pretends to see the things that he sees not.

No other man has seen this. All the other officers of the Government supposed that in an Army bill the law related to Army officers. I admit that my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] very likely knew that it was a sweeping clause which would receive this construction, and I suppose he moved it with full design and knowledge of what he was about, to bring this Congress into disrepute with all good men in the land, as it has done, and as always will be done whenever such blind laws are passed to affect, not the rich, not those who can bear such expenses and give their services gratuitously to the country, but to affect the poor deputy marshals who travel night and day, in rain and storm, to serve the processes of the Government at their own expense; and then months after this service has been rendered and their accounts presented to the Government they are told the Attorney-General has construed the Army bill to cut off all traveling expenses of the civil service.

I do not care for what purpose that section of the bill of last year was offered or intended to be offered. If it works hardly upon men who have rendered service to their country under the laws as they believed them to exist, then this amendment ought to be adopted by this Congress, and let them have their accounts settled under the law as they supposed it then existed and commence again with a plain law. I am free to say that I am glad that the Committee on the Judiciary have taken it in hand to revise this whole subject of fees and salaries of officers.

Mr. BECK rose.

Mr. CONGER. I am not quite done. I wish to move to insert in this amendment "district attorneys of the United States" before the word "marshals;" for the same rule applies to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Before the word "marshals" insert the words "district attorneys of the United States."

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say a word on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to speak on a new subject.

Mr. RANDALL. The rules were not suspended in relation to district attorneys. I raise that point, this is a change in existing law.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say a word on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the words used by the gentleman from Michigan in his amendment are in the amendment moved by the member of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no. The words "district attorney" are not in my amendment. I recite the title of the act. I say that those marshals and deputy marshals shall be paid, &c., in accordance with an act in the title of which the words "United States marshal" occur.

Mr. RANDALL. But there was nothing in the amendment of the gentleman to reach district attorneys.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no; there was not.

Mr. CONGER. Now, I ask the chairman of the committee to give me his attention for a moment. I do not wish to have any hard feeling about the matter, and especially with my friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] When my friend from Ohio made the motion that it should be in order to introduce the subject of marshals, I rose and asked him to allow me also to include district attorneys, and the gentleman in the hearing of the House said, "O, that amendment will be germane."

Mr. RANDALL. O, he cannot bind me.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman need not rise in that way. I do not propose to bind him at all. When that request was made of the House, and when the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said that an amendment such as I desired to offer would be germane, I did not object to his request.

Mr. GARFIELD. No, I did not say it would be in order.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman said it would be germane.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a question for the Chair to decide.

Mr. CONGER. The House then assented to this proposition on that statement.

Mr. MAYNARD. Does that appear on the record?

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman offered an amendment to the clause relating to the compensation of district attorneys, and I said that the next clause related to mileage, and that the amendment would be in order there——

Mr. CONGER. I am not speaking of to-day; I am speaking of the time when the gentleman moved to make this amendment in order.

Mr. GARFIELD. If I said what the gentleman alleges I have forgotten it.

Mr. RANDALL. That does not bind me anyhow.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will, of course, stand by anything I said.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. KELLOGG. I submit that the House is bound in good faith to carry out the agreement made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman unfortunately does not show his usual astuteness in making that suggestion. The House is not bound by any statement which may have been made by the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is not in order, because it changes existing law. The gentleman from Michigan responds that it is germane to that which was made in order by the House. The Chair rules that the permission to introduce new matter related specifically to the offices of marshal and deputy marshal, and under the resolution of the House, which he has before him, he feels bound to rule that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. Does the Chair rule that my amendment is not germane to the pending amendment?

Mr. BECK obtained the floor.

Mr. CESSNA. I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky to allow me to offer an amendment which I think will remove all difficulty.

Mr. BECK. That may be done hereafter.

Mr. CONGER. I feel the importance of this matter so much, that contrary to my usual practice, I shall appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can, of course, take no exceptions to the appeal of the gentleman from Michigan, but the decision of the Chair is in accordance with all precedents.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to my friend from Michigan that there is no rule of the House better settled than that when the House suspends the rules to make a matter in order in Committee of the Whole, only that precise matter can be brought before the committee and nothing more.

Mr. CONGER. Is it now the rule of the House to admit anything as an amendment which relates to the matter for which the House suspended the rule?

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all. The House admitted this identical matter and no other. Everything is germane as an amendment which does not effect a change in the existing law in regard to the matter embraced in the amendment admitted.

Mr. CONGER. I will withdraw the appeal. But I desire to say a word in answer to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think this debate is in order.

Mr. CONGER. When the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations makes such statements as to mislead me, he has done it for the last time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say that I should be very unwilling to have any gentleman here, particularly my friend from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] suppose that I would act in any kind of bad faith in regard to this matter. If I gave my word that I would help to put that clause on, I would do all in my power to do it. If I did so I have forgotten it. I did not make the point of order against the gentleman, but being made by others, it is beyond my control.

Mr. BECK. I did not expect to take part in this debate at this time, and would not now but for the fact that attention has been called to a provision of the Army appropriation bill passed at the last session of this Congress, to which bill I had the honor to offer an amendment that became part of the law, which I will read:

Provided, That only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed to any person whatever in the service of the United States, and all allowances for mileage or transportation in excess of the amount actually paid are hereby declared illegal, and no credit shall be allowed to any of the disbursing officers of the United States for payment or allowance in violation of this provision.

Suggestions have been made here to-day that the House then understood that provision as applying only to officers of the Army and Navy. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] very properly states that it was intended to apply to all the officers of the United States. It was discussed freely before the House when it was offered, and in that discussion I took occasion to say:

If I may be allowed another word, I would say that I am afraid the committee do not fairly comprehend the scope of the amendment. My intention by this amendment is to apply it to all persons, no matter whether in the Army, the Navy, or anywhere else, so as to pay them actual expenses and make all their other allowances equal.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] announced the same fact in some remarks that he made, and so did a number of other gentlemen. No suggestion was then made that there was any misunderstanding about it, as in my judgment none could properly be made.

Mr. KELLOGG. Did not the gentleman refer to civil employés in the Treasury Department and other Departments? Is there a word in that debate in reference to officers serving process?

Mr. BECK. I do not know what other gentlemen had in their minds; I know what I had reference to. I was advised by gentlemen on all sides that the grossest abuses had grown out of the practices of marshals and deputy marshals in their charges. I hold in my hand a report made at the last session, Report No. 620, which every member ought to read, in which the fact was made to appear that the moneys paid to the marshals in the western district of Arkansas alone, from June 30, 1871, to June 30, 1873, were $724,059.29; while up to that time the average expenses of that district did not exceed $24,000 a year. And testimony was had (it is here in this document) showing that the greater portion of that amount was for fraudulent constructive traveling expenses, for work never done, for traveling never thought of; that men often were brought ten miles only or summoned on the spot, and mileage charged from Washington and back. I regarded that as one of the grossest abuses that could possibly exist.

I do not want marshals or deputy marshals to work for nothing; I want all men paid fair fees for labor performed. But I want this constructive mileage cut off. And if the law does not allow them pay enough without allowing them to rob the Treasury in this indirect and fraudulent way, then change the law so as to pay them properly. The record I refer to presents a flagrant case. Gentlemen will find on examination that the fees of these marshals and deputy marshals in other districts have been fraudulently increased in this indirect way. Why, sir, this summer proof was laid before the country, that in the State of Alabama men were carried from Northern Alabama to Mobile through two judicial districts, when there were commissioners in the county of their residence before whom they could have been examined; and all that was done in order to swell the fees of officials. If there is any abuse more flagrant than any other, it exists in this matter of marshals and their deputies.

Let this proviso be stricken out, and let the Committee on the Judiciary perfect a bill paying these men fairly and honestly for the work they do in the legitimate performance of their duty. But do not hold out to them the inducement any longer to defraud the Treasury and deceive the Government and the people. Whenever the opportunity comes—this is not the proper time, perhaps—I will show that this whole Department of Justice is a Department of flagrant injustice, and from its head down is rotten to the core; that it is hiding and concealing crime and perpetrating acts all over this country that are a disgrace to humanity.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CESSNA. I offer a substitute for the pending proviso and the amendment of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,

[Mr. GARFIELD.] The substitute is substantially the bill as agreed to and recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary, which committee has this subject before them.

The substitute was read, as follows:

That the proviso in the sixth paragraph of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1874, shall only be held and considered as applying to officers of the Army and clerks and employés of officers of the Army and of the War Department. And all accounts of attorneys, marshals, clerks, and all officers except officers of the Army and clerks and employés of officers of the Army and of the War Department, for mileage and for expenses incurred subsequent to the 1st day of July, 1874, shall and may be audited, allowed, and paid at the Treasury Department of the United States in the same manner as if said act had not been passed, and that for services hereafter rendered no constructive mileage shall be allowed or paid to marshals or other officers of the United States; but in auditing, settling, and paying such officers for services, allowance shall only be made for the number of miles actually traveled by them in the service of process or performance of official duties.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane, as it goes far beyond the scope of the provision authorized to be offered as an amendment.

Mr. CESSNA. I was fully aware that this point of order, if raised, would be sustained. But I beg the gentleman to withhold his point till I can make a single explanation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall insist on the point of order in any event; but I do not object to the gentleman being heard.

Mr. CESSNA. I wish to make a brief explanation of what the amendment covers.

The CHAIRMAN. If no objection be made, the gentleman will be heard.

Mr. CESSNA. I wish to say but a single word. The amendment I have offered is in the precise form of a bill directed to be reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. It embraces three propositions: First, it proposes to enact that hereafter the proviso in the Army appropriation bill of last year shall be construed and held as applying to Army officers only. In the next place, it provides that services rendered by other officers heretofore shall be settled and adjusted under the laws as they existed before the passage of that proviso. Thirdly, it provides that for all services rendered hereafter constructive mileage shall be abolished; that the abuse shall be removed; that the only allowance made shall be for actual travel.

I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will not insist on his point of order, because if the amendment be allowed to come in it will save the Judiciary Committee the trouble of making their report at some future time.

Mr. BECK. If the gentleman from Indiana does not insist on the point, I shall. The Army officers are those with whom there is least liability of abuse in this matter.

[The amendment of Mr. CESSNA was withdrawn.]

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I move to amend the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations by adding thereto the following:

But no fees shall be allowed for constructive mileage; and every claim for mileage shall be accompanied by sworn proof that the distance for which mileage is claimed was actually and necessarily traveled by the officers.

I believe that this amendment is not obnoxious to the objection which has been made upon the several points of order which have been raised heretofore. It provides that the fees of marshals, so far as they shall be allowed, shall only be for actual travel, and not for constructive mileage. Now, sir, upon that subject I desire to have read from the Clerk's desk a letter from the Comptroller of the Treasury, which relates simply to the mileage in the northern district of New York. It was secured for another purpose, but has some bearing upon the question now pending before the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1874.

SIR: In compliance with your request of the 10th instant I have caused an estimate to be made of the amount of mileage paid for travel, as shown by the accounts of the United States marshal, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873. Taking as a basis the mileage contained in the vouchers accompanying the account for one of seven sessions of the courts held during the year, it is estimated that the allowances for the whole year amounted to $23,000, of which about $10,000 was for travel going to serve process, and about $13,000 was for travel of deputies and guards with prisoners.

What part of the travel was constructive I am unable to say. The charges in the accounts are made as if travel was actually performed in all cases.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. TAYLER,
Comptroller.

Mileage paid to witnesses by the marshal amounted to about $24,000. The district attorney's mileage amounted to $10,334.

Hon. H. BOARDMAN SMITH,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] or the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] desires to insist that these marshals shall collect their pay henceforth for constructive mileage. I concede that some amendment of the act passed at the last session should be adopted; but if this constructive mileage is restored, we restore an abuse of the very greatest magnitude, which has been very fully explained heretofore. Why, sir, in my own district a subpœna writ, for instance, sent from the city of Buffalo to a deputy marshal upon Lake Champlain, is served and returned to Buffalo at an expense of two postage-stamps; yet mileage is charged for nearly five hundred miles.

Mr. MAYNARD. And for every witness named in the subpœna.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. And my friend adds for every witness named in the subpœna. The result of this is that the expenses of litigation in a civil action are so enormous that when a man in my district is sued in the district or circuit court he prepares himself to go into liquidation.

Mr. CONGER. The law now provides expressly that there shall be but one mileage charged for witnesses in the same subpœna.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I was incorrect in what I stated. The law provides that there shall be but two mileages for service at the same place. I was incorrect before; the gentleman is incorrect now. I desire to have read from the Clerk's desk a part of a letter which was received during last winter from the district judge of New York, who is now dead.

The Clerk read as follows:

The distance from Buffalo to the extreme northeastern corner of the district and other points in the district, by the ordinary routes of travel, is nearly or quite five hundred miles; and in a large proportion of the cases in court witnesses are subpœnaed and attend at a court from one hundred and fifty to five hundred miles from their places of residence. The mileage of these witnesses and of the deputy marshals is enormous, as you can see by examining the accounts of the marshal for the last January term of the district court, when the fees of witnesses amounted to $5,625.50, and of deputy marshals embraced in the term accounts amounted to $4,635.78. (See also marshal's accounts for January, March, and May terms, 1871.)

The fees allowed the district attorney for the travel of his assistants to attend examinations before commissioners (such assistants being paid salaries directly from the Treasury) are, in consequence of the great size of the district, enormous, the travel fees of a single assistant having in one instance amounted to $840 in fifteen consecutive days. (See Mr. Dorsheimer's quarterly account for quarter ending September 30, 1869. See also his accounts for the next and subsequent quarters.)

The extravagant allowances paid for travel make it the interest of most of the officers to disregard more important duties and promote the prosecution of trifling offenses, many of which would not have occurred if the revenue officers had done their duty; and I am sorry to say there is much reason to believe the temptation is at times strong enough to overcome the inclination and obligations of duty.

* * * * * * *

Very respectfully, yours,

N. K. HALL.

Mr. SPEER. I think there should be some modification in the existing law in reference to the payment of marshals; but that we should return to the old system of paying them I do not believe. The present law provides that only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed to any person holding employment or appointment under the United States. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has insisted that the law does not make any such provision, and that I, in so stating, saw what was not to be seen, implying that—

He must have optics sharp, I ween,
Who sees what is not to be seen.

Mr. CONGER. I made the remark in reference to the construction of the law as applied to others than Army officers.

Mr. SPEER. I do not know how any court could give the law any such restricted construction in view of the language used and the discussion had in this House at the time of its passage.

Now, injustice may be done marshals to this extent: A marshal may be paid only his actual expenses in serving a writ, while as the law now stands there is no provision for payment for his time spent in such service. There is no provision in the law for the payment of the time consumed in that service. It may take him ten days, and his expenses each day may be three dollars. He would get thirty dollars, and thus lose his time. The law should be changed, I think, so as to provide a proper compensation for the time consumed.

But, sir, to return to the old system is a proposition so utterly unjustifiable, that I am at a loss to know what reason could induce my eloquent friend from Michigan to advocate it. He must have some marshal in his district who rendered most valuable service in the last campaign, and whom he seeks to reward in this way.

Mr. CONGER. I needed the assistance of no marshal in my district during the last election.

Mr. SPEER. But I suppose you had it.

Mr. CONGER rose.

Mr. SPEER. I have not time in the five minutes allowed me to yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask a question about this business. Would it not be proper to settle the accounts for services already rendered up to the time when the United States Attorney-General gave his construction to this law?

Mr. SPEER. They will be settled under the old law up to the time of the passage of this one.

Mr. CONGER. That is all I have asked.

Mr. SPEER. But how did the old law operate, Mr. Chairman? Take, for example, the western district of Arkansas, referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.] There from 1871 to 1873 inclusive the judicial expenses were $724,000, and of that sum there went to the marshal, after paying witnesses and juries and other court expenses—there went to the marshal of that district the enormous sum of $528,000, which went largely into the political corruption fund of that desolated and suffering State. That is the system to which the gentleman from Michigan now proposes to return, to pay the marshals for thousands of miles never traveled in the service of subpœnaing witnesses or the service of notices to jurors. They sit in their offices and these notices are sent out by mail to the jurors, and now the gentleman proposes to have them charge the Government mileage to every nook and corner of their districts. It is most monstrous and unjustifiable. In this department of Western Arkansas we had in 1873 the enormous expense of $283,000, and in 1872 the more enormous expense of $321,000. By the report of the Attorney-General for the last fiscal year we have in that district an expense of $88,000. Two years ago it was $321,000, and one year ago it was $283,000, while last year it came down to $88,000, and next year it ought to come down to $25,000. There has been more than one-half million dollars stolen, absolutely stolen, by the marshals of that district, and much of it pocketed by the political vampires who secured their appointment and retention in office.

Take the case of one district in North Carolina, the eastern district of North Carolina. The expense last year was $147,000. Who believes that to have been legitimate and honest? That State has been run to a large extent in the same way in which Arkansas has been run, by political thieves and scoundrels and vampires, and to-day, if they have not been allowed since Congress adjourned, there are thousands of fraudulent vouchers tied up in the Auditors' office. No sooner did we adjourn, if my information is correct, than men in high political position in this and in the other end of the Capitol went as doves to the Treasury Department to influence the proper officers to pass these fraudulent vouchers. We had from forty to fifty thousand dollars tied up last June which I trust have not been allowed, although pressed by high political influence since the adjournment of the last Congress; vouchers which are fraudulent.

I think, Mr. Chairman, there should be a modification of the law, but it should not be in this bill. Let the law stand as it is, and let the Judiciary Committee, after proper consideration of the subject, report such a bill as they believe from the experience of the past is just and proper.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLOGG. I move to strike out the last word. I agree with the amendment of my friend from New York, that constructive mileage should all be stopped. I wish to say that while the law undoubtedly includes the marshals and deputy marshals and is correctly interpreted by the Attorney-General, I do not think there was any reference in the debate to officers serving processes whose fees were to be taxed in court at the time the provision was put in the Army bill last year. I do not think that was alluded to in the debate at all when this provision was put in, but the debate had reference to Army officers and officers belonging to the several Departments here. But I will say here to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and others that the only trouble about these frauds in the taxation of officers' fees for serving process is that they have got corrupt judges and corrupt courts. If they had honest judges and honest courts, as we always have in New England, there would be none of this abuse and trouble. There ought to be none of this constructive mileage; and if the judge, in the exercise of the taxing power of the court, is honest, and his attention is called to it by the counsel on one side or the other, there can be none of this constructive mileage.

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him with a question?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; if it is not too long.

Mr. HEREFORD. The gentleman says this is the result of corrupt courts and corrupt judges. I wish to ask the gentleman who appoints these judges, and what branch of the Government confirms the appointment?

Mr. KELLOGG. You had the appointing of them for a great many years by your administrations, and somebody else has had it, of late years; and if there be not some improvement in them in many places from what they formerly were, we are very much mistaken. But no matter about that. Courts are very much like the people where they are.

As to the point made by my friend from New York, he has a district, he says, where you have to travel five hundred miles to go from one end of it to the other. If an officer actually travels that distance he ought to be paid something for his time. It is not enough that he shall have his bare expenses; and if the law is not right now, and we did not make it right by this provision, we ought to correct it. By that law we said just this to every marshal: You shall go over a railroad a distance of one hundred and fifty or two hundred miles, or whatever it may be, and you shall not have one cent for your time; you shall go that distance to serve this process, and you will get what you pay for your railroad tickets and for what you eat, but to get that you must have a voucher from the railroad company; and no marshal or deputy ought to be put in this position.

Now, my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] in proposing this amendment to the Army bill last session cutting off all mileage, did what he is very apt to do. If he sees a head that he thinks ought to be hit he goes for it, and hits half a dozen which ought not to be hit at the same time. And he did just that thing by this provision. He cut off not only all chances of fraud, as he says, but every honest marshal and deputy marshal's chance for pay for serving process; and the consequence is that you cannot get an honest marshal to do this work in many places; and they ought to have fair pay for serving process.

Let me say one thing more. There is another thing the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] got into an appropriation bill and made a tremendous noise about it—a provision for covering all moneys into the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year. I think my friend must have heard from some claimant in his district by this time, who had a valid claim, who had his papers all right, and should have been paid, but did not happen to be paid before the 30th of June last, so that every dollar of the fund from which he could be paid and the money to which he was entitled had to go into the Treasury on the 30th of June last. That money has all to be reappropriated, and persons entitled to their pay have to lie out of it another year.

And this very session the Secretary of the Treasury has to send to us a long list of scores of honest claimants who have been shut off in this way, just as they were to be paid, in consequence of that provision introduced by my friend from Kentucky. When he sees an evil he sees it so strongly that he often strikes at the good with it, and I think from the experience we have had we ought to be a little careful about adopting his suggestions in amending appropriation bills.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to suggest another amendment, which perhaps gentlemen on the other side will not object to.

The CHAIRMAN. The power of amendment is at present exhausted.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to hear what is the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. RANDALL. In line 1690 I would insert the word "hereafter;" so that it will read, "shall not hereafter be so construed."

The operation of this act, if passed, would run back twelve months. Now, I have not heard that any marshal felt so far injured that he resigned because of the cutting down of these fees or perquisites. Therefore, if this amendment is to be made in this bill, the word "hereafter" should be inserted.

Mr. CONGER. That is not an amendment to the pending amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman asked me to state the suggestion which I wished to offer as an amendment, and I have stated it.

Mr. CONGER. The pending amendment is to permit the accounts of marshals to be settled up to this time, under the old law. The provision in the Army bill cutting off the fees of marshals was not construed by the Comptroller and by the Attorney-General of the United States until long after the service had been rendered. And there is an evident propriety in giving marshals the fees they were entitled to, and which they all supposed they were entitled to under the old law up to the present time. That is the amendment now pending the amendment last offered by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I hope it will be adopted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say this: There is presented here a statement of the marshals' fees in Arkansas. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that they were too great. He says they were improper. No doubt they were great; it is assumed that they were improper, and that is made the burden of a charge against all marshals all over the country.

Mr. SPEER. I said that nine-tenths of them were fraudulent in Arkansas, as is proved by the most abundant testimony which has been printed by order of the House.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman says now they were fraudulent; but he only said before that they were large.

Mr. SPEER. Not at all. I spoke loud enough to be heard, and I said what I say now. I say now that nine-tenths of the amount was fraudulently obtained and that $500,000 was stolen from the Government in that Department during three years.

Mr. CONGER. I wanted to call the gentleman out. I thought that he would make assertions which he could not maintain.

Mr. SPEER. Sir, they are proved by evidence, and abundantly proved; they were proved before a committee of the House last session, and the House passed a bill abolishing this District which hangs fire in the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. When the gentleman is through I will go on with my own remarks. Does the gentleman object to paying marshals for services performed since the law was passed? If not, why will he not vote to pay them with an amendment, so that no constructive mileage shall be paid—an amendment similar to that offered by the gentleman from New York? To such an amendment I have no objection. I have no desire that any fees or any improper or unjust pay for services shall be received by these marshals; but let gentlemen at the proper time make a law to prevent pay for services pretended to be rendered, and I will vote for it. I will not, however, assist in depriving men of pay for services actually rendered.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I have an amendment which I wish to have read for information, and which I shall propose when it is in order. It is to add after the word "construed," in line 1691, the words "to deprive United States marshals or deputy marshals of so much of their legal traveling fees as shall be allowed by the court to which the writ is returnable as a reasonable compensation for actual expense and trouble in the service of the same."

I suppose there are some cases in which constructive mileage may properly be allowed. For instance, take the case put by the gentleman from New York, of a subpœna sent to Buffalo but which has afterward to be returned to Lake Champlain. That subpœna may be returned because the witness may be fleeing from the service of the process and there may be some time lost in the service. In such a case the officer should unquestionably be allowed something for his trouble in serving the subpœna. There are undoubtedly great abuses, such as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] has alluded to with a great deal of warmth; but this amendment cuts them all up by the roots, except that it leaves to the court to which a process is returnable the power of allowing a fee and reasonable compensation to the marshal for his actual trouble.

Now, it was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and it is unfortunately true, that there are instances of corrupt judges who would aid the marshal in defrauding the Treasury or parties, whether the process be in a civil or criminal case. But, Mr. Chairman, whenever you have got a corrupt court, upon it depends the decision of rights to property, the preservation of order in the community, and everything else; and when the integrity of the judiciary goes down, all this goes down with it, and it is impossible for us to make laws based upon any other theory than the theory that the judiciary of the country is pure. If a judge will combine with an officer of the court or with parties to defraud, there is no legislation in a particular form which can prevent that theft. It is as impossible as to resist the cause of evil in nature everywhere. The only remedy is in the silent but sure remedy of a returning sense of justice in the people, leading to the punishment of the offender by their Representatives here through the process of impeachment.

It seems to me that this amendment will substantially cure all the evils complained of in this Department, except in those cases where the judge himself is corrupt; and in those there is no legislative remedy.

Mr. DURHAM. I desire to say but a few words upon the question now before the committee, and I am led to do so from the fact that I was a member of the committee at the last session that investigated the affairs of the western district of Arkansas; and I was led to investigate this whole question as to the fees of marshals. I am satisfied with the law as it now stands, and which I understand to be embraced in the proposition submitted by my colleague [Mr. BECK] at the last session. If it turns out that those fees are not enough, they should be made enough by law.

I am opposed to this constructive mileage. The whole investigation that we made into the affairs of the western district of Arkansas (and I apprehend there are other districts like that) goes to show that there were large frauds practiced upon the Government by means of constructive mileage. I might give you instance after instance where the marshals charged four or five times as much as they were entitled to. And I understand furthermore that this was not an uncommon thing. A marshal is directed to summon a jury, either a petit or a grand jury, for the circuit court of the United States. He addresses a letter to each of the persons he is directed to summon, and then charges mileage for it. He charges mileage for two hundred miles from his residence the same as if he had got on a railroad or a steamboat or upon the outside of a horse, and he collects mileage for the whole distance. Now, is that fair and right? I say the whole thing is embraced in a proposition passed by the House upon the motion of my colleague. If a man is entitled to pay for his services, let it be upon the actual service rendered, and not by way of constructive mileage.

I apprehend that my friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] when he comes to read this report concerning the western district of Arkansas will not propound an inquiry, as he did to-day to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SPEER,] as to whether any frauds were alleged to have occurred in the western district of Arkansas. So plainly and so palpably were these things brought home to the knowledge of the House last session, that by a unanimous vote the House resolved to abolish the western district of Arkansas; not only to turn out the unfaithful marshals, but to absolutely turn out the judge who had been presiding there. And I believe that any man who will look at this question fairly and impartially will come to the conclusion that this matter of constructive mileage is all wrong.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have no objection, I think no one ought to have, to this matter of the pay for services of marshals and deputy marshals being fixed in some determinate manner, so that it may be known what their compensation shall be for those services. This is a matter that has pestered the Department of Justice more perhaps than any other single matter of administration in it.

But I rise here now more particularly to say a word for that Department. It has been somewhat fashionable to abuse it. Gentlemen here on this floor have spoken this morning without limit and without stint of the enormities of the administration of the Department of Justice. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] says that it is honeycombed with fraud; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] says that there are nothing but vampires in it, eating up the substance of the country. Now, I believe from investigation that there is no ground for such sweeping charges as are made here against the Department of Justice. It is not honeycombed with fraud; it has other than vampires in it.

I know from the investigations that the Committee on Appropriations have made in times past that the fund at the disposal of the head of that Department, drawn upon from time to time by the courts and their officers, the marshals, deputy marshals, and district attorneys, has been the subject-matter of great anxiety to him. The Committee on Appropriations have investigated from year to year—however, I will not use that word, for the Committee on Appropriations cannot go outside of its duties and become an investigating committee. But it has looked into appropriations which in another bill are given in a lump sum of millions of dollars to this Department of Justice. And I will say for the head of that Department that wherever it has been in his power he has always upheld the views of the committee when seeking to curb or restrain abuses in expenditures, and to curb and restrain men—and there have been plenty of them—who have sought to lay hands on this fund, and by swelling charges to reduce it.

The testimony in regard to Arkansas, referred to by gentlemen on the other side, showed the existence there of a crying shame; and no man found it out sooner than the Attorney-General; no man objected to it more decidedly than he. No man has objected to these extortionate charges made by district attorneys and marshals and deputy marshals more than he has done. It has been to him a constant source of annoyance and of grief. And to-day he will be able to show in his report that in divers parts of the country and in different districts he has cut off these abuses to a great degree and has lowered the expenditures in his Department, and so far as his administration goes has brought the Government nearer to the proper point of purity of administration and economy of expenditure.

While I believe the officer in charge of the Department of Justice has administered its affairs as well as he can, for one I will not stand here and hear him abused, although it may be fashionable to abuse him; I will not stand here silent and hear these assertions made that cannot be borne out.

Mr. SPEER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. SPEER. Why did not the Attorney-General recommend the correction of these abuses? Why did he remain silent until the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice was made at the last session of Congress—a report enough to sicken any man in the land?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The head of that Department has never remained silent in view of abuses. Wherever it was within his administrative power to cut off an abuse or to remove an officer whom he believed to be guilty of infringing on this fund improperly, he has, so far as my knowledge goes, always exerted his power in that direction. No doubt he has made mistakes. No doubt, like any other administrative officer, he has been besieged and importuned by men in this House and at the other end of the Capitol who stood beside these appointees; and perhaps in some cases he has held off longer than he should have done. But that he has faithfully tried to remedy these abuses I do believe, and it is looking into the matter that leads me to believe it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, because some men are found to steal horses, it is no very valid reason that everybody should go afoot. I have taken very little trouble in this House—out of it more—to vindicate the present Administration. If I wanted to do so I should simply take those points upon which it is assailed—for example, this bill of marshals' expenses in Arkansas—and I would go back to the years when I first came to this House and found a distinguished citizen of the State of Pennsylvania sitting in the presidential chair. I would take chapter after chapter, verse after verse, syllable after syllable, and make a comparison. That would be the only vindication or defense that I should think it worth while to make.

Mr. SPEER. The expenses of this Department in 1859, under Buchanan's administration, were $19,000; while in 1872 they were $321,000.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania is so young and verdant, or supposes anybody else so young and verdant, as to believe that such a statement tells anything——

Mr. SPEER. That is from the official figures taken from successive reports of the Attorneys-General.

Mr. MAYNARD. The mere numerical amount that is expended one year with another has no significance. The point to be considered is the amount of business and the relative cost of doing that business.

But, sir, I rose for another purpose. My attention was called to our legislation of last session by the district attorney and marshal in my own district. They assured me that it was utterly impossible to carry on the public business under the provisions of our statute as it has been interpreted; that they could not find persons who would undertake to execute the process of the court. Men are not willing to spend three or four days or a week or more going about the country, merely to have their actual traveling expenses and hotel bills paid. The law as it now stands is a positive obstruction of justice in every part of the country where it is necessary to go any distance either to summon witnesses or to arrest parties; and it is important that our legislation shall take such a form as will relieve the stoppage of the business of the courts as it is occurring in some portions at least of the country. Men should be paid a fair rate of compensation for the services they are called upon to perform. I am aware that under the old system which obtained years ago, in that "good old time" I speak of, a dozen mileages were charged sometimes for a single precept—a precept executed not always by actual travel. We have attempted to remedy that, but in doing this we do not want to prevent officers from being paid for services they actually perform and actually must perform that justice may be administered.

All this talk that we have heard—all this arraignment of abuses that some time or other are stated to have existed—all these assaults upon the Department of Justice, are altogether aside from the evil that is now found in the law which we ought to have wisdom enough to remove in order not to prevent the Judicial Department from discharging its proper and appropriate work.

I am aware of the assaults that have been made upon the present Department of Justice and its present head. They go back beyond this matter; they go back to occurrences within the last three or four months; they go back to things that have been very much bruited throughout the country on the stump and elsewhere, looking to incidental functions that have been thrown upon the Attorney-General by occurrences in some portions of the country. How much of the remarks that we have heard here is referable to these occurrences of the last three or four months I leave gentlemen to judge and decide for themselves. I do not propose to go into that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. Before this paragraph is passed, I desire to offer an amendment (if it be in order) that in all arrests by United States marshals the parties arrested shall be taken before the officer nearest the place of arrest who is authorized to admit to bail. Whether that amendment is in order or not I do not say; I have not yet offered it; but I would like, if possible, to abolish one evil connected with the execution of writs by United States marshals and deputy marshals. One illustration of this evil is found in occurrences in Alabama last summer where many persons were arrested by marshals in Sumter County and taken to Mobile although there was in Sumter County a commissioner authorized to admit to bail. Why did they take them to Mobile and Montgomery, a long distance, except for the purpose of getting not merely constructive but actual mileage? That ought to be cut up by the roots as an abuse.

The gentleman undertook to defend the present Administration in connection with these marshals. Well, sir, nearly all the propositions made here for economy, if we analyze them closely, have something bad at the bottom. It grows out of our inordinate Federal legislation upon all subjects; of our reconstruction laws—our intermeddling with elections. The intermeddling of Federal officers in our State elections and otherwise has given rise to extraordinary processes and to extraordinary expenses, and is of no good whatever to the States where these processes have been executed, as we all very well know.

Why, sir, in 1858 the whole cost of this Arkansas judicial district was only $25,000; in 1859, $19,000; in 1860, $26,000; in 1866, $15,000; in 1867, $24,000; that is, for the whole State of Arkansas, which was then only one judicial district. In 1868 it was $34,000; in 1869, $56,000; in 1870, $108,000; in 1871, $138,000; in 1872, $320,000; in 1873, $283,000 for the western judicial district of Arkansas. This is because of your peculiar system of legislation here which the people have reprobated. There is a most unaccountable lack of accountability all through our federal system. We have Federal intermeddling, dragging men from their homes and carrying them three, four, and five hundred miles under process, when they need only to have been carried a short distance, and done merely for the purpose of getting large fees by marshals to be shared possibly by the men who kept them in their Federal positions. If we have no power to reach these wrongs or to remedy these mischiefs in the appropriation bill, let us at least expose them.

I may agree with the gentleman from Tennessee that these abuses are not peculiar to one party more than another, but wherever they appear every honest man in this House should give them a blow. When gentlemen like the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] defend the Department of Justice, let me ask why they do not send that omnipotent Attorney-General to the Senate of the United States and let him there exercise his influence to pass the bill which tore up this whole Arkansas business? If there is any power in the Administration, if there is any influence which any of the Departments have in regulating legislation so as to secure the passage of honest laws, let them go to the Senate and urge that bill already passed by this House, and then we will give you some credit for being in earnest in trying to remedy these wrongs.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that debate be closed on the pending paragraph and amendments.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The question first recurred on the amendment of Mr. SMITH, of New York; which was rejected.

Mr. COX. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided that in all arrests by United States marshals the parties arrested shall be taken to the officer nearest the place of arrest who is authorized to admit to bail.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from New York that it provides for a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I move after the word "construed," in line 1691, to add the following:

To deprive United States marshals or deputy marshals of so much of their legal traveling fees as shall be allowed by the court to which the writ is returnable as a reasonable compensation for actual expense and trouble in the service of the same.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Is that an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. It has now been provided only to allow marshals their traveling fees; and I move, then, as a substitute, to allow only such as the judge shall find to be equitable and reasonable.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. If the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is adopted, there will be left nothing to prohibit the payment of constructive fees.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The old law prohibits them, but this provides the marshal shall not be deprived of so much as the court shall find to be reasonable.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the old law does not prohibit constructive fees.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I think it does, but I will withdraw my motion if there is any doubt about it.

Mr. GARFIELD'S amendment was adopted.

The question then recurred on Mr. POTTER'S motion to strike out the entire proviso.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following as a substitute for the proviso:

That the district marshals shall receive the sum of three dollars per day for the period actually and necessarily employed in travel in serving process, in addition to the fees for the service of the process, where such service shall be required to be made beyond the limits of the city where the court may be held by which such process was issued, in addition to the actual expense of travel now allowed by law.

Mr. GARFIELD. That changes the law, and is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it is germane to the pending proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to rule the amendment out of order. Permission was given to admit a specific proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. But this is germane to the proposition which was authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. But it is not the specific proposition.

Mr. GARFIELD. The specific proposition was in regard to mileage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to rule that this distinctly changes the law in reference to compensation in addition to the subject of mileage, and he therefore rules it out of order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] to strike out the proviso.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask a question of the Chair. If the proviso is stricken out, does that strike out the amendment just adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course. When the committee strikes out a proviso it strikes out any amendment to the proviso.

The question being taken on Mr. POTTER'S motion to strike out the proviso, there were—ayes 52, noes 71; no quorum voting.

The tellers were ordered under the rule; and the Chair appointed Mr. POTTER and Mr. GARFIELD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 88.

So the motion to strike out the proviso was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph under the heading "Court of Claims:"

For stationery, books, fuel, labor, postage, and other contingent and miscellaneous expenses, $3,000; for reporting the decisions of the court, clerical hire, labor in preparing and superintending the printing of the tenth volume of the reports of the Court of Claims, to be paid on the order of the court, $1,000; and for preparing a digest of the decisions of the court for the past twelve years, $1,000; in all, $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out these words:

And for preparing a digest of the decisions of the court for the past twelve years, $1,000.

This, Mr. Chairman, is an appropriation merely for the benefit of attorneys who practice in the Court of Claims. This digest is not designed to furnish information to any other class of persons. The digest of the decisions of the courts, I believe, never has been published in any of the States at the public expense. It has always been a matter for private enterprise exclusively. There are public reasons, perhaps, why the decisions themselves should be published; yet I think that, with the exception of the decisions of the Supreme Court and the decisions of the Court of Claims, this expense is not incurred in regard to any of the judicial tribunals of the country. In other cases the expense is borne by the persons who deserve benefit from the publication of the reports. But here it is proposed to go to the expense of publishing a digest, at the expense of $1,000, for the benefit of idle gentlemen who will not take the trouble to prepare a digest for themselves. I have never before noticed any such item in appropriation bills, and I trust this will be stricken out, or that some very good reason shall be given why it should be retained.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have never been so painfully impressed with the impropriety of this appropriation as I have been since I have heard my friend from Indiana pronounce the word "digest" with so strong an accent on the first syllable. I was feeling quite strong in favor of the appropriation until I heard that pronunciation. But, seriously, I cannot understand why my friend should draw so fine a distinction as to admit that it is quite proper for us to publish the reports of the decisions of the Court of Claims and an index to each volume, and an index and even a digest of the decisions of other courts of the United States, and yet to insist, when we propose to have a digest of the decisions of this court, that it is something extravagant and in the interest merely of lawyers. I do not know that it is any more in the interest of lawyers to print a digest of the decisions of this court than of any other class. The fact is, the Court of Claims is the only court where the people of the United States have a hearing as against the United States in a case of claims; and the reports of the Court of Claims, properly digested, furnish the reasons for the decisions of the court defining and limiting the character of the people's rights. It seems to me that it is more in the interest of the people than of any particular class that we should print this digest.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations this question: Has Congress ever appropriated a dollar for publishing digests of the decisions of the Supreme Court?

Mr. GARFIELD. We have appropriated money to purchase copies of the work.

Mr. HOLMAN. We may have appropriated for the purchase of a certain number of copies, but that is different from an appropriation to prepare and publish the work. The volumes of digests of the decisions of our State courts are all published by private enterprise.

Mr. GARFIELD. And in those cases the person having charge of the work is entitled to a considerable amount of fees growing out of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment for the purpose of adding a little to what I have already said.

I feel that I ought to apologize to the sensitive ear of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for my want of accuracy in the pronunciation of the word "digest." I am glad that we have in this House a gentleman able to suggest the most refined modes of pronunciation. I know how harshly an inaccurate pronunciation falls upon a cultivated ear, and I ought to have been more considerate. I beg the gentleman's pardon for being so unmindful of my duty in his presence as to indulge in the western style of pronunciation. My friend had the benefit of instruction at one of the more refined institutions of learning, and he ought to be, perhaps, a little more merciful to the less favored mortals around him. But I trust this little beginning will not be criticised into a precedent. I think there are enough channels of extravagant expenditures in this country without seeking a new mode of expending a little more money. I did not say that I thought it was proper that the people of this nation should incur the expense of publishing the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, or of the Court of Claims. The publication of the decisions of other courts is made by private enterprise, I believe, in all the States of the Union. It may be, however, that there may be a propriety in doing this, founded on what has been the immemorial practice of the Government, but I know that it is not proper to begin the publication of this digest, which is a mere matter for the convenience of the gentlemen practicing law in court. It is a labor-saving expenditure, by which not only courts, but more especially, lawyers, may know precisely what the law is; but I do not think they should have this convenience furnished them at the expense of the Government. I trust this little beginning will not be tolerated by the committee, but that we may have left us some field of expenditure that shall not be invaded by appropriations from the public Treasury.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say a single word. I hope the gentleman does not think I was criticising his pronunciation, for I was not. I do not know that I ever in my life heard the gentleman pronounce a word incorrectly; but I was referring to the scorn with which he pronounced the word "digest." I hope his scorn will not wither the word out of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it will.

The question was upon the motion of Mr. HOLMAN to strike out, in lines 1707, 1708, and 1709, the words "and for preparing a digest of the decisions of the court for the past twelve years, $1,000."

The question was put; and on a division there were ayes 34, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I move pro forma to strike out the last word for the purpose of putting a question to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, or to his colleague from New York, [Mr. WHEELER,] who is also a lawyer. I would like to be informed at some proper time (and I do not know of any time that will be more proper than now) whether the Committee on Appropriations, who have occasion to examine all the expenditures of the Government, find upon the whole that the existence of the Court of Claims is a saving of money to the Government or tends on the whole to promoting a separation of just claims from unjust claims, against the Government; whether during its existence it has operated as a sucessful element in the administration of justice?

Mr. GARFIELD. I would say in regard to that, that for four or five years the Court of Claims had a hard struggle for existence in Congress, at a time when leading lawyers in both Houses were in favor of abolishing it. A great many were opposed to its establishment originally, and I have no doubt that it has entailed large expense upon the country. It has poured in upon the Supreme Court a large volume of work, overloading its docket, and has no doubt increased the labor of that court. But to say that is not to say necessarily that the Court of Claims ought not to exist. As I had occasion to say awhile ago, it is the only place where a citizen of the United States has a right to come before a judicial tribunal and prefer his claim against the United States. If the Court of Claims was abolished we would have an infinitely greater pressure on Congress in the matter of private claims, and I am disposed to believe that the Court of Claims is to claims generally what the southern claims commission is to that particular class of claims. I do not believe it would be wise to abolish the Court of Claims at present; but that is a question upon which men do and will differ.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay judgments of the Court Claims, $400,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio as to this item. The amount appropriated is far less than the amount in the estimates. The estimates are for $1,524,390. Those estimates are based upon judgments already rendered. This appropriation is to pay for judgments that will be rendered in the next fiscal year.

Last year we appropriated a million dollars for this purpose. On the basis of appropriations heretofore made, does the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations believe that the sum now proposed to be appropriated—less than half a million dollars—will be sufficient?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think it will be, with the addition of the unexpended balance now on hand for this purpose.

Let me state in brief that there were $2,000,000 estimated for last year, and the committee gave half of what was estimated. Formerly but $400,000 was appropriated annually. Last year a million dollars was appropriated; and we find upon inquiry that if the judgments pending had been mainly or half rendered against the United States the whole million dollars would have been used up. But they have so much of that million dollars still unexpended that the committee think that this appropriation will be sufficient to meet this expenditure.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the balance of last year's appropriation?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. The reason I called attention to this subject is that appropriations are being made for the purpose of meeting the judgments of the Court of Claims, the southern claims commission, and various other tribunals, and those appropriations are growing so rapidly that the subject ought to begin to arrest a great deal of attention.

Mr. GARFIELD. The only means we have of estimating the necessary amounts to be appropriated is simply to take the actual payments of last year and compare them with the amounts covered by the claims acted upon, and then take the docket for the next year and estimate about how many cases can probably be disposed of, and making calculations on these two estimates. Of course gentlemen will see that in some years the amount will be greater and in other years it will be less. There is a single case pending before the Court of Claims, a cotton case, that will take a million dollars for its payment alone, if allowed in whole; and we cannot tell whether it will be allowed or not, or if allowed whether it will be allowed to its full extent. All we can do is to estimate a reasonable amount and put it in the bill.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Are the proceeds of captured and abandoned property covered into the Treasury, so that when a judgment is rendered by the Court of Claims there must be an appropriation to pay it?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly; except in a class of cases where the Secretary still has the right and authority to settle claims.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Are any of those cases pending in the Court of Claims?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not those cases. One class of cases do not go to the Court of Claims at all, but they are decided by the Secretary himself.

The following was read:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Office of the Attorney-General:

For compensation of the Attorney-General, $8,000; Solicitor-General, $7,500; three Assistant Attorneys-General, at $5,000 each; one Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department, $4,000; solicitor of internal revenue, $5,000; naval solicitor and judge advocate general, $3,500; examiner of claims, $3,500; law clerk, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,200; stenographic clerk, $2,000; two law clerks, at $2,000 each; six clerks of class four; additional for disbursing clerk, $200; one clerk of class two; one telegraph operator, at $1,000; five copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; two assistant messengers; two laborers; and two watchmen; in all, $80,760.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if the "examiner of claims" referred to in the paragraph just read is the one connected with the State Department.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think he belongs to the State Department.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I had an impression that the name of the officer had been changed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will examine into the matter, and if found necessary we can turn back.

Mr. BECK. I move to strike out this entire paragraph. Of course I do not expect to succeed in having it stricken out, but I rise for the purpose of making a brief statement. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] a few moments ago announced that his object in taking the floor was not so much for the purpose of discussing the particular question then before the Committee of the Whole, relative to marshals and deputy marshals, as it was to defend the general conduct of the Department of Justice from attacks which had been made by myself and by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SPEER.] The gentleman from Maine said that I had denounced the Department of Justice as being honey-combed all over with fraud. I want to say now that that is my deliberate opinion. And if there was any means of striking out this whole appropriation, or of reaching the Department of Justice and having it thoroughly investigated, I would endeavor to adopt the measures necessary and proper to accomplish that object now. I do not attack the subordinates of the Attorney-General. Many of them are good men. I strike at the responsible head and at his public acts.

The gentleman from Maine ought to remember that on Monday last I introduced a resolution, which failed because he and other republican members refused to vote for it, calling for an examination into the conduct of this Department of Justice relative to the safe-burglary conspiracy. On my own responsibility as a Representative I stated that the Attorney-General had dismissed the special prosecuting attorney, Mr. Riddle, in the safe-burglary case, when it was known to the Attorney-General and to all who had examined it that that case, if thoroughly investigated, would expose such evidence of fraud, corruption, and interference with justice as would shock the people of this country.

And I now assert here that in my judgment the Attorney-General is a more guilty man, in respect to the acts of usurpation and tyranny done in the State of Louisiana, than Judge Durell, who has been reported by a committee of this House as deserving impeachment. This House and the country know that two days before Judge Durell issued the order for which he was impeached the Attorney-General, in violation of his known duty, clearly and knowingly usurping authority not given to him, telegraphed to the marshal of the United States in Louisiana to this effect:

> You are to enforce the decrees and mandates of the United States court, no matter by whom resisted; and General Emory will furnish you with the necessary troops for that purpose.

The order or decision of Judge Durell, which has been found to be not only illegal but impeachable, was rendered upon the assurance—given two days in advance by a Cabinet officer of the United States, who had no authority to call upon the Army, who was not asked by any constitutional body or person for permission to use the Army—that it would be used to sustain his action, no matter what decision the judge might give. I repeat, if Judge Durell, by resigning, as he has done, has confessed his guilt, which is by common consent admitted, the Attorney-General of the United States, who aided and abetted him and gave an order in advance to him to do it, guaranteeing him protection and support, is a more guilty man than he.

I might multiply instances of gross wrongs in grave matters against this high official, but time would fail me; five minutes run rapidly. Take this, for example: The Department of Justice has appealed from the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court every cotton claim that has been decided against the United States; and has, upon the Attorney-General's own motion, without trial on the merits, dismissed a large majority of them whenever the friends of the Department were appointed to arrange them and could get such fees out of them or such portions of them as they saw fit to demand.

Again, I assert that the Department of Justice has used the Army of the United States for the basest of purposes. The Attorney-General has sent his marshals and secret-service thieves all over the land—to Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina, and elsewhere—for purposes of wrong and oppression. I repeat, it is a Department of injustice instead of a Department of Justice. When the proper time comes, if I can get an opportunity, I will make good all I have said about the Attorney-General and his Department. If I am denied the right here, the next House of Representatives will see to it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that the law of last session provides that "hereafter a detailed statement of the expenditure for the preceding fiscal year of all sums appropriated for contingent expenses in any Department or Bureau of the Government shall be presented to Congress at the beginning of each regular session;" and to the further fact that upon my own motion the following provision was incorporated in the law of last session under the head "Expenses of Department of Justice:"

> And the Attorney-General shall hereafter annually report to Congress in detail the items, amounts, and causes of the expenditure of the contingent expenses of this Department.

Now, Mr. Chairman, no such detailed statement, no statement of any kind, of the expenditure of the contingent fund has been made to Congress by the Attorney-General. For the year expiring on the 30th of June, 1874, there were appropriated $21,000 for the contingent expenses of that Department. And I hold in my hand the report of the Attorney-General, in which he returns that amount to the exact cent as having been expended, for what? The law requires him to give us a detailed statement of every dollar and every penny of these expenses. A little over a year ago the nation was scandalized by developments in reference to the expenditure of the contingent fund of the Department of Justice, and that scandal caused the passage of the law I have read, requiring of the Attorney-General this statement to be made to Congress. Yet in open neglect of his duty, in the plain teeth of the letter of the law, he fails, or has failed up to this hour, to give us any statement of the items of the expenditure of the contingent fund.

Now, where has this money gone? For what was the $21,000 expended? How many hundred penknives, how many landaulets, were bought; how many horses were kept; how many drivers, and footmen, and carriages? We have a right to know; the law makes it the duty of the Attorney-General to give us this information. It is due to the law, it is due to the people, that not another dollar should be appropriated for the Department of Justice while the present incumbent remains in the office of Attorney-General until he complies with his plain official duty. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he was aware that that report of the expenditures of the contingent fund by the Attorney-General had not been made when he inserted this item in the bill?

Mr. GARFIELD. When the gentleman gets through I will speak.

Mr. SPEER. The gentleman says when I am through he will speak. He should be able to answer such a question now. He should not appear here as the quasi apologist of a public officer, and that officer at the head of the Law Department, when he stands before the House and the country in open dereliction of duty. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can command the floor at any time and at all times; and to such a question as this that gentleman, holding the purse-strings of the appropriations of the Government, covering $300,000,000 a year, should be prompt to reply, and if necessary reply in terms of rebuke to a public officer who fails to do his duty.

I affirm, then, sir, that the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky should prevail; and until this officer complies with the law we should not vote him another dollar for contingent expenses. We have the right to know where this money has gone; we have the right to know how many penknives he has bought and distributed among his clerks and his friends; we have the right to know how many carriages he keeps, for whom they are kept, where they are kept, and at what expense. We have the right to know where the people's money goes; and until that duty on his part is performed the appropriation embraced in this section of the bill should not be voted.

Mr. GARFIELD. This motion is to strike out the appropriations for the Judicial Department of the United States. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] is almost enraged at me because I do not stand upon the floor as a witness to be examined and cross-examined by him for the purpose of decorating and adorning his speech. He thinks I ought to have leaped to the floor and stood meekly by, answering whatever question and cross-question he chose to put about the Department of Justice. Now, I do not think we have reached that point of satrap management here in this House when any particular member is called upon to stand forth in that meek attitude before his fellows.

The raving upon this subject has been chiefly done in one line and by one small lot of gentlemen on this floor. In one short speech of five minutes I heard the word "vampire" pronounced three times by the gentleman who has just taken his seat. Besides the words "thief" and "robber" and "swindler" and "fraud," in connection with the Attorney-General's Department, danced through the mazy visions of his mind and speech as though they were the familiars of his waking hours and his dreaming moments; and in that trance he asked us all to join in a whirligig and let him be the piper, to pipe while we danced in a ring around him.

Now, I am here to say, not that the judicial department of the Government has always been as economical as it ought to have been, but that there has been sturdy, earnest work done in cutting down the expenses in that Department, at least during the time that I have been chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, not by the committees of Congress alone, but also by the Department itself. It was on my motion—a motion made in pursuance of a unanimous vote in the Committee on Appropriations—that we made all these contingent expenses of the Department definite and precise, and did not, as our democratic friends did in their day of rule, appropriate several hundred million dollars in a lump, never to be reported, never to be itemized, never to be considered, at least so far as any requirement of law was concerned. And we who have made all these changes and betterments are now to be called upon to dance in a little circle around a small center because a new law passed here some six months ago required itemized, close, and careful reports of contingent funds and those reports are not now upon the tables of all the members in this the second week of the session. We have one of these reports already before us.

The gentleman desires to know whether we dare say those reports are out, and why they are not out. There are a great many things probably we had better not dare about until we have found our grounds for them. Against what particular thing in this bill does the gentleman direct his thunder? He kicks against the sky. He shoots at the stars generally, broadcast. His fusee roars and the sky re-echoes, but where are his birds? What point in the bill does he aim at? If he sees anything wrong in the bill, name it—point it out, and I will help him to strike it out. But we cannot answer an indictment against the universe.

For one I am tired of this everlasting clamor and vagueness, a mere hurra to which we are treated hour by hour in the progress of the debate on this appropriation bill. If men do not get up and answer and rail and roar in answer every five or six minutes, "O, there is no economy in this House. Wait until we get in and we will show you economy." The Government waited and let you show economy for many long years until the Government had run down and touched bottom in bankruptcy and protest. In this broken condition a great party took hold and saved the country from this degradation and slavery and ruin, from treason and rebellion, and lifted it up into the light of freedom, with respect for the rights of man; lifted it out of war in which you had plunged it and made its public credit and name great in the world. Bark; but remember the glories you bark at.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman from Ohio tell us about the several hundred million dollars which were appropriated in a lump by the democratic party? When was that done?

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not say "several hundred million dollars in a lump."

Mr. BECK. I beg the gentleman's pardon; he did say so, and I am borne out in my statement by gentlemen around me.

Mr. GARFIELD. If I said millions, I of course meant thousands.

Mr. BECK. You were merely "roaring" then, I presume.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPEER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is so rarely that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] declines to take the floor, or declines to answer questions unbidden, that perhaps I may be pardoned for expecting an answer to the simple question I put to him. If the question was impertinent, if it was improper in view of the public interest that it should be answered, then I should have been rebuked; but if it was proper that a Representative of the people upon this floor should put a question to the chairman of its leading committee as to whether a public officer had complied with the requirements of the law, if that was proper, then I was in the line of my duty.

But, sir, I do not submit to rebuke from the gentleman from Ohio or to be lectured by him on my past course or that of my party. We may have erred as a party and as individuals, but he who lifts the rod of correction over us should be a man along whose pathway the undimmed light of an honest life has been cast. That lecture and that rebuke should not come from the man around whom gather the mists and clouds of suspicion, if not the black shadow of established guilt.

Mr. GARFIELD. What is that the gentleman says?

Mr. SPEER. I say this side of the House should not be lectured by a gentleman who stands in the mists and clouds of suspicion, if not of guilt. I take the responsibility for my question and for my error, if error it was. If I was fighting the stars, I beg the gentleman to remember I could not have been fighting him! If I was discourteous I withdraw any remark which will bear that interpretation; but I am not here to be rebuked when in the line of my public duty.

It is not the right of the gentleman upon this floor, having charge of interests so important as these, to answer with assumed superiority, at least in manner and in tone, if not in language, a question properly put by a person properly authorized to put it. I regret anything that may have been said to imbitter the relations of gentlemen here; but it is not the first time I have felt with other Representatives upon this floor the superciliousness of the gentleman from Ohio, charged to a large extent with the management in this House of the financial affairs of the nation. And it may be well for him to be taught, here and now, that however we may stand with reference to length of service and official position on this floor, as Representatives of the people we are equal.

Mr. GARFIELD. Any teaching which I desire to receive I hope to receive in due time and from the proper quarter. I ask now for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the formal amendment withdrawn?

Mr. RANDALL. As both gentlemen seem now to be in good humor, I would like to renew the question which was addressed to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] I would like to know whether he is prepared to say that the Attorney-General of the United States has conformed to law in giving us a report of the manner in which that $21,000 of the people's money was expended? The question is more important than the mere language of it might seem to imply. It is not an idle question, and as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations it is the gentleman's duty to answer the question yea or nay, or else say that he cannot.

Mr. GARFIELD. Gentlemen will remember very well that the proposition to require specific reports of the expenditure of the contingent funds was moved in this House by the Committee on Appropriations and put on the law by that committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not detracting from what is due to the committee in that respect.

Mr. GARFIELD. That law took effect and began to operate on the 1st day of July last, and when that year which began on the 1st day of July last is done, if there come not then a report of all the expenditures of that year, then it will be time to ask us whether these gentlemen have done their duty or not.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir. At the commencement of this session was the time. I want you to be frank and answer the question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am addressing the Chair. I do not say "you" in talking of gentlemen on this floor. I do not allow debate to run in the direction of personalities, so far as I am concerned. I address the Chair, and in addressing the Chair I say to the gentleman that if any of those reports were by law required to be presented at the beginning of this session, I do not know how many of them have been. I know one of them is in print, and is a part of the report which accompanies this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not mean to let the gentleman escape, on the idea of my being personal about this, from answering my question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have just stated that I did not know whether the Attorney-General has made a report of the expenditures of this contingent fund for the past year or not. There has been no escape from giving an answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman was making his escape by referring to my use of the expression "you." I want this question answered. It is a plain question, which should be answered by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations before he has any right to ask the committee to make any further appropriations to that Department.

Mr. DURHAM. And I remind my friend from Pennsylvania that I propounded the same question to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations yesterday, whether or not there had been a report from the Postmaster-General of the expenditure of the contingent fund.

Mr. GARFIELD. And I answered the gentleman from Kentucky that one of the reports was in, and that I understood the rest would be made in due time.

Mr. DURHAM. I understand the law to be that the reports of the contingent expenditures shall be made at the same time as the general reports.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, I want, so far as this side of the House is concerned, that it should be acknowledged that no effort has been made here to retard the progress of this bill. But we do want to know about every dollar that has been expended, and when we have reason to believe that fraudulent expenditures have been made out of this contingent fund we want to know how.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have nothing further to say. I have answered the gentleman precisely as to the facts.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman says he has not got the information, I cannot press him further for it.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill, and read to the close of section 1.

Mr. McCRARY. In accordance with the order of the House on Monday last making the amendment which I hold in my hand in order to this bill, I now offer that amendment to come in as section 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the circuit court of the United States in and for the district of Iowa shall be held at the times and places now provided by law for holding the United States district court in and for said district. But the circuit judge shall not be required to sit in said court except at Des Moines. Causes removed from any court in the State of Iowa into the circuit court of the United States within said district shall be removed to the nearest circuit court, unless the parties thereto shall otherwise agree: Provided, That all appeals or writs of error allowed by law from the district court to the circuit court for Iowa shall be taken to the circuit court at Des Moines, to be heard by said court when held by one or more circuit judges: And provided further, That the judge of the district court for said district of Iowa may, in his discretion, order that the same jurors be summoned to serve in the circuit and district courts when held at the same time and place, and at a place other than Des Moines.

Mr. McCRARY. As this is a matter which relates entirely to the courts in the State of Iowa, and as it involves no expense whatever, I suppose there will be no objection to the amendment. It has been submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, and I believe I am authorized to say that it meets with their approval.

I may be permitted, however, to say that it is an absolute necessity that some legislation of this kind should be had in order that the business in the Federal courts in the State of Iowa shall be transacted with anything like promptness and dispatch. The circuit court meets at one place, the capital of the State, and the docket now numbers twenty-five hundred causes. The provisions of this amendment will require the circuit court to be held at the same point as the district court, and in the absence of the circuit judge, of course it will be held by the district judge. But it adds nothing to the expenditures for the administration of justice; on the contrary it will save a large expense on the part of litigants, and also on the part of the Government. I presume there is no objection to the amendment, and therefore there is no need of its further discussion.

Mr. GARFIELD. I really do not think that we ought to put a measure of this kind upon an appropriation bill. I do not know anything against the amendment on its merits; but if we add to an appropriation bill a measure of this kind, we might as well go on and swell the bill into a general judiciary act. I repeat that I know nothing against this measure upon its merits, but I do think that it is not such a measure as we should incorporate in an appropriation bill, and I hope my friend from Iowa will not press it.

Mr. McCRARY. I must insist on its being connected as a part of this bill. There is considerable legislation in the bill at other points, and there is nothing in this provision that will form a precedent any more dangerous than other provisions in the bill. The reason why I press it is that it is a matter of great importance, and I very much fear that in the brief remainder of this session it might not be possible, however meritorious the bill may be, to get it considered and passed through the two Houses as a separate measure. The House, by a suspension of the rules, ordered that this provision should be in order as an amendment to this bill.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. McCRARY; and on a division there were--ayes 46, noes 49; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. McCRARY and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported ayes 84, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read the second section of the bill.

Mr. ASHE. I offer the following as an additional section:

Assay office of Charlotte, North Carolina:
For assayer in charge, $1,800; melter, $1,500; wages of workmen, $600; contingent expenses, $1,500; in all, $5,400.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. The reports show that this assay office is of no value to the country.

Mr. ASHE. The appropriation for this assay office has been frequently before the House. It was discussed at the last session, and all the statistics and information we had were then before the House. I have now some additional information in regard to this assay office from the assayer, and I will ask the Clerk to read a portion of his letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Table No. 1 shows the amount of gold and silver produced in the States of North Carolina and South Carolina since the discovery of gold. No. 2 shows the amount of business done at this office.

No. 1. Gold of domestic production, to June 30, 1874, of North Carolina, $9,884,514.22; of South Carolina, $1,379,121.92.

Silver of domestic production (1841) to June 30, 1874, of North Carolina, $44,345.88.

No. 2. Gold coin (and bars) made at United States branch mint, Charlotte, North Carolina, to close of June 30, 1874, $5,141,111.07.

The following statement shows the probable production of North Carolina for the year 1874, arranged according to counties:

Gaston County	$75,000
Rowan County	50,000
Burke County	10,000
Rutherford County	5,000
Catawba County	1,000
Mecklenburgh, Union, and adjacent counties	9,000
	150,000

Before I close I will add a brief statement in regard to our business. Our operations are restricted by law to the assay of bullion; i. e., we take it as deposited, package by package, and, having formed it into a bar of suitable form and size, we assay the bar, ascertain its value, and stamp it accordingly; it is then issued to the depositor, who sells it to the local bankers or ships it to the Mint at Philadelphia to be reassayed and converted into coin. By selling he is compelled to allow the banker a considerable profit by shipping he is subjected to the expense of expressage and to a considerable delay before realizing. The larger companies and depositors have preferred the latter course; and, to avoid the double expense of assay here and there, have sent direct to Philadelphia. In this way the greater part of the bullion product passes around us. I have often called the attention of the authorities at Washington to this difficulty under which we labor, and have suggested a course by which this inconvenience might be obviated and the depositor be enabled to receive at once the full value of the deposit, subject only to the usual working charge.

I have alluded to the plan in my conversation with you. It is as follows: That the Treasury Department be authorized and instructed to keep a fund of gold coin at this office for the express purpose of paying the depositor the value of his deposit as soon as ascertained; the bar becoming the property of the office, and being subsequently sent to Philadelphia to be coined to replenish the fund here. Perhaps also it might be advisable to allow us to issue coin certificates or some similar instrument, (when the depositor prefers it,) payable by the assistant treasurer at New York or Philadelphia. These methods would as fully answer the needs of depositors, it is believed, as a coining department, and could be effected at a far less cost to the Treasury than would be involved in the support of a coining staff here. The arrangement under which the New York assay office does its business and settles with depositors is precisely what we want here. A very small coin fund would be sufficient for our purpose, as it could be speedily replenished as often as needed.

In this connection I will allude to another feature of our work here: We have interpreted freely our instructions to aid generally in promoting mining interests, and in the intervals of our regular work we are engaged in assaying ores, analyzing soils, minerals, &c., and in miscellaneous chemical examinations; the fees received therefor going into the Treasury. In 1873 upward of one hundred examinations were made, many of them of importance. Oftentimes we make no charge when the individual is too poor to pay or when the matter is of more than individual importance, and at all times the charge is but little more than sufficient to pay the cost of the work. The receipts from this source amount to some hundreds per year, and about one-half this amount is profit to the United States Treasury.

We have for some years performed chemical work for the State geologist, and have made this office a cheap and valuable adjunct to the geological survey of the State.

Although we do not get much gold to assay, yet we perform an important function in the development of the mineral interests of the North Atlantic States; and in discussing the question whether this assay office shall be continued or not, it will be proper to compare the advantages accorded the various sections of the Union in this respect. The States and Territories west of the Rocky Mountains have a geologist (mining commissioner) and several exploring expeditions constantly in the field at the expense of the General Government, and, in addition, two mints and two assay offices.

When it is said that there is little use for our branch, that we do too little work, our friends might reply that at present there is little use for any mint, because three-fourths of the gold that is coined in our mints is speedily shipped across the water, and at once melted down in the European mints. There will be more real use for mints when the printing office occupies a less conspicuous part in supplying the country with a circulating medium.

Senator MORRILL, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, when here remarked that he did not know whether we needed a branch mint in North Carolina or not, but that he was for sustaining it, because the old States had got but little, and would get no more, and what they had got they must keep.

We only ask for $5,900, and there should be no hesitation in appropriating it. So much (nearly) is appropriated yearly to pay four men who stand round the cabinet in the Mint at Philadelphia to answer the questions of visitors about old coins, metals, ores, &c., (vide United States Treasury Register, 1874, page 60.) This is not noticed because it is swallowed up in the immense sum of $205,000 given freely to that mint.

We hope that the usual appropriation will be made, and that the measure will be pushed through Congress authorizing a coin deposit to be made here for the purpose alluded to.

We will thank you to inform us what the Director of the Mint has recommended, and to send to us a copy of the appropriation bill.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

CALVIN J. COWLES,
Assayer in Charge.

The question was taken on the amendment; and there were ayes 17, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I desire the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the amendment I now offer. I ask the consent of the House to go back to a section of the bill we have passed for the purpose of considering this amendment. It is to add at the end of line 1714 the following:

No judgments of said court shall be paid beyond the amount of this appropriation and any unexpended balance of former appropriations for the payment of the judgments of said court.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to going back?

Mr. HUNTON. I object.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I ask the gentleman to consent to my making an explanation of the reasons for the proposed amendments.

Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendment can certainly be offered as an independent section, to come in at the end of the bill, as it is a limitation upon an appropriation in the bill.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] certainly will not object to my making an explanation now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not.

Mr. ASHE. I object to the amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Then I propose it as an independent section to come in at this place.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is in the middle of a section at present.

Mr. ASHE. I do not object to an explanation by the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. In the last Congress I offered an amendment to the appropriation bill prohibiting the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims without specific appropriations for such judgments being made by Congress. There was a long debate upon that amendment. In that discussion, which continued for two days, it was not ascertained by this House that judgments of the Court of Claims were paid without any appropriation by Congress. And we did not know, and the people of the country did not know, and we have not yet found out, what became of the $26,000,000 which was supposed to be in the Treasury of the United States as the proceeds of captured and abandoned property. My reason for proposing the amendment which led to that discussion was this: not that I was prepared to say that men who had been disloyal to the Government during the war should not be paid for their property, but I was prepared to say that those men ought not to be paid in advance of men who had been loyal. In that debate I cited the case of a plaintiff in the Court of Claims whose claim was upward of a million dollars for captured cotton, who was a confederate loan commissioner during the rebellion. I did not contend that he should never be paid. I did contend that he should not be paid in advance of men who had been loyal to the Government during the war, and had suffered comparatively more than he had suffered. I did contend that Congress ought not to give him precedence in time of payment over Dr. J. Milton Best, of Paducah, who stood upon the roof of his own house when the fort at Paducah was besieged by the confederate army and his house was occupied by confederate sharpshooters picking off the Union gunners in the fort, and waved his flag as a signal to the Union gun-boats to fire upon and destroy his own house, making, with noble heroism, a willing sacrifice of everything he had in the world for the sake of his country.

And I ask my friends on the opposite side of the House to understand me now. I do not repudiate the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that the proclamation of amnesty by President Johnson entitles these men to compensation. But what I do insist upon is just this: that when we are paying judgments of the Court of Claims from day to day we ought to know, and the country ought to know, what is being paid. It may help us to a conclusion as to whether we can afford to pay some of these ruined heroes like Dr. Best, many of whom are now suffering not only from hope deferred, but from penury and hunger also. A few moments ago—and I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is present and will hear what I am about to say—a few moments ago, while standing in the area in front of the Speaker's desk, I propounded a question to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether these judgments of the Court of Claims were paid without appropriation by Congress. I understood him to say that they were not; that claims for property captured or abandoned after the proclamation declaring the war to be at an end were paid without an appropriation, but no claims for captured or abandoned cotton arising before that date. Being somewhat in doubt, from my recollection of the discussion of last Congress, I telegraphed to the Secretary of the Treasury, asking him this question: Are judgments of the Court of Claims for captured and abandoned cotton paid without an appropriation by Congress? I ask that his answer be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1874.

Hon. H. BOARDMAN SMITH:

Judgments of the Court of Claims for captured and abandoned cotton are paid out of an indefinite appropriation made by the act of March 3, 1873. (12 Statutes, page 820, section 3.)

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. There is an error of date in that telegram. The act referred to is the act of March, 1863, and not March, 1873. I ask the Clerk to read the section under which these judgments are paid.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury may require the special agents appointed under this act to give a bond, with such securities and in such amount as he shall deem necessary, and to require the increase of said amounts, and the strengthening of said security, as circumstances may demand; and he shall also cause a book or books of account to be kept, showing from whom such property was received, the cost of transportation, and proceeds of the sale thereof. And any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property may, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof in the Court of Claims; and on proof to the satisfaction of said court of his ownership of said property, of his right to the proceeds thereof, and that he has never given any aid or comfort to the present rebellion, to receive the residue of such proceeds after the deduction of any purchase money which may have been paid, together with the expense of transportation and sale of said property, and any other lawful expenses attending the disposition thereof.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Now, I ask the House to bear in mind that the appropriations for paying judgments of the Court of Claims have been only about $500,000 a year, while, if I mistake not, judgments have been rendered, single judgments for captured cotton, very largely exceeding that amount. Now, I assure our friends on the other side of the House that time and association with men who were once rebels, but are now, as I believe, sincerely loyal to the Government, have done much to soften resentments and to make me hope with confidence for a new union of hearts. I am for burying the past. We have been enemies. Let us now be friends. I am for abiding faithfully by the decisions of the Supreme Court, and for paying the just and lawful claims of men who were in the rebellion and were restored to their rights of property by the proclamation of amnesty. My amendment means nothing to the contrary. What I insist upon is simply that Congress shall not leave to the Court of Claims legislative powers, to make appropriations, nor permit that court to render judgments which are to be paid, to the amount of possibly $26,000,000, while neither Congress nor the country knows what is being done.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. MAYNARD. Before the gentleman takes his seat, allow me to call his attention to the fact that the true date of the act from which he has had a section read is March 12, 1863. That act is frequently referred to, and I call attention to the true date.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to strike out from this section all that relates to the printing of notes, bonds, &c., for the purpose of putting it into the sundry civil appropriation bill. I make that motion for the reason that the subject-matter of printing notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States is now being examined by the Committee on Banking and Currency. We have not their report, and we propose to strike out all relating to that subject here and wait until we can have the benefit of their report.

The portion of the section referred to was as follows:

For paper for notes, bonds, and other securities, including mill expenses, boxing, and transportation, $325,000.

For labor, (by the day or piece or contract,) including labor of workmen skilled in engraving, transferring, plate-printing, and other specialties necessary for carrying on the work of engraving and printing notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, the pay for such labor to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury at rates not exceeding the rates usually paid for such work, and for other expenses of engraving and printing notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, $1,175,000.

For materials other than paper required in the work of engraving and printing, $200,000.

For the purchase of engravers' tools, dies, rolls, and plates, and for machinery and repairs of the same, $60,000.

The motion of Mr. GARFIELD was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the heads of the several Executive Departments, and of other officers authorized or required to make estimates, to furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury, on or before the 1st day of October of each year, their annual estimates for the public service, to be included in the Book of Estimates prepared by law under his direction.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by adding to the section just read the following:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit as a part of the appendix to the Book of Estimates such extracts from the annual reports of the several heads of Departments and Bureaus as relate to estimates for appropriations and the necessities therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I now offer the following amendment, to come in as a separate section:

No judgments of the Court of Claims shall be paid beyond the amount of the appropriation made in this act and any unexpended balance of former appropriations, for the payment of the judgments of said court.

Mr. HANCOCK. I object to that amendment.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order that the provision of the amendment in regard to any unexpended balances under former laws is new legislation.

Mr. MAYNARD. I think this amendment will not effect the purpose which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] desires to accomplish, because under the act to which he is referring the action of the Court of Claims stands in a peculiar attitude. It is not within the general jurisdiction of the court; but the court by that act is made the arbiter, so to speak, to dispose of a special fund. This fund is not in the Treasury proper; it is not covered into the Treasury technically; but is lying there waiting till parties supposed to be entitled to it shall present their proofs, which they are required to do in the Court of Claims, instead of sending them to the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. A single word in answer to my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD.] This amendment is based upon the fact now ascertained that this money is being appropriated by the Court of Claims, Congress and the people knowing nothing about it. I appeal to my friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] and submit that it is hardly just, it is scarcely in consonance with what the people demand, that he should raise a point of order to prevent the adoption of this amendment designed to let Congress and the people know what is being done with this money.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest to the gentleman that he would reach the object he wishes to attain by providing that this money shall be covered into the Treasury. It will then stand like any other money in the Treasury, subject to be drawn out only by appropriations. The money is not as yet covered into the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. It has been understood heretofore for years that this money was so covered into the Treasury that it required an appropriation of Congress to take it out, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has so said here to-day. An amendment in the form suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] is even more obnoxious to the point of order than in the form in which I have put it. I am sorry that the point of order is insisted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] raises the point of order upon the amendment that it is not simply a restriction upon the appropriations in this bill, but a restriction upon unexpended balances not covered by the bill, and therefore changes existing law. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order. The amendment is not before the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee rise, and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3813) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and had directed him to report back the same with sundry amendments, and, as amended, recommend its passage.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to offer an amendment that should have been submitted in its appropriate place as we went through the bill, but it did not get here in time from the Department. The contingent expenses of the secretary's office of Utah Territory were not estimated for until the bill was made up. I move to amend by inserting the following at the end of line 980, under the head of "Contingent expenses for the Territory of Utah:"

For rent of secretary's office, $600; storage and care of Government property $300; fuel, $200; stationery, lights, and incidental expenses, $500; in all, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have received a letter from the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, calling my attention to the fact that under the Revised Statutes the title of the "Auditor for the Post-Office Department" has been changed, and that officer is now known as the "Sixth Auditor" only, not as the "Auditor for the Post-Office Department." Therefore I move to amend by striking out in line 476, after the word "Auditor," the words "of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department," and inserting before the word "Auditor" the word "Sixth." Upon this subject I submit the following documents:

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 18, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, and beg to call your attention to that portion relating to the appropriation for salaries for this office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, under the name of "Office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department," while the Revised Statutes would seem to necessitate a change to that of "Office of the Sixth Auditor."

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. J. MARTIN,
Auditor.

Hon. J. A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 17, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the fact that, by the laws relating to the Treasury Department, chapter 4, as compiled from the Revised Statutes of the United States, approved June 22, 1874, the title of the Auditor of this office appears to have been changed to that of Sixth Auditor, and to request instructions as to how far this change of title may affect the appointments of employés of this office and also the general business thereof. At present all books, blanks, envelopes, &c., bear the designation of "Office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department," and the appropriation for salaries for the year ending June 30, 1876, is being made under the same name.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. J. MARTIN,
Auditor.

Hon. B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to amend by striking out the following amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole:

For the support and maintenance of the National Military Asylum for the relief of totally disabled officers and men of the volunteer forces of the United States, $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

I move further to amend by striking out the following:

The amount necessary for the support and maintenance of said home for the balance of the fiscal year ending March, 1875, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and is made available on and after the first day of April, 1875, subject, nevertheless, to the provisions herein before contained as to unexpended balances of moneys heretofore drawn or received, and to all other provisions regulating the annual appropriations hereafter to be made as herein provided.

I find on examination at the Treasury Department that this home for disabled soldiers has an accumulated fund of $590,250 invested in United States securities; an ample fund to carry it through the remainder of the fiscal year after the 1st of April next, and to carry it through the next fiscal year. Consequently there is no necessity for any appropriation in this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to move an amendment in reference to the building now occupied by the State Department, on Fourteenth street, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of building on Fourteenth street, to the time of expiration of lease $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. GARFIELD. We have cut out all appropriation for the rent of that building for the next fiscal year supposing it would not be used by the State Department, but the lease does not expire until sometime in the next fiscal year, and therefore we have to make provision for that rent.

Mr. HOLMAN. What building does this refer to?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The building now occupied on Fourteenth street by the State Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was it omitted by mistake?

Mr. GARFIELD. It was. We struck out the whole supposing we would not need the building in the next fiscal year, but the Secretary of State informs us the lease does not expire until next fall, and we therefore have to make appropriations to pay for the rent in the next fiscal year.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to be considered as objecting to any agreement on the part of this House to the proposition that the head of any Department of the Government can bind Congress to make appropriations in the future because of the terms of any lease he has made unless under specific appropriation therefor made by Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. I demand the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest now that the House adjourn, and this bill and pending amendments will come up the first thing in the morning.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. POLAND. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope not.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that we meet to-morrow for debate only, no business whatever to be transacted.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's proposition is that no business whatever is to be transacted.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. CROOKE. I beg leave to object, because these meetings on Saturday for debate only, no business to be transacted, have brought this House into disrepute more than any other thing.

The question recurred on Mr. POLAND'S motion to adjourn over.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 42.

Mr. MAYNARD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to adjourn until Monday next; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered. Before that question is put, Mr. Speaker, I will myself occupy a few moments of the time allowed me under the rules. I wish first to call the attention of the House to one or two amendments where I have made a mistake, which I wish the House to correct. I moved to strike out the words "newspapers and," and I find in doing so I have stricken out what has been included in this appropriation bill for a series of years. The clerks of the respective Houses subscribe for newspapers for members for their convenience, which are paid for out of the $125 a year allowed to members. The words "newspapers and" should therefore stand as they were originally reported in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only effect of putting these words back in the bill is to keep in office at a high salary a clerk to attend to that duty. I believe every member of the House can subscribe himself for the different papers he may need without the interposition of this clerk.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Clerk of the House says this must be done in order to have subscribed for the newspapers which are paid for out of the sum allowed members.

Mr. Speaker, but few changes have been made in the text of this appropriation bill. The great change has been made in regard to the national asylums. The statements made a short time ago by my colleague on the committee [Mr. WHEELER] show we need not appropriate a dollar for them for the coming year, because they have on hand an accumulated fund of nearly half a million dollars. We have therefore struck out the clause appropriating half a million dollars for that purpose.

I now desire to yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. TYNER] in regard to the rent for the use of a building for the Post-Office Department, in reference to which the House, I think, last night was disposed to go off rather hurriedly without full information.

Mr. TYNER. When the question was raised yesterday about the rent of a building for the Post-Office Department, my colleague [Mr. WILSON] made some suggestions to the committee which, I have no doubt, induced the committee to cut down the amount reported by the Committee on Appropriations. In the debate which occurred upon that subject I stated my recollection about some of the facts connected with the rent of that building, but since that time I have taken occasion to make further inquiry. All the papers relating to the renting of that building were submitted to the Committee on Appropriations last year by the Postmaster-General, and printed by order of the House in Miscellaneous Document No. 42, first session of the present Congress. Now, I wish to call the attention of the House for a few moments to the facts presented by this document.

The Postmaster-General, finding it necessary to secure additional rooms for the clerical force of his Department, appointed a committee consisting of two officers of the Treasury Department, the Sixth Auditor, the chief clerk of the Sixth Auditor's Office, the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, the chief clerk of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, and the principal clerk of the stamp division of his department, to examine eight different buildings which had been called to his attention in the vicinity of the Post-Office Department. That committee, after a thorough examination, reported to him, under date of May 9, 1873, that in their judgment the house known as No. 708 E street, immediately opposite the main entrance to the Department, was the better one for the Department to rent. In that report they stated to the Postmaster-General that the building contained some fourteen or fifteen rooms, all of good size, and many of them larger than the rooms of the Post-Office building, and that the rent proposed for that building was $400 per month, or $4,800 per year. It seems that the Postmaster-General thought that that building was scarcely adequate to the wants of the Department and that the rent was too high, and he therefore submitted the matter to the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, who detailed A. G. Mills, his chief clerk, and W. T. Dewdney, assistant superintendent of the State Department, to make a personal investigation of all these buildings. They reported to the Supervising Architect, under date of May 26, that in their judgment the building 915 E street, which was finally rented to the Department, was the better one. I shall quote a sentence or two from their report:

This building we consider the best adapted for office purposes, for the reason that the back building is separated from the main building by an area and brick covered hall-way, which admits of two rear windows to each floor, thus admitting to the main building more light and air from the rear than either of the other premises which have a back building afford.

And they wind up their report by saying:

We express no opinion upon the eligibility of the location of these buildings nor upon the rent asked for the same.

Upon the submission of that report to the Supervising Architect, he reports to the Postmaster-General that he also personally examined all of these buildings, and he says that in his judgment 915 E street is the best one for the Department to rent. And he adds:

The only objection that can be made is the amount of rental, which is in my opinion rather high.

And then he recommends the lease of this property, provided the terms are or can be made satisfactory to the Department. Upon that the Postmaster-General began to negotiate for the lease of the property, and one A. C. Bradley leased that building to the Post-Office Department for a term of three years, under date of the 6th of June, 1873.

So far as the papers that are on file show, A. C. Bradley was the owner of that building on the 6th of June, 1873, and not Alexander R. Shepherd as was suggested in the discussion yesterday. But to cover that point I telegraphed to the Postmaster-General since the House has been in session to-day, putting to him this inquiry:

Inquire of Mr. A. C. Bradley, lessor, if he were the bona fide owner of the premises No. 915 E street on the 6th day of June, 1873, the date of the lease.

And I received from him a few minutes ago this answer:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1874.

Hon. J. N. TYNER:

Tax-books show deed Henry D. Loney to Andrew C. Bradley, June 7, 1873, and Andrew C. Bradley to A. R. Shepherd, August 27, 1874. Recorder's office closed. Mr. Bradley states that the property was conveyed to him absolutely and in fee-simple by Stickney, and others, of Freedman's Bank.

MARSHALL JEWELL,
Postmaster-General.

Now, that I apprehend ought in the absence of record evidence to establish the fact that A. R. Shepherd was not the owner of the building at the time it was leased to the Post-Office Department.

Mr. COTTON. What difference does it make who owns the building?

Mr. TYNER. That is not the question we are discussing now. I am only talking in reference to what occurred yesterday.

Again, I find on inquiry at the Department, of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, that he never heard of Mr. Shepherd in connection with this property until the month of November last; and on examination of the receipts which were taken for this rent, in the hands of Mr. Chenoweth, the disbursing officer for the Department, I find that A. C. Bradley has received his rents for this building down to September 30, 1874, and under date of 21st of November, Bradley notified the Department that he had sold the property to Alexander R. Shepherd. This, I think, constitutes sufficient proof as to the ownership of the property in the absence of record evidence.

Now let me say one word as to the rate at which the building is rented. The Postmaster-General, under the advice of the Supervising Architect, declined to give $400 per month; but he did negotiate for it at the rate of $350 per month, or $4,200 a year. Previous to this lease the Department rented a stable for the use of the horses connected with this Department at the rate of $30 per month, or $360 a year. There was a brick stable upon these premises, and immediately upon the execution of this lease the former stable was abandoned and this stable used, a saving being effected in that way of $360 a year.

Again, sir, the lowest rent for any property which these several committees reported to the Department was that for the property on E street, immediately opposite the main entrance of the Department. This contains fifteen rooms, and the rent would have been $4,800 a year; while the Postmaster-General rented the premises at 915 E street at $4,200, being $600 less for a building which contains twenty-two rooms as against the fifteen rooms in the other building.

I only desire to say, in conclusion, that so far as I am individually concerned I do not care a fig about the rent of this building. I know nothing about it except in my connection with the Committee on Appropriations; but I desired to bring before the House facts to show them that the Committee on Appropriations, instead of being derelict in duty in hunting up all the circumstances connected with this transaction, were, in my judgment, more fortified in their action upon it than in any other case that I have known to be brought before the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been talked about as though I had made the objection yesterday and moved to strike out this feature of the bill because a particular person was the owner of the premises. At that time I entirely disclaimed any such purpose. I stated then, and I state now, that I had received information that the rent paid for the property was inordinate. I did not know that there was any appropriation for it in this bill until a few minutes before the Clerk reached that portion of the bill. But there is, nevertheless, something peculiar about this whole business. If the amount of rent is not larger than ought to be paid, I do not care who owns the property. I want the party paid all that it is reasonably worth, but I called the attention of the House yesterday to the fact that but a short time ago this property was sold for $13,000 to the Freedman's Bank. I have now a memorandum which has been handed to me, and I will cite from it some dates. On the 1st of July, 1872, the property was sold to the Freedman's Bank in trust for $13,000, and, as I understand the law to be, that $13,000 was the actual consideration paid for the property. Then, on the 16th of June, 1873, this property was conveyed by the Freedman's Bank to Mr. A. C. Bradley for $18,500, and on the 27th of August, 1873, as I have it—my colleague says it was in 1864—I do not know which is right——

Mr. TYNER. I quoted from the answer to my telegram from the Postmaster-General which was based upon the tax-book.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana; exactly. He took it from the tax-book. I take it from the transcript or abstract of the record as handed to me, which shows the date to be the 27th of August, 1873, and the consideration named $18,500.

Now it strikes me that a payment of $4,200 a year would in five years pay for a property selling first for $13,000 and then for $18,500, and therefore that it is an inordinate rent and the matter ought to be inquired into. Here we are paying in five years $3,000 more than the property is selling for in the market. It strikes me that that is an inordinate rent and that its payment is a matter that ought to be inquired into.

Now, in order to satisfy myself in regard to this matter, I called at the Post-Office Department this morning myself, and then for the first time I got the information contained in the document from which my colleague has been reading. The House will remember that I first put interrogatories to the chairman of the committee with a view of eliciting information on the subject as to the value of the property and as to the rent paid; but the matter had passed out of the mind of the chairman, and he was unable to give me that information. It was for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the subject that I made the statement I did.

Now, on examination of this document I find two peculiar things. In the first place, on the 22d of May, 1873, Mr. B. H. Warner was proposing to rent this property to the Government at the rate of $400 per month. How he happens to figure in connection with this property I do not know. I take it for granted that he was the owner, but this abstract furnished to me does not show that Mr. Warner had any interest in the property or that any conveyance of it had ever been made to him. Perhaps my colleague is better informed on this point than I am. And on the 22d of May he was making propositions to the Post-Office Department to rent this very property to the Government for $400 a month.

Then in looking over this matter I find another peculiar thing. I find that Mr. Bradley got a conveyance of this property from the Freedman's Savings Bank on June 16, 1873, and ten days before that he had made a lease of this property to the Government under the lease already spoken of. My colleague says he had another conveyance from somebody else one day before he made this lease. Now, how this is I do not know. There seems to be a great deal of mixing up of this matter.

As I said before, I have no disposition to interfere with the rents of any gentleman, provided they are fair and reasonable. I do not care whether this property is leased to the Department by Shepherd or anybody else. All I knew was that here was this property, the deeds on file showing its value, and it is rented at such rates that in five years the owner would get thousands more than it is worth.

Mr. TYNER. The lease is for three years, not for five.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. It is for three years, with the privilege of two more.

Now, one word more with reference to a point raised yesterday by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR.] It is due to the Postmaster-General, Mr. Creswell, that it should be stated to the House—then I believe my colleague did not state it, and therefore as a matter of justice I do so—that there is in this lease this clause:

And it is hereby mutually understood and agreed, by and between the parties hereto, that this lease is made subject to an appropriation by Congress, for the payment of the rental herein stipulated for, and that no payment shall be made to said party of the first part on account of such rental until such appropriation shall be available.

The House will see that the Postmaster-General fortified himself in that direction. He put that provision into the lease, and it is not subject to criticism on that account.

Mr. TYNER. Then allow me to put this question to my colleague: As Congress ratified that lease by appropriating money in the deficiency bill of last year to pay the rent of this building for a portion of one year, and in the regular appropriation bill for the period of a whole year, does not that bind Congress to carry out the lease?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I say not; that depends altogether upon whether or not the Postmaster-General had the right to do this thing. If he rented property without authority of law, I do not concede that we are bound for the whole of the rental because Congress may have made an appropriation to pay a part of it.

Mr. RANDALL. There are two reasons which I think guided the House in its action yesterday: The first was that the rent for this building was enormous; the next was the point made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR,] that the Postmaster-General had no right to bind the Government either for three or five years. The Constitution itself provides that even Congress shall not possess power to make appropriations for the Army for more than two years. And the conclusion is, that expenditures in any Department of the Government certainly should not be incurred by any officer of the Government beyond that time.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire simply to say that it seems to me, on the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] that the Postmaster-General took exactly the view which is taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL;] and he was bound to take that view by previous legislation of Congress, which of course he was bound by. It now appears that he put into that lease for three years, with the option for two more, a provision that it should be binding only in case of an appropriation by Congress to that extent. Now, of course that makes the lessor of the building subject to the condition that Congress by failing to appropriate for the rent in any year terminates the lease. In other words, it is a lease binding upon the lessor and not binding upon the Government, either in law or in honor, except as a lease from year to year and subject from year to year to the renewal of the approbation of Congress. It seems therefore that the Postmaster-General obeyed the law and protected the Government in all respects, unless it shall appear that the amount of rent is improper, about which of course I know nothing.

Mr. GARFIELD. A word only in regard to this rent. Since the House adjourned yesterday I have looked over a statement of the rents paid by the Government for buildings in this city. And I am satisfied, judging from information which has been printed and laid on our tables, showing not only the character of the lease but the size of the building and the comparative value of this building and five others examined by the commission, and a statement of the rent at which they could be obtained, that this was the most eligible and on the whole the most desirable, both as to accommodation and prices, of the buildings to be had. For instance, the Secretary of State pays $1,000 a year for a stable and wagon-shed which is probably not worth over $5,000 altogether. We were paying $17,000 rent for three floors of the Freedman's Bank building; but the Committee on Appropriations last year, thinking that too large a rent, called before us the party from whom it was rented, and said that we should order the building abandoned altogether unless he would cut down the rent; whereupon it was cut down to $14,000, which was regarded on all hands as a reasonable rent. What is known as the Kidwell building, now occupied by the Bureau of Statistics, is now rented for $5,000 a year.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it done in accordance with law?

Mr. GARFIELD. This is all done under the law, as I understand. Of course we can at any time stop appropriating money to pay these rents, and thereby we would vacate the leases, I suppose. Let me specify another case. The building occupied by the Paymaster-General and his force is rented by the Government; and we pay for rent and fuel $12,000. Just how much of that is rent I do not know; but probably not less than $10,000. That, of course, is a large building. But in the case now under consideration the Postmaster-General took every possible precaution; and I think we are not paying a very large rent for this building.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Do we pay the taxes?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know; I presume not; I presume we do not pay anything but the rent. This building was originally constructed for a dwelling-house; but when it is occupied by a number of clerks, with their desks and books and papers, the Government must expect to pay somewhat more rent than would be charged to a private family using the building in a more quiet way than the Government uses it.

Mr. KELLOGG. How does the rent of that building compare with the rates charged to members of Congress here?

Mr. GARFIELD. A man cannot ordinarily get a parlor and bedroom for less than $100 a month, and in many cases considerably more is charged.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I wish to say only one word further in regard to this matter. Upon the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as to the rents the Government is paying, it seems to me it is about time something should be done for the purpose of correcting this matter. Certainly these rents mentioned by that gentleman cannot be regarded as reasonable; and if other Departments are paying extravagant rents it is no reason why an extravagant rent should be paid by the Post-Office Department.

Now, I am told by a gentleman who I am confident knows exactly what he is talking about, that just before the renting of this building for the use of the Post-Office Department this very property was rented for $1,800 a year, and there was a stipulation that so soon as another renting could be made at $2,000 a year that tenant should go out or retain the property at $2,000 a year. That is the rent at which the building was held. But when the Government came to be dealt with, as a matter of course the Government must pay two or three times more than anybody else.

I care nothing about this matter. If the House, in view of all the facts, thinks this a reasonable rent for the property, I certainly have no personal objection. If it is not a reasonable rent, then as a matter of course we ought to strike out the appropriation, or at least retain it in the form amended in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TYNER. I call for a separate vote upon this amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to call for a separate vote on the amendment abolishing the Capitol police. I wish to make a brief statement. This police force consists of thirty members. Of that number twenty are soldiers who have been specially put upon that force because they were disabled by wounds or had rendered meritorious service in the war; nine of them have been disabled so that, although they can walk about and perform all the duties of police in watching this building, they are unfit for other service; three of them have each lost an arm.

Now, it is somewhat remarkable that almost the only proposition made here in the way of economy is one to strike from their positions in our service the disabled soldiers on the police in our Capitol. That the services of these men are needed is apparent, because the amendment itself provides as watchmen almost the same number; but it calls them by another name and reduces their salary to a mere pittance, upon which a man can scarcely live. I ask of the House that by this amendment a blow shall not be directed against these disabled soldiers serving upon the police of the Capitol. I may say that I was surprised that the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who during all my acquaintance with him here has been the soldiers' friend, should direct his most vigorous and direct attack against the few that are left in place about this Capitol.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say that I do not know personally a single gentleman on the police force. I know very well that if, as I understand from the gentleman's statement, a number of disabled soldiers are employed upon the Capitol police, then when their service is not required upon that force they certainly can be employed as watchmen; and we have provided for an increase of watchmen from eight to twenty-one. I trust my friend from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] if the amendment of the Committee of the Whole should be adopted by the House, will see that these disabled soldiers are employed on that force of watchmen which it is very probably necessary to increase.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote has been asked by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. TYNER] upon the amendment; which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 1526 the word "four" and insert "two," so that the clause will read:

For rent of house numbered 915 E street northwest, $2,200; Provided, That the above sum shall not be deemed to be paid on account of any lease for years of said building.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 79, noes 72.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment upon which a separate vote has been asked by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 104, strike out "three lieutenants, $1,600 each; twenty-seven privates, at $1,400 each, $37,800;" and strike out "eight" and insert "twenty-one," so it will read "twenty-one watchmen, at $1,000 each."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 95.

Mr. STORM demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 21, noes 106.

So (one-fifth not having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment of the Committee of the Whole was non-concurred in.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote not being called for upon any of the other amendments, they will be considered as concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TROUBLES IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the select committee to whom was referred so much of the President's message as relates to the condition of the South be authorized to employ a clerk and stenographer; and either as a committee or by a sub-committee of their number to send for persons and papers, and to proceed to the State of Louisiana, to make such investigations as they shall deem necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. A stenographer is necessary, but a clerk certainly is not.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. A sub-committee will be charged with that duty, for it will not be necessary for more than three of that committee to go, and they do not propose to employ a clerk if they can get along without one.

Mr. HOLMAN. The duties of some of the most laborious committees of this House—committees charged with similar duties—have been carried on with a stenographer and without the employment of a clerk.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. It is quite obvious it may be necessary in the course of the investigation to have a clerk who will take charge of summoning witnesses and keeping the records and other papers of the committee. If the House is willing to trust this committee, I think the resolution I have offered should be adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the House is willing to trust the committee.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is absolutely impossible to conduct such an investigation as has been intrusted to that committee without the employment of a stenographer and a clerk.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I am a member of the sub-committee, and the gentleman may be assured we will not do anything which we shall consider unnecessary.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. G. F. HOAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. JOHN B. RICE, OF ILLINOIS.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to perform the painful duty of announcing to this House that the public press brings to us the sad intelligence of the death last night, at Norfolk, Virginia, of the Hon. JOHN B. RICE, of Illinois. I move, therefore, that a committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker to attend the funeral of my deceased colleague, and convey his remains to the grave near his home in Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois announces to the House the death of his colleague, and moves that a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to attend the remains to their last resting-place.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In announcing the committee, as the Chair has not had time to consult gentlemen whether it will be convenient for them to leave, he asks the privilege of the House, as it has agreed to adjourn over until Monday next, that if any gentleman he announces shall decline to serve he may fill the vacancy without making the announcement to the House.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. I again ask unanimous consent, in behalf of a number of gentlemen who desire to make speeches, that we shall meet to-morrow for debate only, no business whatever to be transacted.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I object.

The SPEAKER announced, as the committee ordered by the resolution just adopted, Mr. FORT of Illinois, Mr. CLYMER of Pennsylvania, Mr. WARD of Illinois, Mr. BURROWS of Michigan, and Mr. SOUTHARD of Ohio.

Mr. FORT. I now move, as a further mark of respect to the memory of my deceased colleague, that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned till Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BLAND: The petition of citizens of Benton County, Arkansas, for establishment of certain post-routes, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DANFORD: The petition of Thomas Parry, formerly of Thirtieth Ohio Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FARWELL: The petition of citizens of Chicago, for a further extension of the pier at Marquette, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LYNCH: The petition of John R. Reynolds, of Dayton, Ohio, to be compensated for supplies furnished the United States Army in Mississippi, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. NIBLACK: The petition of the heirs at law of Kenneth B. Rowe, deceased, late second lieutenant One hundred and forty-fourth Indiana Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NILES: Papers relating to the claims of Turner Bobbitt and Jonathan Summers, of Scott County, Mississippi, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PARSONS: The petition of Harvey Crittenton, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812.

By Mr. PERRY: The petition of Horace L. Emery, for extension of letters-patent, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. PHILLIPS: Memorial of citizens of Kansas, in relation to the currency and taxation, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in relation to settlers on Miami Indian lands, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, recommending a change in the management of Indian affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of postponing payments on public lands in the State of Kansas, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, asking that homestead settlers in Kansas may be absent from their lands one year, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, for postponing time of payment to settlers on Kansas Indian reserve and trust lands, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. STANDIFORD: The petition of tobacco, manufacturers, warehousemen, and leaf-tobacco dealers, for the repeal of the import duty on licorice paste, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STONE: Memorial of the Union Merchants' Exchange and Board of Trade of Saint Louis, Missouri, for aid to the Texas and Pacific and the Atlantic and Pacific Railroads, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. THORNBURGH: The petition of Colonel F. Young, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia: The petition of John McIntire, for a pension. to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, December 21, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

Hon. THOMAS W. TIPTON, from the State of Nebraska, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the memorial of the senate and house of representatives of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, in favor of the repeal of the law imposing penalties on any person selling leaf-tobacco to any one except a licensed tobacco dealer; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONOVER presented the petition of Mrs. Margaret E. Johnson, widow of Charles M. Johnson, late master of the schooner Pickering, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAGER. I present the memorial of certain citizens of California, in regard to Alaska. These memorialists have gone to considerable expense in fitting out an exploring party to examine timber lands in that Territory so far as it may be adapted to ship-building. They have obtained valuable statistics from the explorations that have been made, and they now memorialize Congress for the privilege of buying a tract of timber land with a view to establishing ship-yards there for the construction of ships. In California there has been great difficulty hitherto in getting sufficient ships to carry our grain to the markets of the world, and the idea is that if our people engage in ship-building a great many of the farmers there will unite to buy the ships in order to transport their grain. I move that the memorial be printed and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as it relates to the purchase of a tract of land, and I think should more properly go to that committee than any other.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented a memorial of the Massachusetts State Temperance Alliance, signed by Rev. A. A. Miner, president, and Rev. W. M. Thayer, secretary; the memorial of the ministers' meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Boston and of a large number of clergymen, praying for the prohibition by appropriate legislation, of the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia and in the Territories of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOWE presented the petition and accompanying papers of Harry E. Eastman, late of the Second Wisconsin Cavalry, praying to be allowed the pay and allowances of a lieutenant-colonel of that regiment from May 1, 1864, to February 1, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SCOTT. I present the memorial of the preachers' meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Philadelphia, asking Congress, by appropriate legislation, to prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia and in the Territories of the United States. These memorials, I believe, at the last session were referred to the Committee on Finance, and that committee reported a bill on the general subject, which I believe is yet on the Calendar. I suppose the petitions may as well go back to that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PRATT presented the memorial of the Pennsylvania State Temperance Union, signed by James Black, president, and Rev. D. C. Babcock, secretary, praying for the prohibition by appropriate legislation of the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of R. L. Laws, commander in the United States Navy, praying to be restored to the position in the Navy that he occupied prior to July, 1866, next below Captain W. W. Low; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented the petition of James Ballard, of Madison County, North Carolina, praying to be restored to the pension-rolls; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPENCER presented the memorial of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of the State of Alabama, signed by the officers, representing fifteen thousand members, praying for the prohibition by appropriate legislation of the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the Territories of the United States and in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave to present a memorial styled the "national prohibition memorial," addressed to this body and the House of Representatives, setting forth that the memorialists believe the alcoholic-liquor traffic to be the chief cause of a large proportion of the prevailing pauperism, crime, and disease, and that it is inimical to morality, religion, and the general welfare, and they ask Congress to prohibit, by appropriate legislation, the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia and throughout the Territories of the United States under the immediate jurisdiction of the National Government. This memorial is signed by Mr. H. P. Cushing, Hon. John B. Mead, and other distinguished citizens of the State of Vermont. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FLANAGAN presented the memorial of members of the order of Sons of Temperance of the District of Columbia, signed by the officers, praying for the prohibition by appropriate legislation of the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the United States Territories and the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STEVENSON presented the petition of John W. Magowan, Dennis A. Walker, Robert Owings, Daniel Furgerson, Eli Henry, Richard Clay, and Dennis Bradshaw, trustees of the colored Methodist church at Mount Sterling, Montgomery County, Kentucky, praying compensation for the use of their church by United States troops as a hospital during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of William Sharp, of Norfolk, Virginia, praying for the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BOREMAN presented a petition of citizens of West Virginia, praying the establishment of a post-route from Cove Creek to Logan Court House; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of J. F. Caldwell, of West Virginia, praying a pension for service as a soldier in the United States Army in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a paper of J. F. Caldwell, in regard to his invention for transporting railroad cars over rivers in the absence of bridges; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I present the petition of James G. Berret and several other persons, residents and property-holders in the District of Columbia, representing that the proposed tax of 2 per cent. on property in this District is too high, and proposing in lieu thereof 1 per cent. As that bill has been reported from a committee and is under consideration, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented a memorial of citizens of Chester County, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to prohibit by appropriate legislation the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia and in the Territories of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of merchants, ship-owners, and shippers of the port of New Orleans, in regard to hospitals for the commercial marine of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented the memorial of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of the State of New Jersey, signed by the officers, representing eight thousand members, asking Congress to prohibit by appropriate legislation the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia and in the Territories of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of hardware dealers of Hoboken, New Jersey, praying the extension of Harvey Lull's patent for shutter-hinges; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. DENNIS presented the petition of Elizabeth L. White, mother of James T. White, late of Company B, Eleventh Maryland Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, presented a petition on behalf of the State of Maryland, to be reimbursed for arms and ammunition issued during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Moore N. Falls, president of the Baltimore Steam Packet Company, praying compensation for the use of a steamer belonging to that company in keeping the harbor of Baltimore clear of obstruction to navigation by ice in the winter of 1862, under a contract with Major Belger, assistant quartermaster United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LEWIS presented the petition of Levi Washington, of Yorktown, Virginia, praying relief for services rendered by him in June, 1862; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Governor Dogans, praying rent for certain buildings occupied by the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Ann Toliver, mother of David Toliver, late a soldier in the One hundred and nineteenth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of certain members of the United States Marine Corps during the late war, praying for an equalization of bounties, in accordance with the provisions of the bill equalizing bounties of soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WASHBURN presented the memorial of the Grace Methodist Episcopal church of Springfield, Massachusetts, signed by its pastor and officers, asking Congress to prohibit by appropriate legislation the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SPRAGUE presented the petition of Samuel Crapin, praying compensation for services rendered as a soldier in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. NORWOOD presented the petition of A. C. Davenport, praying compensation as deputy collector, abstract and debenture clerk at the custom-house in Savannah, Georgia, in the months of August, September, and October, 1854, during the prevalence of the cholera; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting copies of the reports and recommendations of Generals Pope and Ord relative to the bill introduced by the Hon. P. W. HITCHCOCK for the relief of persons suffering from the ravages of grasshoppers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. MERRIMON. Senate bill No. 407, being a bill for the relief of Enos J. Pennypacker, was referred to the Committee on Claims and an adverse report was made and that report was concurred in by the Senate. There are papers important to Mr. Pennypacker filed with the bill. He asks leave to withdraw those papers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, leave will be granted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They should not be withdrawn without copies being retained. We never allow that in any case of an adverse report. The Secretary should retain copies.

Mr. MERRIMON. I concur in the Senator's suggestion, and the copies will be left.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order will be made with that understanding.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask that an order be made for the withdrawal of the petition and accompanying papers of Niel Nielson, praying to be placed on the pension-rolls. The case was reported upon adversely at the last session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Leave will be granted, copies being left with the Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, reported a bill (S. No. 1044) to provide for the resumption of specie payments; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give notice that to-morrow, if there shall be no more pressing business, I will ask the Senate to take up this bill with a view to present action.

Mr. PRATT. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1946) restoring the name of Mary Byrd Dallas to the pension-rolls, have had the same under consideration and have directed me to report it back to the Senate with the recommendation that the bill be indefinitely postponed, and for this reason: That since the bill has been in the Senate action has been taken, by the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, at the Pension Office, and her name is already restored to the pension-rolls, accomplishing therefore all the House bill seeks to do. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. The same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Miriam Ward, of Johnson County, Iowa, praying to be allowed a pension, have had the same under consideration and have directed me to report it back to the Senate and to ask that the committee may be discharged from its further consideration, because the Commissioner of Pensions informs the committee that the claim is still pending in his office awaiting the reception of further evidence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the petition, if there be no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3379) for the further security of navigation on the Mississippi River, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3474) to establish Atlanta, in the State of Georgia, a port of delivery, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3592) to create a stevedores' and other maritime liens on sea-going vessels, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. NORWOOD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of George McCoy, praying for a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

LIBRARIAN'S REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print extra copies of the Report of the Librarian of Congress, have directed me to report it back and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That five hundred extra copies of the Annual Report of the Librarian of Congress for the year 1874 be printed for distribution by the Librarian.

THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing instruct me to report a bill and to ask for its present consideration. A concurrent resolution was passed last week to bind one hundred and fifty copies of the Revised Statutes without waiting for the index, they being wanted for immediate use; but it appears that the act of Congress which places those volumes in the custody of the Secretary of State is so iron-bound and copper-fastened that he has no right to deliver them. Therefore it is necessary to pass an act in order to cover the resolution of the two Houses. I believe the books have already been bound and actually delivered to the committees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it read first.

The bill (S. No. 1054) reserving for the use of Congress one hundred and fifty copies of the Revised Statutes authorized to be printed by the act of June 20, 1874, was read twice and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides that the one hundred and fifty copies of the Revised Statutes of the United States bound and delivered to the two Houses of Congress by the Congressional Printer under the concurrent resolution agreed to on the 11th of December, 1874, be taken and reserved from the number ordered by the Secretary of State under the act of Congress passed the 20th day of June, 1874.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing instruct me to report back the resolution of the House of Representatives requiring that copies of the Agricultural Reports for 1872 and 1873 which have been printed for the use of the Commissioner shall be taken from him and distributed, two-thirds to the House and one-third to the Senate. The committee recommend that the Senate do not concur with the House in that resolution. I therefore move its indefinite postponement, and I desire to say that the greater portion of the reports which are proposed to be taken from the Commissioner have already been distributed, and they were absolutely necessary for his correspondents, and they were given to him for that purpose.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether the appropriation for printing for Congress, made at the last session, would not authorize Congress to direct the publication of copies of the reports of 1872 and 1873 for the use of Congress. Six hundred and fifty thousand dollars was appropriated, I think. I understand that that would be sufficient to authorize the publication of the reports of 1872 and 1873. I notice that $25,000 was appropriated for the folding of these reports, and I think it was an omission that a number of the reports for the use of Congress were not directed to be published.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was an omission that Congress deliberately made, and which the Committee on Printing cannot very well supply. Doubtless there was money enough appropriated, but it cannot be directed to that purpose without the order of Congress.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That I understand, but I understand there was money enough appropriated. Therefore, if a resolution is brought in for that purpose, I hope Congress will entertain it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the resolution, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That one-third of the reports of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the years 1872 and 1873, printed upon the appropriation of $50,000 by the act of June 23, 1874, be delivered to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, and that two-thirds of the said reports be delivered to the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, for distribution among the people by Senators and Representatives.

Mr. DAVIS. I could not hear all that took place between the Senators on the other side of the Chamber; and I rise to ask whether any of these agricultural reports were ordered to be printed for the use of Congress, or whether they are to be consumed entirely by the Department. Did not the last Congress order some reports for the use of Congress as well as of the Agricultural Department?

Mr. ANTHONY. It did not.

Mr. DAVIS. Then we are to understand that the sixty or seventy thousand copies that have been printed are all for the use of the Agricultural Department, and not for the use of Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was so specified in the order to print, that the copies printed should be for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture. None were printed for distribution by Congress. This resolution proposed to take from the Commissioner of Agriculture reports that had been assigned to him, and to distribute them to the two Houses of Congress. Most of them have already been distributed by him.

Mr. DAVIS. I would suggest that the resolution go on the Calendar instead of being indefinitely postponed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would suggest to my friend from West Virginia that I do not think that is necessary, unless he sees some special reason for it. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Printing says the appropriation was sufficient to have had enough printed for the use of Congress, and all that will be necessary will be for our committee to report a resolution and then the printing can be done.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know the state of the appropriation. I presume there was money enough appropriated for that purpose, because the amount of public printing for Congress has been very small; but I think this resolution had better be indefinitely postponed for this reason: that the Commissioner may feel bound, if this resolution is pending in Congress, to hold up the few remaining copies that he has. It will be of no use to distribute them to us because there are so few of them, and it might subject him to inconvenience not to be able to distribute them to his correspondents. He might, out of respect to the supposed will of Congress, withhold the distribution of the remaining copies.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw the objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the resolution of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was postponed indefinitely.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BOGY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1045) to amend and explain the provisions of the act of June 10, 1872, relating to land titles; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1046) for the benefit of Moore N. Falls; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1047) to reimburse the State of Maryland for arms and munitions of war furnished during the war; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WASHBURN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1048) for the construction of a fire-alarm telegraph in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DENNIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1049) for the relief of F. O. Wyse, late lieutenant-colonel, &c.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OGLESBY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1050) to fix the date of entry into the military service of colonel and brevet Major-General Benjamin H. Grierson, United States Army, and to correct his record on the Army Register; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1051) authorizing the extension of the patent granted to Harvey Lull, of Hoboken, New Jersey, for a self-locking shutter-hinge; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARPENTER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1052) in relation to affixing stamps upon vessels containing fermented liquors; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1053) to amend chapter 7 of title 33 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1055) granting a pension to Charles H. Crippin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1056) granting a pension to Emily L. Heron, of Obion County, Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1057) amending an act granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 and the widows of deceased soldiers, approved February 14, 1871; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1058) to legalize assignments of pay of officers and others in the Government service; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1059) to incorporate the Dakota and Montana Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONOVER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1060) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret E. Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1023) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—TEXAS APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Mr. President, I rise to a personal explanation. I propose to read from the New York Herald of the 19th an article to which I invite particularly the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads [Mr. RAMSEY] and of my colleague, [Mr. HAMILTON.] The article commences—

In the Senate "everything is" not "lovely." While the Administration Senators are advising together about a policy, the President's nominations are pretty sharply scrutinized and do not always pass muster. For instance, about four years ago Congress passed a law prohibiting further promotions in certain of the staff corps of the Army. Last session this prohibition was repealed. At the beginning of this session forty or fifty nominations for promotions in the corps were sent to the Senate. These nominations were so worded as to take effect four years back, which would give the back-pay for that time to all the nominees. The Senate Committee on Military Affairs have concluded not to recommend the confirmation of these appointments until the nominations are made to take effect from this date.

Now, here is the immediate point that I call attention to:

Again, Senator FLANAGAN has adopted a queer method of delaying action on the Texas post-office nominations sent into the Senate at the beginning of the session. By the usage of the Senate the committees to which the nominations for office are referred consult with the republican Senator for whose State the nominations are made before acting on them. The nominations aforesaid were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices, and on the same day Mr. FLANAGAN went into the committee-room, put the nominations in his pocket, and they have not been seen since."

Mr. President, I call upon my friend the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, a member of which I have been for several years, to bear me out in the statement I will make. I have not conferred with him upon the subject. When these nominations were presented to the Senate they properly went to the chairman, and while I was occupying my seat here the chairman brought and delivered them to me. Up to that day I had not been in the committee-room this session. Indeed, we have only held one meeting, and that was at a subsequent date. He brought them to me and handed them to me, as had been his custom for many years, not only for the State of Texas but frequently for other southern States; and in my desk now are several nominations for the State of North Carolina, held up precisely on the same ground that the two nominations for Texas that I have now are held up. There were three nominations for Texas. In regard to one of them, I looked at it at once and went directly over to my colleague in regard to it, so that it is not true, as this article states, that I did not consult him. I went to him at once. There was one of these nominees that there was no objection to—I refer to the San Antonio postmaster. I reported him, and he was confirmed without a word. The others, upon consultation, were held up. I was advised and requested to do that by the parties interested, so that they could come on here and have an investigation to vindicate their characters; nothing else. There was no spirit of opposition on my part to having action upon them at any moment. There were no personal considerations actuating me. I cared but little about it one way or the other. I consulted my colleague and he approved my course, and upon that course I acted. I have never gone into the Post-Office Committee-room, first or last, and taken hold of a nomination there from my State or any other. I have never touched any that have not been directly handed to me by the chairman of the committee.

Then again, sir, I find another little matter going the rounds. I noticed in the Chronicle of Saturday last this item:

FLANAGAN, of Flanagan's Mills, has lifted high his brawny hand and by the nine gods sworn that the head of the proud Jewell, slayer of Texas postmasters, shall be brought low in the dust.

Mr. President, FLANAGAN swears by only one God. The writer of this may enumerate nine or ninety for aught I care; and I suppose one would be about as solemn with him as any of the others. One and a living God is the only one that I invoke. So far as Mr. Jewell is concerned I do not know him. I have nothing against him. There have been only three removals of postmasters by him in Texas all told. That is not a very large number. There is an immense area, there are many postmasters there. I find, too, that Texas is not alone in the removal of postmasters. Removals loom up here like blackbirds from all the States in this great nation. I suppose there are some objections to Postmaster-General Jewell; but I have nothing to do with him in any way, manner, or shape. I think it was an unhappy lick for the republican party to have made some of these removals—perhaps the two that are upon my desk. That he has been misinformed I have no hesitancy in saying; but individually I care not two baubees about it. I have no war to make on Mr. Jewell. I attend to my own purposes and nothing else. He is the Postmaster-General, and I take it for granted that he will discharge his duties. He is a "new broom" likewise, and it is said that "new brooms sweep clean," and I presume he has swept as he thought very well and cleanly through different States, not only in Texas. There are only two postmasters there that there is any squabble about that I am aware of. On the whole, it is a small matter, one way or the other.

STREET-CAR CONDUCTORS.

Mr. THURMAN. I offer the following resolution; and, as it is a mere resolution of inquiry, I ask its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia is hereby instructed to inquire whether any legislation is necessary for the protection of the conductors of street railroad companies in said District against regulations of the railroad companies requiring such conductors to work an unreasonable portion of each twenty-four hours, if any such regulations or practice exist; and that the committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that I am very sure a bill on that subject or a petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary at the last session and is now pending down stairs before our committee. I do not care which committee this goes to.

Mr. THURMAN. I was not aware of that. I have received various communications, some from conductors themselves, others from citizens, complaining that these conductors are required to work from seventeen to eighteen hours out of twenty-four. The statement seems almost incredible, but it is made to me and I have been urged to introduce a resolution of this character. I was not aware that there was any such matter before the Judiciary Committee. It seems to me the proper committee would be the District Committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think so too; and if there be a bill before our committee, it can be reported back and sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia. So I think this resolution had better be adopted.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope this resolution, which is one of inquiry, may be adopted, and then we can send the petition before the Judiciary Committee to the District Committee.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

CONTRACT SURGEONS.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the consent of the Senate to have action now on Senate bill No. 1043, suspending so much of the act entitled "An act to reorganize the several staff corps of the Army," approved June 23, 1874, as applies to contract surgeons. It suspends the act until February 1, 1875. I will state the reason for the bill. The Military Committees of the House and Senate are informed that it will be impossible for that department of the Army to carry this law into execution on the 1st day of January; and inasmuch as there is a probability that there will be legislation increasing this number, or regulating it differently from what it is, I thought it proper to introduce a bill suspending that act so far as it applies to contract surgeons until the 1st day of February, to see whether Congress will take action or not. If not, then the law will be executed.

I think it very important, because the proper authorities tell me that it is impossible to carry into execution what the law requires to be done, for many reasons which I do not care to take up the time of the Senate by stating.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1043) suspending so much of the act entitled "An act reorganizing the several staff corps of the Army," approved June 23, 1874, as applies to contract surgeons.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It suspends until the 1st day of February, 1875, so much of the act entitled "An act reorganizing the several staff corps of the Army," approved June 23, 1874, as applies to contract surgeons.

Mr. LOGAN. The Surgeon-General states to me and to the Military Committee of the House that it is impossible to carry out the law by the 1st of January. It reduces the number of contract surgeons, and it is impossible to make the transfer of articles which is required in time for the law to go into effect on that day. The Department ask for further legislation on the subject. Whether that will be agreed on I do not know; but we ask that the law be suspended, so far as it applies to contract surgeons, until the 1st day of February, and then if no action is to be taken of course the law will be carried out.

Mr. THURMAN. What are the provisions of the law that the Senator asks to have suspended?

Mr. LOGAN. That there shall be no more than seventy-five contract surgeons after the 1st of January, 1875. The bill proposes to suspend that provision until the 1st day of February, to see whether Congress will in the mean time take such action as the Department requests. If not, then the law will go into full force and effect.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the President had on the 18th instant approved and signed the following bill and joint resolution:

An act (S. No. 781) for the relief of James L. Pugh; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 11) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

REVISION OF RULES.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to consider the propriety of revising and reclassifying the rules of the Senate, and that they report accordingly at the earliest day practicable.

ACTION OF DISBURSING OFFICERS.

Mr. HOWE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether any legislation is necessary to prohibit disbursing officers of the United States from paying moneys to persons or corporations, or to the order of such persons or corporations, who have been duly enjoined by the courts of the United States from receiving the same, and to report by bill or otherwise.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I rise to give notice that I shall ask that an early day be fixed for the consideration of cases reported from the Committee on Claims, and I desire the attention of the Senate for one moment while I state the condition of that business as a reason why I shall ask that to be done.

There are now on the Calendar some twenty-five or thirty reports from that committee, many of them claims of parties residing in the late insurrectionary States, and some of them of a class which have hitherto elicited considerable debate. I might instance the case of J. Milton Best, which is now on the Calendar. I do not desire that these cases shall be pressed over into the latter part of the session so that they shall be taken up on motion and passed through hurriedly, but I wish them to receive deliberate consideration; and if it be the sense of the Senate, when I ask that day to be fixed to proceed to consider them and deliberately act on them with a view of disposing of them, it may be then worth while for Senators to introduce bills involving claims of this character, as they have already been doing. But if it be not the sense of the Senate to proceed with and consider them, I think it due to all Senators to say that the members of the Committee on Claims will hardly deem it their duty to take up time in examining and reporting upon cases of that character in addition to those which are already on the Calendar.

I am not prepared to make the motion to fix a day at present, owing to the uncertainty as to whether there will be a recess or not; but I give this notice, so that when I do make that motion its purpose may be understood.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Claims will fix a day. I concur entirely in the justice of the suggestion which he makes. There have been just claims on this Calendar for a long time which have never been considered by the Senate, though they were reported unanimously, and the claimants have been long kept out of what is justly their due. I hope we shall fix a day beyond the recess, and that this Calendar will be gone through with regularly. Then let claims that are controverted be discussed, and let the Senate settle the principle and dispose of them. I ask the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Claims, to fix a day early in January. Whether we take a recess or not let us fix a day, so that everybody may have notice that these claims will be examined, and that the Senate will be advised on such examination of the justice or injustice of the various claims, and we may dispose of them perhaps without much debate.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that should there be a recess taken until after the holidays I will, at the expiration of the morning hour on the first day the Senate convenes after the recess, ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the propositions to amend the Constitution of the United States reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. If there be no recess, I shall ask the Senate at a very early day to take up that subject.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TERRITORY OF ALGONQUIN.

Mr. BOREMAN. There was a bill before this body at the last session, and now on the Calendar as Senate bill No. 44. The Senate refused to order the bill to be engrossed, and a motion was made to reconsider that vote. In view of the adoption of the Revised Statutes, incorporating nearly everything that is in this bill in regard to the control of territorial affairs, I think it well to have the bill recommitted with a view to its amendment, and therefore I ask that the vote be reconsidered and the bill recommitted to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The Senator from West Virginia moves to take up the motion to reconsider the vote refusing to order the bill to a third reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What bill is it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. No. 44) to establish the Territory of Algonquin and to provide a temporary government therefor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the present state of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The third reading was refused, and a motion to reconsider that vote was made. The Senator from West Virginia now desires to recommit the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the last vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the question of ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading it was determined in the negative, and a motion to reconsider was entered, and that motion is now called up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending motion to reconsider; by whom, and when was it entered?

Mr. BOREMAN. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] made the motion to reconsider.

Mr. RAMSEY. It is simply proposed to recommit the bill to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand that; but the question is on what ground it is that this bill, which has been once thoroughly considered and defeated, is to be sent back for reconsideration. Is there any new light about it?

Mr. BOREMAN. I think there is. I think new facts can be laid before the Senate. My purpose in sending it back to the committee is what I have stated. This bill, like all territorial bills, is a long one, containing many provisions of detail in regard to the organization of the Legislature, the various officers and their duties, salaries, and matters of that sort. The Revised Statutes have made general laws in regard to all these matters, and it would be proper, it seems to me, to take out of this bill all the provisions which are covered by the Revised Statutes so as simply to create the Territory, with some provisions of a general character, and then refer to the Revised Statutes for the provisions which have been made by the Committee on the Judiciary in view of the organization and administration of affairs in all the Territories.

I think that the circumstances under which the Senate refused to pass the bill to its third reading were peculiar, and I believe if it was recommitted to the committee and the amendments made which are now contemplated, with still other amendments which were suggested by the Senator from Vermont at the last session, and which the committee no doubt would be willing to make, the bill would meet with the favorable action of this body. I have therefore asked that this vote be reconsidered and the bill recommitted to the committee so that they may take action upon it, prepare it as they think it ought to be prepared, and then report it to the Senate for future action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. BOREMAN. I ask that the vote be taken, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. When the Senator surrenders the floor, I will see.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to submit a few observations on this subject, but not to occupy the time of the Senate. According to my recollection, this bill was not defeated on the ground of any trifling difficulties connected with the courts or the mere detailed frame-work of the operations of the Territory; but I had the impression that the Senate acted upon a broader ground, and that was the undesirability, under existing conditions of affairs, of creating a Territory with the boundaries, and with the capacities, and with the sort of inhabitants, or rather the want of inhabitants of any kind excepting Indians, to any large extent that existed in this region, they being now under the dominion of the Territory of Dakota. I had the impression that that was one of the leading objections to the passage of this bill, and upon which it was defeated by a pretty heavy vote; but I have not thought of the subject since, and I may be entirely mistaken.

Certainly, if the Committee on Territories, for whom I suppose my friend speaks, desire to have this bill go back for further consideration, I should not be disposed to interpose any objection, particularly if they have any new facts which they think may throw a better light upon it in the Senate, although it is not perhaps the best possible practice to report a bill and have it go through all its stages of discussion, and after it has been defeated to send it back to the committee with the purpose of giving them an opportunity to try again upon the same particular topic, because we never should end anything in that way. But my respect for the Committee on Territories is so great that if its chairman desires that this bill should be reconsidered with a view to correcting what he supposes to have been the objections to it which were not fundamental, I certainly shall not interpose any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to order the bill to a third reading.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is now moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. MORTON to strike out in section 3, commencing in line 3, the following words:

To be severally appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be known as the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia; and the members first to be appointed shall be nominated and confirmed, respectively, to and for the terms following, in the order of their appointment, namely:

And in lieu thereof to insert:

To be elected by the qualified voters of said District.

So as to make the section read:

There shall be at the head of said Department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, to be elected by the qualified voters of said District, &c.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I doubt if the Senate has ever received greater evidence of the industry of a committee than is shown by this bill of one hundred and ninety-eight pages. If in addition to the numerous provisions of this bill there had been put in as appendix to it Webster's or Worcester's Dictionary, whichever in the judgment of the committee might be the more authoritative, it would seem to me that everything that could be required in the way of an expansive bill would have been furnished the Senate. Some of the provisions of this bill have a very extraordinary character; some of them perhaps might be characterized as trivial were it not for the zeal and intelligence and industry that were brought to bear in its preparation.

Let us examine and admire the results of the committee's work. I find here in section 5 a very careful exclusion of certain inferences to be drawn from language used in the bill; and as it embraces a whole section and is a fair specimen of some other efforts of the committee to enlighten all lawyers, judges, and jurors hereafter as to what the bill means, I beg the patience of the Senate while I read it. By section 5 it is enjoined that—

The phrase "said District," as used herein, means the District of Columbia.

That certainly is valuable information. I did not know but that the title of the bill "for the better government of the District of Columbia" conveyed clearly enough the intention of the committee that it should be understood by everybody who might have time and patience to read this voluminous book after it should have become a law that the words "said District" or the word "District" alone referred to the District of Columbia. That point, however, is happily placed beyond all dispute; and we know that if Congress enacts this bill, wherever the phrase "said District" occurs in it, it means the District of Columbia. And then:

The phrase "said regents" means the board of regents of the District of Columbia."

Afterward the word "regents" was changed to "commissioners," the committee leaving out that word, which is so honored in the learned societies; that word which we adopt when we speak of the governing body of the Smithsonian Institution, and dropping down to the word "commissioners." I suppose that an amendment will hereafter be necessary to say that when the word "commissioners" is used in this bill, this bill thereby means the commissioners for the District of Columbia! Again:

The phrase "said government" and "said Department," as herein used, mean respectively the government and Department herein created.

It is possible that there might have been some confusion of ideas here, and it might have been supposed by some one that this referred to the Government of the United States or the government of the Sandwich Islands, over which we have had some excitement of late, or some other government than the District; but happily that point is settled!

The word "person" will include also, when the sense will permit—

And certainly it would not if the sense would not permit it—the significance of the words "persons, firms, and corporations;" the word 'authority" may be held to include power, discretion, and duty—

We certainly shall not need Webster's Dictionary to add any more phrases there—as will best promote the reasonable intent of this act; the word "ordinance" means a by-law or rule of action to be observed by the people subject to said government—

I do not exactly like that phrase "subject to said government," for I suppose the people herein residing are citizens; but nevertheless that might be considered hypercritical, and so closely is the dictionary followed in this section that I do not feel disposed to find minor faults—or by the portion of them to which it is made applicable, under the penalty thereto affixed; the word "regulation" means a rule to be observed by the officers or subordinates of said government, or by the portion of them to which it is made applicable, in the discharge of their duties—

And there we are all reminded of Blackstone's definition of what law is. It is well always to keep these fundamental considerations in mind—always remember what law is. If we forget it, we turn to Blackstone; and if we forget what a "regulation" means as applied to this District, by all means turn to this bill so that our memory may be refreshed—unless in any particular case—

And here comes in a saving clause, showing the excessive caution, industry, and zeal of our committee—unless in any particular case aforesaid such defined meaning is clearly repugnant to the context or to the general spirit of this act.

The bill proceeds with just this industry and intelligence all the way through. We turn over page after page and we find the same care, the same minuteness, the same spinning out of spider-webs, more fibers put in, in order that the fly of intelligence shall necessarily be caught. I do not believe that a bill thus constructed is really an aid to lawyers or jurors or any one who may be called upon to pass upon it. I think that it is burdened, crushed down, with these details, and that it is better to use language which has a general, ascertained meaning, and let the construction be based upon the ordinarily well-received interpretations of that language, than to burden the bill with this word-splitting detail.

But, sir, I pass from this criticism, which applies to pretty much the whole bill, to something of very much more importance. We have on page 43 of this bill a provision for an election in this District, and it would naturally be supposed by Senators who had not had the opportunity to read this bill through and found life long enough to master its details, that when an election really was authorized it should be of a sufficient number of officers to have a majority of the board which was to be created partly by appointment and partly by election. I find that the board of education is to consist of eight members, four of whom are to be appointed; one of them is to be an ex officio member of the board without vote, with the simple opportunity to advise on certain matters, not even counted in making a quorum; and the other three are those who are to be elected by the people of the District.

I might ask, if in the view of the committee elections are troublesome things here and the people ought not to have the expense put upon them of elections at all; if there is some strong controlling reason applying to this District, separating it from the rules which are applied by the people themselves to every other State and Territory in the Union, and requiring that there should be no elections in the District—no exercise of the elective franchise in matters vital to them; why it is that a minority of the board of education are to be elected by the people? Why all the expense, why all the ferment and trouble of an election, when no effective result can be produced by it at all; when those who are elected by this election can never by any means control the action of the board to which they are elected?

I ask, Mr. President, why it is that the people of this District are deprived of the privilege of the elective franchise except in this entirely insignificant, unnecessary, immaterial matter? Is it a repudiation of negro suffrage pro tanto? If that is what it is, then let it be put upon the proper ground and we shall understand it. Is a Congress with a two-thirds republican vote in each House prepared to express that judgment upon negro suffrage? I must say for one that I am not. I certainly am not in view of the condition of the Southern States at the present time where this very question, whether the negro shall have a free and fair opportunity to vote, is being tried every day in the year, being tried especially at elections and every other day in the year when there is no election by measures looking toward the restriction of that right or privilege.

The republican party in the South, all the negroes who have now a vote in the South, are interested in the decision which the American Senate shall make upon the question whether the republican party, having the control and responsibility of affairs, is prepared to abandon the experiment of negro suffrage. If we take the position that it is not desirable that there shall be suffrage in this District for this reason, by the most authoritative method we send out word throughout the South to our friends there who have been struggling under adverse circumstances to vindicate the right and secure the practical exercise of negro suffrage there, that we have banished it; that we have no confidence in it. It seems to me that the condition of that portion of the country, the news even through prejudiced channels that reaches us day by day, should be a warning to us to carefully move in this matter. Very recently near Vicksburgh men elected by aid of negro votes, negroes themselves, to county offices, by stringent pressure were compelled to resign their offices, the men who were responsible upon their bonds being first by that pressure required to remove from those bonds; and when there was demur, when there was an attempt to resist the pressure thus brought to bear to vindicate the right of these men to hold the offices to which they had been thus elected, fifty to one hundred and fifty of them were shot down, one white man hurt by the accidental discharge of the gun of one of his comrades, and the "fight" ended by fifty colored men being buried in a single grave!

I do not want by my vote the word to go out to negroes situated as were those at Vicksburgh, that we have abandoned this experiment here, and I do not want to abandon our southern friends who are carrying on a fight which is hopeless without our help to a useless struggle to put in effect laws there which we repudiate here. By the same moving cause we have had trouble, disturbance, murder, governments overthrown, riots, tumult, disorder, working hideous confusion, depriving men of their rights, of their very lives by scores in Louisiana. We have had, in violation of the local constitution, a government overturned and subverted in Arkansas. We have had, I say, day by day, during the past weary months since Congress adjourned in the summer, evidence that unless the republican party is prepared to retreat upon the great measure which put the ballot in the hands of the colored man for his protection, we must show here no wavering and no turning; that we must stand by it upon principle and show that we mean by the legislation of Congress, so long as we control its counsels, that that which we advised and set in operation in the Southern States shall have fair trial and shall be enforced.

Sir, I object then to what is done in this bill and what is left undone. I object to this clause in reference to the election of three members of a board of eight of education, because it is trivial, because it gives all the expense of an election, all the heat and turmoil of one, and nothing is accomplished. I object to the other feature of the bill which forces upon the people of this District a voluminous measure like this where in every line, with the trivial exception I have mentioned, they are sedulously excluded from the control of their affairs, and the colored man, as well as the white, is left outside of the pale of American citizenship. I do not believe there would be such a pressure for the abolition of suffrage in this District unless this question of negro suffrage were mixed with it. I am unalterably of that opinion, and I think I recognize in the arguments which are advanced in favor of this proposition the old flavor of prejudice which would deny the colored man any right of protection whatever.

Now, sir, if it were a question per se, with the country entirely at peace, with no danger of outbreaks in the South, and the question was submitted to me whether the better form of suffrage would be educated suffrage, intelligent suffrage, I might assent to that proposition; but, sir, that is not the condition of the country and not the question which is presented to us now. It was clearly seen by the republican party and the republican administration, when we reorganized the Southern States and ordained that the colored man should have the ballot, that it was his only chance for life and safety in the Southern States; that it was a barrier which we trusted might be effectual between him and a state of peonage, or perhaps a slavery worse than that in which he suffered before; that it was a barrier against the selfishness and aggression of the old master on the one side and the otherwise defenseless negro on the other. I believe that to a certain extent that barrier has been effectual. I believe that it will utterly fail, that it will no longer protect the negro, unless the republican party shows that there is in the North and in Congress, it having the responsibility of legislation, a purpose to maintain it and maintain it jealously and guard it, not only in Arkansas and Mississippi, but here in the District of Columbia, and give it a fair opportunity for its exercise. So believing and so feeling, I certainly cannot vote for this bill unless it be amended in this particular.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I had not expected to say a single word to-day upon this bill, for I have not given to it that care and examination which would enable me to discuss the subject intelligently. My object in rising now is simply to say that it is much more easy to criticise a measure before the Senate, and especially a measure of this character, than it is to frame a government for this District. Now, there may be in the details of this bill much that is objectionable, and I have no doubt that some of the features to which the Senator from California has referred would, upon proper examination, be stricken from the bill under consideration; but I think it is our duty, having destroyed the government that was in existence in this District, to set ourselves diligently to work to frame such a government for the District as is required by the exigencies of the people who are here residing.

In reference to the immediate amendment under consideration and the principle of which the Senator from California has discussed, as it relates to the question of suffrage, I think we ought to take a broader view than that which arises from mere partisan considerations. I think in the discussion of this bill we ought not to lug in whatever of outrage and whatever of difficulty may have existed in Louisiana and Arkansas, in order to influence the votes that are to be cast on the measure pending before the Senate; but we should address ourselves calmly and deliberately to the consideration of this measure. In my opinion it rises infinitely higher than a mere measure of party interest, and it ought not to be controlled and governed by any such consideration.

I do not propose to enter into the discussion of the question whether negro suffrage in this District or in any State of this Union is proper. The fifteenth amendment conferred that right upon the negroes in the States of this Union, and I am not now going to discuss the question of whether it is proper or not. Let the experiment, if you see proper, be made in the States; and if the public judgment of the country is that it is right, let it remain as it now stands. But why should we enter upon that discussion in the consideration of this measure?

This bill proposes not to disfranchise the colored people alone; it simply proposes, in the organization of a government in this District, to place this city under the control of commissioners, not under the control of the electors of the District, but under the control of commissioners, and it affects the white people in this District in the same manner that it affects the colored people.

The Senator from California seems to regard this measure as one aimed at colored suffrage. There is nothing in the provisions of the bill that warrants any such conclusion. The tax-payers, the men of property, the men who have to bear the burdens of the government of this District, are put upon the same level with the humblest man, whether he be white or whether he be black; and therefore the point which is sought to be raised by the Senator from California, that it is an effort to disfranchise the colored people of this District, is not warranted by any provision of this bill.

Now, sir, I am in favor of establishing for the District of Columbia a government which will operate to the advantage of all the people of the District, the tax-payer and the non-taxpayer, the white man and the colored man. I would place them under a government that shall protect them from the outrages and oppressions to which they have been so long subjected. Let us rise above that mere party influence and party consideration which would seek to defeat this bill simply because every negro in the District is not secured the right of suffrage under the government proposed to be established. I was surprised, I confess, very much surprised, at the manifest effort on the part of the Senator from California to raise a party issue in the discussion of a measure of this character. I think as American Senators we ought to rise above such considerations, and endeavor to institute a government here that shall be not only a blessing to the people who are to be directly affected by it, but that shall do credit to the Senate and to the House of Representatives, who are charged with the important duty of establishing such a government.

I simply rose to make this criticism on the remarks of the Senator from California, and not to discuss the pending amendment or any other feature connected with the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire before the Senator from Delaware takes his seat, if he will permit me, to ask him a question in this connection. I do not wish to discuss the bill at all, but I have the same opinions about it that have been expressed by the Senator from California. Inasmuch as Congress has legislative jurisdiction over this District, in my opinion, on the same principle that a State legislature has legislative jurisdiction over cities incorporated within the State, if the doctrine is correct that you may deprive the citizens of the District of Columbia of the right of suffrage, does not the same ground apply to cities all over the country?

Mr. SAULSBURY. So far as I am concerned, I say very frankly that I have not given much examination to the question of how far in municipal governments an exercise of unqualified legislative power may or may not be proper; but I know that there is a sentiment abroad in the country that in all large cities and large towns where there is a floating population not identified properly with the people of such cities or towns, the principles which govern and control governments of a different character are not applicable to governments of that nature. I submit no opinion of my own, however, on that point.

Mr. LOGAN. I maintain that the same principle applies as to the question of the rights of citizens, in reference to the regulation of their municipal affairs, in the city of Washington that applies in all other cities. So far as the legislative jurisdiction is concerned, that is another question, but so far as the regulation of matters pertaining to city affairs is concerned, the rights of the citizens here are the same as the rights of citizens everywhere else, in cities. Hence the proposition I put was this: Without questioning the authority, if we by legislative act can deprive the citizens of the District of Columbia of that right which pertains to citizens all over the country, will not that tend to lead to the exercise of the same power all over this country in municipalities?

The Senator says there is a sentiment in the different cities of the country that the right of suffrage should be taken away from what he calls the floating population; in other words, that the right of suffrage should be taken away from the poor people who perhaps have not a home, or have not property. I am opposed to any such thing as that. I do not believe in property voting. I believe in men voting, and not property. I hold that the right to vote belongs to one citizen the same as another, unless he deprive himself of that right by some criminal conduct of his own. I do not believe in the holding of a mule conferring the right to vote, so that if a man owns a mule to-day he may vote, and if the mule dies to-morrow he cannot. I do not believe in that; but that is his principle, and is the entering-wedge, in my judgment, to the destruction of the right of suffrage in the hands of the poor people, whether they be white or black. For that reason I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I certainly do not propose to answer all the interrogatories propounded by the Senator from Illinois. In fact, I think he has made the answer, to a very considerable extent, to the proposition he himself suggested. But I wish to call attention to the fact that between the city of Washington and other cities of the country there is a very marked difference both in reference to the right of Congress and in reference to the propriety of the intervention of Congress in taking charge of the District. In the first place, the Government of the United States owns a very large portion of the taxable property of this District; and I am not certain that even if as a general rule the principle is right that in all municipal governments the people should have an unlimited voice, it is true in reference to this city, in which the Government of the United States and the property of the Government of the United States is to be affected so largely by the votes of the people of the city. I understand that nearly one-third of the taxable property in the District belongs to the Government; and if it is so, the question may well arise whether that property ought to be subjected to the control exclusively of the voters of the District, be they white or be they black. But I do not propose to discuss such matters, for, as I said before to the question of proper municipal government and the mode by which it shall be carried on, I have not given such investigation and such consideration as would enable me to express a very intelligent opinion.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator right there that I believe, if I understand the theory of our Government, the people govern themselves. If this property belongs to the Government and is the property of the Government, the people of the whole United States pay taxes on the property of this Government.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then may I not ask the Senator from Illinois why the representatives of the people of this Government should not establish a Government for this city independent of the people who reside in it?

Mr. LOGAN. If property belongs to the Government in Chicago, and there is quite a lot belonging to the Government there, would it not have the same right to deprive the people there of suffrage?

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is no such proportion of property belonging to the Government in the city of Chicago or any other city in the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. The proportion of property is not the question. It is the principle. If the United States have a right to regulate this city because there are ten houses here owned by them, they have the same right to regulate it because there is one house. It is not a question of the amount of property, but a question of principle, whether the people shall have something to do with the regulation of their affairs for themselves. The property belongs to them; it does not belong to members of Congress.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Why are we here to-day considering a bill proposing a form of government for this District? An investigation had by this body at the last session revealed the fact that a government here controlled by the citizens of this District had involved the District in an untold amount of debt, that the people had become oppressed by heavy taxation, that the whole District was upon the very verge of bankruptcy under a government carried on by the electoral vote of the people of this District. And then, under the revelations made by that committee, this Senate, with a unanimity almost unparalleled, declared that such a government should not longer exist, and this city was put under the control of commissioners. Why, sirs, it was the revelations which were made by that committee of the outrages that had been perpetrated upon the people of this District and the oppressions with which they had been afflicted which have brought the attention of the Senate at the present time to the consideration of this measure. And yet the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from California propose to go back to a system controlled by the same identical population that has controlled the government of this District for several years past and involved it in such hopeless indebtedness, and which has brought them repeatedly to the Senate Chamber to ask appropriations from the public Treasury in order to carry on the government, and which has depleted the Treasury of the United States to the extent of eight or ten million dollars in appropriations which have been from time to time made to meet and defray the expenses which this government has incurred. Still, we are now called upon to re-establish if not the precise and identical government, yet a government conducted upon the same principles.

Sir, I am in favor of the general principle of this bill, of putting the control of affairs here in charge of commissioners, and let them see to it that the people of this District are not further oppressed, and let us at once and as far as we can relieve them from the burdens which they have heretofore borne. I am in favor of the general principle of the bill, which is aimed to be struck down by the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] and I shall vote in accordance with it. While the details of the bill may not all meet my approbation, yet the grand principle of putting this city in the charge of commissioners I am in favor of, and I hope therefore that the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, though sustained and backed up by the eloquent remarks of the Senator from California, may not prevail.

Mr. LOGAN. I will not prolong the discussion, but will merely ask the Senator from Delaware if he is not mistaken when he states that the Senator from California and the Senator from Indiana were trying to put this District back in the same condition that it was before. So far as the investigation referred to is concerned, in reference to the conduct of certain persons in the District of Columbia, it has nothing to do with the principle of the organization of this District. I am certainly as far from desiring a repetition of the expenditure as any man in the Senate Chamber; but the Senator falls into a very grave error there, and if he will give me his attention I think I can point it out to him.

He says the reason why the whole country was aroused at the exposition here of great expenditures was on account of suffrage in the District. Does he not know that the very men who were investigated, and the very expenditures of which he complains and of which the country complains, were made by men who were appointed by the President of the United States and not elected by the people? Does he not know that this commission is to be appointed in the same way as the board of public works—not elected by the people, but appointed by the Executive? It seems to me that the Senator's argument is rather against him than for him.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from Illinois remember that a great many of those appropriations of money were made by the Legislature of the District of Columbia, and that some of the loans that were effected to carry on the work were submitted to and voted for by the people of the District, and that two-thirds of those voting for the creation of those debts, for the borrowing of the four millions of money, were men who contributed scarcely a dollar toward the payment of the taxes?

Mr. LOGAN. The complaint of taxation, and of the large amount that the Government expended for doing its part, was in regard to expenditures made by the board of public works. So far as a Legislature in the District is concerned to enact laws, I have not heard of any person who desires that. I expressed my view on that question at the time the territorial bill was passed in the other House, for I was then a member of the House of Representatives. When the bill was pending there authorizing the appointment of a governor for this District, providing for a Delegate in Congress and for a Legislature to enact laws, I opposed it on the ground that it was in violation of the Constitution of the United States. I would so do again. I believe the legislative jurisdiction belongs to the Congress of the United States and is not to be delegated to a Legislature of the District. The Congress of the United States is to enact the laws, but those laws are to be executed by whom? Executed by some of the citizens of the District; and the citizens to execute those laws, or at least to take part in the execution of the laws in connection with the executive power of the Government, should be left to the choice of that people, the same as the Senator himself occupies his position by the choice of his people.

It is not a question of legislation; it is not a question of the expenditure of money, for it belongs to Congress to restrict that in any way it deems proper and right; but it is a question whether or not the people themselves shall have the authority to suggest, appoint, or select the agents who are to execute the laws enacted by Congress for their control. The question is on depriving them as citizens of the right to have any voice in the municipal affairs of the municipality in which they themselves reside and which belongs to the citizens.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. Do I understand his position to be that Congress shall enact all legislation and then let the people of this District execute it?

Mr. LOGAN. What is that?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Do I understand the honorable Senator from Illinois upon this bill to say that he is in favor of and believes any other thing to be unconstitutional than that Congress should enact all legislation and that then we should let the people of this District execute it?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; I did not say that.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. No; I was giving my reason for opposing the territorial bill when it passed, and I said that under the Constitution of the United States, in my judgment, Congress has the exclusive jurisdiction over the legislation of this District; and that is the exact language of the Constitution. Now, if you can provide a Legislature when the Constitution says that Congress shall have the exclusive legislative jurisdiction, then you are a wiser man than I am. So far as mere police regulations are concerned, that is a very different proposition; but Congress has a right to enact general laws for the government of this city, the same as a Legislature does in a State. The State Legislature enacts general laws, but the city has its municipal regulations in reference to the cleaning of streets and police regulations, and many things that are not necessary for the legislative department to take up its time in reference to. But I do say that when Congress enacts these general laws—for instance, a school law in the District of Columbia—some voice should be given to the people in their execution. Will you provide under a general school law that the directors of the schools shall be appointed? What is the office of a director of the schools? Merely to carry out a law that has been enacted by Congress. I say the people should have a right to choose these men. So in reference to your commissioners. You enact laws in Congress to appoint commissioners to do what? You appoint commissioners to observe, obey, and carry out the provisions of a law, and they may have men under them who transact little affairs belonging to the city even under your bill. But that is not the point. The point is not whether you give legislative jurisdiction to a Legislature of this District; but the point is whether the people shall have a right to elect the men who are to carry out the law the same as the people of a State elect their governor to execute the law, or the same as a city elects its mayor to execute the law. I believe to-day that this city would be better governed if the people were allowed to elect a mayor and a common council to carry out the laws enacted by Congress and then regulate their own police affairs through their common council.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I do not rise, Mr. President, for the purpose of criticising this bill. It has been well matured; much thought has been expended upon it, and ample justice has been done in its details as far as the ability of the distinguished committee who reported it was able to give to it. And, sir, I might further state that on this occasion I should not say one word but cast my vote, as I usually do, in silence except for the absence of any Southern Senator responding to the action already presented or having participated in any way in the debate upon the subject.

The distinguished Senator immediately on my right from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] has offered an amendment here. That amendment I am gratified to see has met the cordial approbation and able support of the distinguished Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.] I am gratified to see that. The great State of Illinois through her distinguished Senator [Mr. LOGAN] likewise indorses it, as I understand. Now, sir, the South through me, so far as I speak, cordially indorses the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana. What are the reasons for doing so? I will briefly submit them.

In the first place, the action deprecated and discussed by the Senator from California is objected to by my distinguished friend from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] on the ground that a political question ought not to be made of this. Why, sir, it is impossible that we can consider it otherwise. It is a political question. This is the capital of the nation, and your action in regard to it goes out through all the avenues and ramifications known to this great Government in every one of the States that have an immediate and direct interest pertaining to the government of the District of Columbia. It cannot be ignored; and how clearly are the positions defined here. In the able remarks made the other day by the other Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] he alluded to the fact that he himself was a tax-payer in this great city, and he seemed to think that the tax-payers and the tax-payers alone were the parties who were properly to take this matter into consideration and control it. Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States knows no distinction as to tax-payers. It knows the people, and the people only of this nation without respect to color. They are all free, for there are none enslaved that I am aware of now. Then they are all equal upon that branch of the subject, and their rights are precisely the same. How is one to be excluded properly, and in the spirit of the Constitution? We know very well that it cannot be, and I have no idea that it is necessary here to discuss the power of the Government as to the legislation that is contemplated. Therefore I pass that over.

Now, on the score of policy, aside from the absolute rights that pertain here, I might instance one fact. It is not infrequent that the removal of the capital of this great nation is spoken of. Let the tax-payers of the city of Washington take into consideration, as they may very well do, that this bill as presented is a fatal stroke to the perpetuity of the capital in the city of Washington. So far as a million of colored voters will go, at a very early day when they shall speak, I have no hesitancy in saying that they will speak as a unit; they would go for any place that might be designated in this broad Union rather than the city of Washington, because it had there been declared solemnly by act of Congress that the black man had no right to vote, had no suffrage. They would visit their revenge, if you please to call it so, on the citizens of this great capital for excluding them from that right.

Why, sir, the stand-point—and it is a very prominent one—taken by the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] the other day was that of a tax-payer. Now, the tax-payers are very conspicuous throughout this Union, particularly in the South. There are the tax-payers the white-leaguers. What are they doing? They are regulating everything in their own way, and that is the text and the pretext, and they are carrying it out in every sense of the word with a determination that had better be checked, for the perpetuity of this Union, in my humble opinion, at the very earliest day.

Now, sir, let it be known that the colored men of the city of Washington have no right to vote, are excluded from suffrage, and it will go broadcast throughout the South in an instant and every State in the South will avail itself of that sweet spice, and they will look upon it as a precedent, and at a very early day they will live up to it. It will grow, and it will continue to grow, I have no hesitancy in saying. It is all-important that that privilege should be extended to the American citizen in the city of Washington let him be white, yellow, black, or as the case may be; and then it will flow out upon equal principles throughout this great Union. I would have been gratified if the distinguished Senator from Indiana had gone a little further in this amendment. Perhaps the period has not yet arrived in our history when it will succeed; but I have no hesitancy in saying that the day is not distant when it will. I should have been gratified if he had included the women too, and let the ball of woman suffrage start out from the national capital. It is due to the nation, and I believe the day is not distant when it will be recognized and become the law of the land. I would have been very much gratified to see it start here to-day. I hope for the good of the nation, in every sense of the word, that this amendment will be accepted, and I think it will do much good.

Mr. MERRIMON obtained the floor.

Mr. WEST. If it will not inconvenience the Senator to-day, I should like to ask for an executive session.

Mr. MERRIMON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at two o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

CALL OF STATES FOR RESOLUTIONS.

The SPEAKER. The States having been called through for bills on leave and joint resolutions, they will now be called for resolutions. Resolutions are in order from the State of Alabama.

SAFE-BURGLARY INVESTIGATION.

Mr. BROMBERG. I have been requested to offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and on it I call the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five members of the House be appointed by the Speaker to inquire whether any officer or official of the Government of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or person or persons in the employ of the Government of the United States or of said District, or other person or persons, has or have used any means to obstruct the administration of the law in said District, and especially with reference to the recent trial and other proceedings in the so-called safe-burglary conspiracy. That said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during the sessions of the House, shall report what, if any, action is necessary to be taken by the House in the premises aforesaid and in regard to said case, and shall have leave to report at any time

Mr. DAWES. I object to that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves the resolution and on it demands the previous question. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make any point of order on it?

Mr. DAWES. I do not.

On the question of seconding the previous question a vote by sound was taken, and the Speaker declared that the ayes had it.

Several MEMBERS. Further count.

The SPEAKER. A further count being demanded, the vote will be taken by tellers, and the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. HENDEE, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BROMBERG.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 80.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to debate the resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. I give notice that on next Monday the same resolution will be offered.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to give such notice during the morning hour. The gentleman from Massachusetts having risen to debate the resolution, it goes over. Resolutions are still in order from the State of Alabama.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION IN ALABAMA.

Mr. HAYS. I offer the following preamble and resolutions, and on them demand the previous question:

Whereas, at the recent election for Representatives to Congress in the State of Alabama and during the canvass which preceded said election, Federal soldiers were stationed in several counties in said State by order of the President of the United States; and whereas information had been received by the President that intimidation and threats, violence, murder, and assassination had been resorted to in said State for the purpose of preventing electors from voting; and whereas these allegations have been denied by a portion of the press of Alabama and correspondents of northern newspapers, and it has been stated by them that there was no intimidation or threat, or violence of any kind for the purpose of deterring or influencing voters at such election, and it has been charged by them that said troops were sent to Alabama to intimidate and overawe electors, and prevent the free exercise of suffrage by such at said election: Therefore

Be it resolved, That a committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker to go to Alabama to take testimony and investigate said charges and counter charges, and to report the same to the House of Representatives; and that said committee be empowered to inquire into all the facts relative thereto, and particularly to investigate and inquire whether any murders or assassinations or any other acts of violence were committed in said State at said election or while the contest for the same was pending; if so, by whom and upon whom committed, where and at what time; what were the known or supposed political sentiments of the parties respectively, and the motives which influenced them; to ascertain whether any means or efforts were used to constrain suffrage, or whether peaceable and legal assemblies were interrupted or disturbed by armed forces or by violence in said State, and to inquire and ascertain whether the Federal soldiers interfered with or in any manner whatever attempted to interfere with the free exercise of suffrage during said election, and to report the same to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That said committee shall have power to send for and enforce the attendance of persons and compel the production of papers, and tender oaths to any one examined before or by them, to employ a clerk and stenographer, and to report at any time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question, whether the allegations set forth——

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not debatable.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to ask whether it is not an unusual power to give a committee to enforce the attendance of witnesses?

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable. The gentleman from Alabama demands the previous question on the preamble and resolutions.

Mr. CALDWELL. I ask that the preamble may be again read.

The preamble was again read.

Mr. COX. I wish to inquire whether the preamble cannot be separated from the resolution?

The SPEAKER. That question will arise after the previous question is seconded.

Mr. BECK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry: Whether the duties of the select committee appointed the other day by the Chair do not cover this matter?

The SPEAKER. That would not be a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair really would not know how to answer it. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. MAYNARD. Before the question is submitted, I ask the Clerk to report again that portion of the resolution which relates to the sending for persons and papers.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the said committee shall have power to send for and enforce the attendance of persons, and compel the production of papers, and tender oaths to any one examined by or before them, to employ a clerk and stenographer, and to report at any time.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that the language of the resolution be modified so as to be in the usual form in regard to sending for persons and papers, the words "enforce the attendance of" being left out.

Mr. HAYS. I accept the gentleman's suggestion, and will modify the resolution accordingly.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman to modify the resolution so that the committee shall also inquire as to the manner of the distribution of rations heretofore voted by this Congress for the people of Alabama.

Mr. HAYS. A resolution has already passed the House, offered by my colleague, for the investigation of that matter. I have no objection to such an investigation in the world.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like that to go to the same committee. Is it understood that the gentleman accepts that modification?

Mr. HAYS. Not at all. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The modification suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] has been made; and the resolution is now in the usual form in regard to sending for persons and papers. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question, and the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HAYS, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. SPEER.

Mr. SPEER. I am not opposed to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the gentleman's count.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 112.

The SPEAKER. The tellers report 112 in the affirmative. Is further count demanded?

Mr. SPEER. I do not desire further count.

Mr. BECK. I want further count. I want to see how many are disposed to hide this matter as they have hid up the other.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no right to debate the question.

Mr. BECK. I have a right to a further count.

The SPEAKER. But not a right to debate.

Mr. BECK. The Chair was accepting the count without the negative vote having been taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair assumed that as the affirmative vote was so overwhelming no further vote was required. The gentleman who as teller represented the side of the House on which the gentleman from Kentucky sits made the usual signal that no further count was demanded; and the Chair does not think it very becoming in the gentleman from Kentucky to demand further count and not to vote himself.

Mr. BECK. I voted for the resolution. I vote for all investigations. Can members on the other side of the House say as much?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We only vote for all proper investigations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not allowed to debate the question with the gentleman from Kentucky. Does the gentleman insist upon a further count?

Mr. BECK. There appears to be no one to count.

The SPEAKER. The Chair took the statement of the teller on the gentleman's side that no further count was demanded.

Mr. SPEER. I stated that no further count was necessary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair therefore does not accept the criticism of the gentleman from Kentucky. The report of the tellers is 112 in the affirmative and 3 in the negative.

Mr. SPEER. I want the record to show that I was not opposed to the resolution myself.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question was then ordered.

Mr. COX. I ask for a division of the question upon the resolution and preamble.

The SPEAKER. The question, then, will be taken first upon the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The question recurred on agreeing to the preamble; and being put, there were on a division—ayes 114, noes 69.

So the preamble was agreed to.

Mr. HAYS moved to reconsider the votes by which the resolution and preamble were severally agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY OFFICERS IN SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. CALDWELL. I offer the following resolution, upon which I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform this House whether any commissioned officer of the United States Army, while on duty in any of the Southern States, has received or attempted to procure payment of any money or other valuable consideration from the Legislatures of any of said States, or endeavored to procure legislation to that effect as a compensation or reward to him for services performed in the line of his duty as an officer of the Army or otherwise; and whether any such officer, while so stationed and on duty, has been admitted to practice at the bar of any of said States, and has actually practiced thereat for his personal emolument, while receiving pay as an officer of the Army, and whether such officer is now an officer of the Army.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to know if the gentleman has any facts upon which this resolution is based?

Mr. MAYNARD. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CALDWELL] has already offered a resolution under this call.

Mr. CALDWELL. Not to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that the gentleman from Alabama has already offered a resolution under this call. The Journal shows that he offered a resolution on Monday last.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. He has certainly offered no resolution to-day.

The SPEAKER. But he offered a resolution under the same call on Monday last.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. WHITE submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections have leave to report upon the joint resolution amending the Constitution in respect of the election of President and Vice-President and the return and counting of the electoral votes at any time.

ARMY OFFICERS IN SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. SLOSS. I offer the following resolution, upon which I call the previous question:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform this House whether any commissioned officer of the United States Army, while on duty in any of the Southern States, has received or attempted to procure payment of any money or other valuable consideration from the Legislatures of any of said States, or endeavored to procure legislation to that effect as a compensation or reward to him for services performed in the line of his duty as an officer of the Army or otherwise; and whether any such officer, while so stationed and on duty, has been admitted to practice at the bar of any of said States, and has actually practiced thereat for his personal emolument, while receiving pay as an officer of the Army, and whether such officer is now an officer of the Army.

Mr. KASSON. Cannot the gentleman name the officer who has committed the alleged offense?

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I will leave it to the Secretary of War. I desire to name no man.

Mr. GARFIELD. Who is it?

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I will state who it is. It is Major Merrill.

The question was upon seconding the previous question; and being put, no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KASSON and Mr. SLOSS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 65, noes 105.

So the previous question was not seconded, and the resolution was laid over.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. DAWES. I desire now to call up the resolution providing for a recess for the holidays.

The SPEAKER. Before entertaining that question the Chair will receive bills for reference from gentlemen who were absent at the time their States were called.

REVOLUTIONARY CLAIMS.

Mr. LAMISON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4135) to amend an act entitled "An act supplementary to the act for the relief of certain officers and soldiers of the Revolution," approved June 7, 1832; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

INSANE ASYLUM AT AUBURN, NEW YORK.

Mr. MACDOUGALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4136) to reimburse the State lunatic asylum for insane convicts, at Auburn, New York, for the keeping of insane United States convicts after terms of sentence had expired; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

TUG-BOAT WM. S. EARL.

Mr. SMART introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4137) to change the name of the tug-boat Wm. S. Earl to Stephen Miles; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. TREMAIN. I ask unanimous consent to make a personal explanation, occupying not more than five minutes.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. TREMAIN. My attention has been called to an infamous assault upon me contained in an editorial article published in the New York Sun of last Thursday. I have here an extract from it which I will send to the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The occasion of this inquiry is a bill which Mr. TREMAIN has just introduced into Congress conferring criminal jurisdiction on the courts of the United States in different parts of the country in prosecution, for libel, where the offense consists of a constructive publication in the District of Columbia. To be sure the bill provides that a man shall not be indicted in the District unless he lives there. Nevertheless the attempt to confer Federal jurisdiction over such a class of cases, in place of that of the State courts, is so flagitious, so at variance with all the ideas and intentions of the founders of our Government, such a departure from all sound constitutional principles, and so impossible to succeed, that the question very naturally suggests itself whether it could have been made by anybody but a fool.

Mr. TREMAIN. There is not one word of truth in that statement, as every member of this House who heard the bill which was introduced by me read by the Clerk at the time of its introduction very well knows. That bill does not authorize the indictment of any person for libel in the courts of the United States throughout the country. Under its provisions no man could be indicted for libel in the courts of the United States in any district or circuit court of the United States. The bill relates exclusively to the courts in the District of Columbia, as clearly appears from its title and from the express language of the body of the bill. It does not authorize an indictment for libel in any case or in any court where such indictment cannot now be found under the existing law. So far from this being the case, it prevents the finding of any indictment for libel in the greater number of cases where an indictment for such libel may now be found in the District of Columbia. It is a limiting and restraining and not an enlarging or enabling statute.

Indictments may now be found in the District of Columbia for all libels that are published in such District. Whenever a newspaper containing such libel is circulated in such District, or is sent to it and sold by the agents and servants of the editors and publishers, an indictment for such publication may be found now in this District. This results from the fact that libel was indictable at the common law, that Maryland had adopted the common law, and when the United States accepted from Maryland the cession of that part of this District which belonged to Maryland, the act of Congress provided that the laws of Maryland should remain in full force.

The Supreme Court of the United States and the supreme court of this District have repeatedly held that libel was indictable in the District, and various trials and informations for that offense have taken place within the District. Congress has passed an act relating to the trial of indictments for libel in the District of Columbia, declaring that in such cases the truth may be given in evidence and if it appears that the libel was published for good motives and justifiable ends the defendant should be acquitted, and that statute is now in full force.

My bill was intended to remove all grounds of complaint on the part of newspaper publishers who complained that they were liable to be brought from distant parts of the Union to this District for trial when their newspapers should happen to be circulated here, although the State courts in the States where these newspapers were published were open for the finding of such indictments. The first section of my bill reveals its purpose. It is in these words:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all cases where a libel has been or may be hereafter published in any newspaper regularly printed and published outside of the District of Columbia, but circulated therein, no indictment for the publication of such libel shall be found in said District unless the party libeled shall reside therein at the time of such publication.

The second section only provides for the removal of such indictments to the locality where the newspaper was regularly issued. It does not in any manner relate to the residence of the defendant, as is falsely charged in this article. It is a bill in the interest of a free press, and the editor of the Sun knew this, for in his paper of Wednesday he published the bill in extenso with these announcements in capitals:

ANNULLING THE PRESS GAG LAW—A BILL WHICH WILL PREVENT EDITORS FROM BEING DRAGGED TO WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, December 15.

In the House of Representatives, Mr. TREMAIN, on leave, introduced the following bill: "A bill in relation to indictments for libel in the District of Columbia, and the trial thereof."

And then published the bill at length.

My bill is framed upon the model of a New York statute passed twenty years ago, and makes the scheme of that statute applicable to the District of Columbia. The Sun article also contains much coarse vituperation of me which I disdain to notice, remembering that, as Sir William Blackstone says, "it is the privilege of the vulgar to indulge in low abuse of other people with impunity."

What could have inspired this brutal attack upon me I cannot imagine. If, as he seems to have supposed, the bill allowed indictments for libels to be found in the United States courts where the libeler resided, I can well understand why Mr. Charles Dana should have regarded its introduction with trembling solicitude. But it does not; and hence I can only account for his bilious condition upon the theory that he is aching for a grievance against Congress, that he flatters himself that he now has a plausible one, and is disturbed by the apprehension that Congress may pass my bill and thus remove his pet grievance.

This article is only a fresh illustration of the gross injustice with which members of Congress, while laboring faithfully to discharge their public duties, are traduced by a portion of the newspaper press, and of the deluge of defamation and false charges which seems to be sweeping over the country. While thanking the House for its courtesy, I will add that I should not probably have deemed this article worthy of notice, for the reason that the true character of the Sun is generally appreciated wherever the paper is known, had I not also discovered from articles in two or three respectable newspapers that there was an honest misconception prevailing in some quarters touching the purposes and scope of the bill which I had the honor to introduce.

SUGG FORT CLAIM.

Mr. O'NEILL. I send to the Clerk and ask to have read a letter from the Commissary-General of Subsistence, with an accompanying card.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington City, December 17, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your note of this date, calling my attention to a paragraph in the Republican of this morning, in which reference is made to "Hon. CHARLES O'NEILL" in connection with the Sugg Fort claim. In reply I would respectfully state that the reference to you is an error. The person alluded to was Mr. Charles C. O'Neill, an agent prosecuting claims in this city.

Yours, very truly,

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General of Subsistence.

Hon. CHARLES O'NEILL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

[From the National Republican, December 21, 1874.]

A CARD FROM C. C. O'NEILL.

WASHINGTON, December 19, 1874.

SIR: Allow me through your paper to correct an error which appeared in your issue of December 17, 1874, in relation to the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, for flour, amounting to $23,723.50, alleged to have been taken and used by the Federal troops at Nashville, Tennessee.

In your transcribing the papers in the claim the name of Hon. CHARLES O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, appears in connection with the claim, which is an error. He had nothing to do with the claim whatever.

The claim was placed in my hands by Mr. Fort, March 18, 1873, and was filed by me March 19, 1873, in the War Department, and by the Secretary of War referred to the Commissary-General of Subsistence, who rejected the case March 29, 1873, on the ground of no jurisdiction since act of March 3, 1871, organized the southern claims commission. As requested by Mr. Fort, I withdrew from the Commissary Department the papers I filed there and handed them over to the claimant, who had a bill drawn and presented to Congress by Hon. H. H. HARRISON for the amount claimed.

After the charge of fraud was made, of which Mr. Fort told me himself, I suggested that he should go home and disprove the allegation.

I had no connection with the claim at its final settlement by the Departments, and never received one cent as fees from Mr. Fort or any person from the proceeds of said claim. He had his money in his pocket before I knew where or how he was paid.

CHARLES C. O'NEILL,
1305 F Street.

To the EDITOR OF THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN.

TROUBLES IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. CONGER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the special committee appointed to investigate the troubles, &c., in Mississippi be authorized to have the attendance of a stenographer and deputy sergeant-at-arms, and the expense of said investigation be provided for out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is the gentleman sure that the contingent fund will be sufficient to meet these expenses?

Mr. CONGER. That is my information.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table a bill to enable the supreme court of the District of Columbia to proceed with its jury business.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I want to state to the House——

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the regular order.

SUBSIDIES, APPROPRIATIONS, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the House resumes the consideration of the motion made last Monday by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House, in the present condition of the financial affairs of the Government no subsidies in money, bonds, public lands, or by pledge of the public credit should be granted by Congress to associations or corporations engaged or proposing to engage in public or private enterprises, and that all appropriations from the public Treasury ought to be limited at this time to such amounts only as shall be imperatively required by the public service.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules was seconded, and on agreeing to that motion the yeas and nays were ordered and will now be taken.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149, nays 75, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barber, Barnum, Bass, Beck, Berry, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Cain, Cannon, Cason, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., John B. Scudder, Sessions, Sloss, Smart, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Southard, Standiford, St. John, Storm, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Wilber, and Wood—65.

So the House refused to suspend the rules, two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof.

During the vote,

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, stated that his colleague, Colonel BELL, was detained from his seat by illness.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio, stated that his colleague, Mr. BANNING, who was called home by important business, would, if present, vote in the affirmative.

Mr. ARCHER stated that his colleague, Mr. ALBERT, was detained from the House by illness.

Mr. STRAIT stated that his colleague, Mr. DUNNELL, was absent because of sickness.

Mr. ALBRIGHT stated that he was paired with his colleague, Mr. CLYMER, who was attending the funeral of Hon. John B. Rice, of Illinois, late a member of this House. If present Mr. CLYMER would vote in the affirmative, while he himself would vote in the negative.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, stated that his colleague, Mr. FORT, was absent attending the funeral of his late colleague, Mr. Rice.

Mr. SCOFIELD stated that his colleague, Mr. ROSS, was detained from the House by sickness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

DISCHARGE OF A WITNESS FROM CUSTODY.

Mr. DAWES. I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Richard B. Irwin be discharged from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms on the warrant of the Speaker of this House, he having given satisfactory reasons for having neglected to appear before the Committee on Ways and Means in answer to the summons of this House.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to say upon explanation by him of the reasons why he delayed answering that summons they appear to the committee to be satisfactory, and perhaps that is all it is necessary to say on that point.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTUMACIOUS WITNESS—RICHARD B. IRWIN.

Mr. DAWES. I submit the following report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let us settle first the question in reference to the adjournment over.

Mr. DAWES. Mine is a privileged question.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the subject-matter of the employment of money to procure legislation by Congress in aid of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, submit, in part, the following report:

That in pursuance of the power conferred upon them by the House, "to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths in any matter from time to time pending and under examination before said committee," they caused one Richard B. Irwin, of New York, to be summoned before them for the purpose of giving testimony, and the said Irwin, after having been duly sworn, did on the 16th, 17th, 18th, and 19th, and the 21st days of December, 1874, testify, among other things, as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Will you state to the committee what was the character of your employment under this special contract?

Answer. Yes, sir; I was to come to Washington and get that subsidy for them.

Q. How much time did that contract cover?

A. Five months; beginning in January, 1872, and ending in May, 1872.

Q. Where was that service performed?

A. In Washington and New York.

Q. What were the terms of your special contract with the company to come here and prosecute the passage of the subsidy?

A. In general words, the terms of that contract, which was made between Mr. Stockwell, the president of the company, and myself, he acting under the authority of the board of directors, were that I should come to Washington and get that subsidy for them, (that could be made longer, but it is just as well to make it short,) and that they were to pay me for my services a gross sum, which gross sum I was to state at a certain period before the completion of the service; and that contract was carried out by them.

* * * * * * *

Q. When the amount was ascertained, were you paid by check?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you spoke of the amount of this check a moment ago?

A. The amount of all the checks I only remember by the statement made in the complaint against me by the company, and I stated the amount from their testimony, subject to correction when I see the checks.

* * * * * * *

Q. It is stated by the company to be how much?

A. It is stated by them to be about $750,000.

Q. And you believe that to be correct?

A. I believe that to be correct.

Q. That sum was to embrace your own personal services and your expenses?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What expenses were you to incur here?

A. It was to cover all expenses incurred here.

* * * * * * *

Q. Did all the money paid out by the company in securing the passage of the subsidy pass through you?

A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Was it understood that it was to pass through you?

A. That was the agreement between Mr. Stockwell and myself. The agreement was that I was to have entire charge of the matter. I of course continued all the arrangements previously made by Mr. Stockwell as president so far as they were communicated to me, and employed all persons whom he afterward directed me to engage.

* * * * * * *

Q. This sum, $750,000, covers nothing but money expended by you in obtaining the passage of the subsidy?

A. That and my personal expenses.

* * * * * * *

He was further examined:

Q. What, if anything, did you receive in exchange for those checks which you returned?

A. The checks which I have already stated, amounting to about $750,000.

Q. Are those the checks which are now exhibited to you (and which have already been introduced in Mr. Hatch's testimony) being numbers 2360 to 2365 inclusive, and all dated May 24, 1872?

A. They are. * * * * * * *

Q. Were they received for the same purpose for which the checks that you gave up had been received?

A. Yes, sir; exactly.

Q. And that was the purpose you have heretofore stated, in accordance with the contract to procure the subsidy?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How soon after the receipt of these last checks did you put them into the bank to your own credit?

A. My impression is that I deposited those checks to my credit on the 27th of May, and my reason for that impression is that I have a distinct recollection of having kept them for two days before I deposited them; that recollection may be corrected or not when I see the bank-account; but I kept them about two days, I am sure. Then, I think, another interval of two days elapsed before the money was drawn; and the bulk of it was drawn, I think, on or about the 29th of May, as near as I can remember.

* * * * * * *

Q. The whole of this money was put in your hands for the purpose of paying the expenses of procuring the subsidy?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Including your own personal services and the services of all persons who worked under you in that business?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was any portion of it used for any other purpose?

A. No, sir; for no other purpose whatever.

Q. How soon after its receipt from the bank by you was it so used?

A. I think, as nearly as I can remember, that the bulk of it was drawn out by me from the American Exchange Bank, about two days after I had deposited it there to my credit. I can tell positively when I see my bank account. * * * I don't think I drew any of that money in currency; if I did, it must have been a comparatively small amount. * * * I drew it mostly in the form of my personal checks; * * * some of them payable to somebody else's order, and some of them payable to my own order and indorsed in blank.

On Friday, December 18, the examination of the witness Irwin was continued, and the chairman put to him the following question:

Question. Whom did you employ to help you here in procuring the subsidy?

The witness asked to be allowed until Monday morning to prepare, so that he might answer the question intelligently and accurately, if at all; and the committee consented to wait until Saturday morning for his answer.

On Saturday morning the following question was again put to the witness by the chairman:

Question. Whom did you employ to help you here in procuring the subsidy?

Answer. A number of persons; but not any one subject to the jurisdiction of this House.

Q. Please give their names.

A. I shall be obliged, very reluctantly, Mr. Chairman, to decline giving the names of those persons upon several grounds. * * * Before stating them, I declare that I did not employ in this connection any Senator or any member of Congress, or any officer of the present Congress who was a member or officer of the Forty-second Congress. * * * I decline to answer upon the grounds—

First. That the resolutions referring this matter to the committee do not give the committee jurisdiction over the subject-matter to the extent of requiring an answer to that question. That, of course, I do not know. I make that point only formally.

Secondly. Having stated that I did not employ any person under the jurisdiction of this Congress, and there being nothing in the testimony, as far as I am acquainted with it, to negative that statement, and it being impossible in fact to negative that statement, and, moreover, there being already sufficient testimony in possession of the committee, furnished by myself and others, to convince any reasonable man (and consequently to convince the committee, composed exclusively of reasonable men) that a large sum of money was appropriated by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the purpose of procuring the subsidy, and that the money was used for that purpose, I decline to answer upon the further ground that neither the committee nor the House of Representatives has any jurisdiction over the subject-matter; and that if the committee had jurisdiction over the subject-matter, that jurisdiction has now been exhausted by reaching the point in the testimony that I have stated.

Thirdly. I decline upon the ground that this entire matter having arisen and been completed in a prior Congress, so far as my connection with it is concerned, the committee and the House of Representatives are without jurisdiction over the subject; and Fourthly. I state what is in my mind the gravest and the controlling reason for my declining to meet the wishes of the committee, which is that I have no right as an honorable man to disclose the particulars of any confidential relation existing between myself and any other person whatever, and especially in relation to a subject not within the jurisdiction of the House of Representatives, as I have already stated that this subject is not.

I submit these points to the committee with great deference. I wish, as I have said already, that it were in my power to answer as they wish.

Q. Do you insist upon declining to answer the question put to you?

A. I do so, Mr. Chairman, most respectfully.

Q. Without waiving that question, and insisting upon its answer, I desire to put another: Will you state to the committee what portion of the $750,000 which you have testified you received from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to use in procuring the passage of the subsidy you put in the hands of other persons to aid you in that work?

A. I paid the whole of that $750,000 to other persons.

Q. Will you state what was the largest sum you paid to any one such person for that purpose?

A. Mr. Chairman, I think I shall have to decline answering that for the reasons stated.

Q. Without waiving these questions, but insisting upon them, I ask you to state how many persons you employed to aid you in so procuring the passage of the subsidy?

A. I think I would answer that question if I could recollect the number, but I really do not remember—quite a large number. I should say off-hand as many as twenty or thirty.

Q. Do you mean to say that your engagement of persons to aid you in procuring the passage of the subsidy through Congress for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was of such a secret and confidential character that you cannot honorably disclose it?

A. No, sir; I mean to say that my relations with the attorneys and counsel whom I employed were of such a confidential character that—they and each of them and I—being outside of the jurisdiction of this House, this House has no right to compel me to answer.

Here the examination was suspended until Monday, the 21st of December.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 21, 1874.

RICHARD B. IRWIN, re-examined before the full Committee on Ways and Means.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Whom did you employ to help you in procuring this subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?

Answer. I never paid, nor agreed to pay, nor had any understanding with any other person that he was to pay, any money to any member or officer of the present Congress and of the Forty-second Congress or to any person under the jurisdiction of this House.

Q. Please give the names of those whom you did employ to aid you in procuring the subsidy.

A. I shall be obliged very reluctantly to decline to answer that question, for the reasons which I gave on Saturday and for additional reasons which I desire to give this morning.

Q. Do you adopt as part of your reasons the answer which you made on Saturday last?

A. Yes.

Q. What other reasons do you desire now to give besides those which you gave on Saturday?

A. I wish to add to the preliminary declaration which I made on Saturday this clause: I have never paid or agreed to pay, or had any understanding with any other person that he should pay or agree to pay, any money in this connection to any member or officer of this House who was a member or officer of that House, and I have no knowledge of such payment being made or agreed to be made.

And now, having seen four papers furnished to me by the committee, to wit:

A resolution passed February 20, 1873, that is to say, during the Forty-second Congress; a resolution passed March 3, 1873, that is to say, during the Forty-second Congress; a resolution offered by Mr. MILLIKEN on the 3d of April, 1874, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and not passed by the House of Representatives, and upon which no further or other order was taken by the said House; all of which documents or resolutions are now communicated to me by the Committee on Ways and Means at my request, as being the resolution or resolutions, order or orders, under which the said Committee on Ways and Means are or profess to be acting. I now desire to add to the above four reasons a fifth reason for declining to answer, all of the other reasons remaining valid and binding.

Fifthly. I decline to answer this question for the reason that the Committee on Ways and Means is not authorized and empowered by any resolution or order of the House of Representatives, or otherwise, to ask it.

Q. You insist on declining to answer the question put to you?

A. I do insist on declining.

Q. Without waiving that question, but insisting on it, I desire to put another question: State to the committee what portion of the $750,000 which you have testified you received from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, to be used in procuring the passage of the subsidy, you put in the hands of other persons to aid you in that work.

A. In the form in which that question is put, it is impossible to give a categorical answer to it. I paid the whole of that $750,000 to other persons whom I employed in consideration of their services.

Q. State what was the largest sum which you paid to any one such person for that purpose.

A. I must decline to answer that question on the general grounds stated before and on the special ground that it relates entirely to private transactions between myself and other persons not under the jurisdiction of this House, and relates to a subject-matter which is not now under the jurisdiction of this House.

Q. Without waiving these questions, but insisting on them, I ask you now to state how many persons you employed to aid you in procuring the passage of this subsidy.

A. I think I answered that question before to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Q. What is your answer to it now?

A. It was quite a large number of persons. As nearly as I can recollect without going through papers, which are not now in my possession, I should say perhaps twenty or thirty persons.

Q. Are there any papers in existence which will show the number of persons so employed or the character of their employment?

A. I think not.

Q. Have there ever been such papers in existence?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. What did you mean by saying that, without being able to refer to papers not now in your possession, you were unable to answer the question?

A. I suppose that by referring to papers which are in my possession somewhere—that is to say, some of them in San Francisco and some of them here—I could refresh my memory to such an extent as to be able to make out a complete list of all the persons employed by me. I cannot do so to-day.

Q. What are the papers to which you allude?

A. To answer the question would push my memory beyond its limits.

Q. Can you give us the character of the papers to which you allude?

A. Yes. I would give my bank account which I showed to the committee the other day, as one of the papers.

Q. Will your bank account disclose the number of persons and the character of the engagements, or either?

A. I cannot tell without an examination of it. I should think it would give an approximation to the number of persons. [After reflection.] But, no; it would not do that. It would not give even an approximation to the number of names, because some of the gentlemen whom I employed also employed other counsel to assist them. Suppose, for example, that one counsel employed five others to assist him, that would make six persons, and my check would simply show the one person.

Q. Have you any memorandum or writing anywhere that gives the names of the persons so employed?

A. I have no memorandum which gives a portion of the names, but I have recently seen one.

Q. Will it show the amount of money which you put in the hands of those persons respectively?

A. I object to the phrase "put in the hands of" in any other sense than as payment for services. I do not think the phrase is justified by the testimony.

Q. Will you produce before this committee papers showing your transactions to any extent with any person so employed?

A. The only paper I have seen of the character I alluded to is a memorandum in the possession of one of my counsel, made by him, he being attorney and counselor at law, who is not now and never has been an officer or member of this House; and it contains a list of persons who are not subject to the jurisdiction of this House to the extent of this inquiry?

Q. Are they persons who were employed to expend any portion of this money?

A. No, sir; they are persons who were paid for their services.

Q. Are they persons into whose hands came any portion of the $750,000 received by you from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the purpose stated by you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will that memorandum show what portion of that $750,000 came into the hands of each of those persons respectively, as far as it goes?

A. It will show the amount paid to each of those persons for his services as far as it goes.

Q. Will you furnish the committee with that memorandum?

A. I cannot furnish that memorandum, for the reason that it is not in my possession, and does not and never has belonged to me, but only to my counsel. None of the persons named on it are under the jurisdiction of this House, to the best of my recollection and belief.

Q. Do you mean to say that your engagement of persons to aid you in procuring the passage of the subsidy through Congress for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was of such a secret and confidential character that you cannot honorably disclose it?

A. No, sir; I mean to say that my relations with the attorneys and counsel whom I employed were of such a confidential character that—they and each of them and I being outside of the jurisdiction of this House—this House has no right to compel me to answer.

Q. Do you mean to say that you employed no person but an attorney at law?

A. No, sir; I think I employed others.

Q. Were your engagements with such other persons of such a secret and confidential character as that you cannot honorably disclose them?

A. They were precisely of the same character as that with the others.

Q. Will you disclose those relations to this committee?

A. I decline to do so for the reasons which I have stated.

The CHAIRMAN. Then we will excuse you for the present.

The WITNESS. I am in a very weak condition; and I most respectfully submit that the committee has crowded my memory this morning, and I would like very much, as a special favor, to be allowed to revise this portion of my testimony, because I may desire to correct it. Some phrases that I have used may be a little too strong.

The CHAIRMAN. Such portions of your testimony as the committee may desire to submit to the House you will be permitted to revise.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Are you an attorney and counselor at law by profession?

A. I am not.

The committee are of opinion, and report, that it is necessary for the efficient prosecution of the inquiry ordered by the House that said questions should be answered, and that there is no sufficient reason why the witness should not answer the same, and that his refusal is in contempt of this House.

The committee recommend the adoption of the accompanying order.

Mr. DAWES. Now let the Clerk read the order upon which the action of the House is asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Speaker issue his warrant, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms attending this House or his deputy, commanding him to take into custody forthwith, wherever to be found, the body of Richard B. Irwin, and him bring to the bar of the House, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and in the mean time keep the said Irwin in custody to await the further order of the House.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take any more of the time of the House than the gravity of such a subject would seem to demand. I cannot conceive of a question touching the purity of legislation that could be presented to the Congress of the United States in a more glaring light than the one before us, and I think the House of Representatives may well pause for a few moments before determining what is their duty in reference to this subject.

The testimony read to the House is somewhat lengthy, and more than is usual on such occasions; more for the purpose of presenting to the House the manner in which the sub-committee of the Committee on Ways and Means was compelled to pursue this examination of a witness who, at his own request and by the advice of his physician, was examined until this morning in his own private room. The committee desire every question they have put thus in private may be brought to the attention of the House, the manner in which they have put the questions, and the answers they have received. They have reported this morning to the full committee those questions, and bringing Mr. Irwin before it, he has been examined by the whole committee and this report recommended.

It may be summed up in a few words. This witness readily and almost, I may say, cheerfully states to the committee and to the country that for the purpose of procuring private legislation by Congress he has taken $750,000 and brought it to the very doors of the Halls of Congress, and then because he did not enter these Halls with his bags of money in his hands and walk up and down these aisles in distributing it, but put the remainder of his work, or whatever it was to be, in the hands of a third person, he fancies he can put a stop on this investigation. The question for this House to determine is whether, having rolled upon their shoulders an inference that it is impossible otherwise to repel, he shall let it remain here, that all the members of Congress who voted for that measure, each one and all of them, whether from convictions of duty or otherwise—that the charge shall remain that that subsidy was procured by the expenditure of this sum of money. There is no member of this House whose name stands recorded for that measure or who omitted to vote against that measure but has this charge by this testimony laid to his door. They called upon this House of Representatives to repel that inference which this witness seems voluntarily and with great alacrity to lay down upon them.

But, sir, if it touches the character of no member in the House, it touches the methods of legislation and the means of procuring legislation at the hands of Congress; and that having now been brought to the attention of Congress—whether it occurred in this or any other Congress—this Congress cannot omit to investigate to the bottom and understand this matter in its length and its breadth. If this money reached corruptly no member of Congress it was expended here to procure the passage of a bill, and, whether it was by private entertainments or by any other process whatever, the Congress of the United States must know in what manner it is that legislation is procured here, or they must cease to have regard not only to their own personal character as legislators, but must cease to have respect for the people of the United States to what they do here as legislators.

There is no aspect in which this witness presents for himself this case on the ground of which Congress can retreat from this investigation. I am myself very well, personally, convinced of the motive that has brought him from Europe to tempt a committee of Congress to bring him here and to draw out of him just what has been drawn out of him. But I am filled with amazement that any sane man could for one moment suppose that he could testify thus far and testify no more.

I do not think it is necessary to present further the reasons for this resolution, and therefore, unless some gentleman desires to present some other view of this case, I call the previous question.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means a question; but before putting that question I wish to say that I quite agree with him that it is right to prosecute this inquiry in order to disabuse the public of the idea that may have been entertained that the expenditure of any amount of money is either necessary or effective in procuring legislative action in either House of Congress. My experience of many years is decided to the effect that money is neither effective, desirable, nor useful for that purpose. Large sums of money frequently get into the hands of outside persons who are willing to take it and carry it off; but that it has any effect in procuring legislation I do not believe. But this is not the point for which I rise. The witness makes this objection: That the Committee on Ways and Means has not been formally authorized by the House to make this investigation. I do not recollect myself how the fact is. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has stated nothing in response to that in the remarks he has made so far as I have heard. I would like to know what the exact state of the record is.

Mr. DAWES. On the 12th day of January, 1874, the House referred to the Committee on Ways and Means the testimony taken in the last Congress touching the subsidy to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. On the 3d April, 1874, the House referred to the same committee a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MILLIKEN] on the same subject.

On the 24th of March, 1874, the following resolution was adopted by the House:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means are hereby authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers and administer oaths in all matters from time to time pending and under examination before said committee.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, before the question is put I desire to call the attention of the House to a provision of law that seems not to have been generally understood, and, I apprehend, could not have been understood by the witness who has taken this great responsibility upon himself. By section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States it is provided that—

Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by the authority of either House of Congress to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either House or any committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100 and imprisonment in a common jail for not less than one month nor more than twelve months.

And it is further provided by section 103 that no witness is privileged to refuse to answer any question "upon the ground that his testimony to such fact or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous." But this witness comes before the committee and cooly refuses to testify on the ground that in his judgment it is not honorable for him to mention the names of men into whose pockets he desires us to believe the money went in the first instance; and with this law, providing that even if it disgraces him and renders him an infamous man he shall not refuse to answer, that is the only reason which he lays before the committee touching his liability to answer.

I submit to the House that it is time that, with the utmost seriousness and earnestness of which we are capable, we strain to the last the law that gives us the power to ascertain whether the charges of corruption so frequently made are well founded or not. And if this law as it now stands is not sufficient for this purpose, in order to prevent the very sapping of the foundations of public confidence in the supreme legislative tribunal of the country, let this Congress pass some law that shall accomplish that object.

Now, I wish simply to call attention to the fact that if the authority granted on the 12th day of January last, I think, to the Committee on Ways and Means, authorizing them to summon witnesses and to administer oaths in regard to any matter pending before them—if that amounts to anything, we have power to pursue this inquiry and to avail ourselves of the utmost privileges the law will allow to enable us to get this testimony. I hope that will be done, and that in dealing with this witness all proper means will be exhausted to procure the facts.

Mr. TREMAIN. Before the gentleman closes I would like to ask him whether this statement would be privileged under the provisions of any law whatever?

Mr. KASSON. O no; none at all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 1043) suspending so much of an act entitled "An act organizing the civil staff corps of the Army," approved April 23, 1874, as applies to "contract surgeons," and a bill (S. No. 1054) reserving for the use of Congress one hundred and fifty copies of the Revised Statutes authorized to be printed by the act of June 20, 1874.

RICHARD B. IRWIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DAWES. I yield for a few moments to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up the time of the House in discussing this question. I indorse all that the chairman has said as to the gravity of the offense committed by the witness and as to the duty the House owes to itself. I want simply to call attention to the fact that if the House finds this witness guilty of contempt, or if any other contempt is committed against it at any time in the future, its power at present is limited to requiring him to answer the questions that have been put to him in order to purge himself of the contempt alleged against him; confinement till the end of the session being the only punishment possible for refusal. It seems to me that Congress should pass a general law empowering the House to commit to the common jail for not more than one year a person who is in contempt. It may be found to be necessary in this as well as in many other cases. I shall urge the passage of such a law, and if this witness remains in contempt, as I believe he will, after the law has been passed, I would subject him to the penalty that it entails by again bringing him before the House after the passage of the law, when, with full knowledge of its provisions, he might answer or refuse, and on refusal be subject to its provisions, as I do not desire to do anything which may be considered ex post facto.

The difficulty in the present law, as I said, is that you can punish only by imprisonment so long as the Congress lasts. The term of this Congress is rapidly passing away; it will expire on the 4th of March next, and then this man can be bailed in any proceeding instituted against him in court, and go to Europe or anywhere else, and defy the power of Congress to make him answer these questions. I think this is one of those cases in which the witness should be kept in custody in the common jail for a time not exceeding one year, by the expiration of which time another Congress will convene, which can deal with him. Here is a man who has by insinuation at least made a very serious charge against many respectable members of Congress, and he ought to be kept beyond the power of bail until he answers the questions put to him touching the matter of those charges. I trust the House will amend the law in the manner indicated in the resolution which I will read, the substance of which I shall offer before these proceedings close. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to report a bill to this House, as soon as possible, so far amending the law punishing contempts as to authorize imprisonment of the person or persons guilty of contempt under the control of the Sergeant-at-Arms in the common jail for any period not exceeding twelve months from the date of the judgment, unless the person or persons shall be sooner excused or released by the same or the subsequent Congress.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. It is, if the House were to order this party put in the jail of the District of Columbia he would not thereby pass out of the power and jurisdiction of the House, and be in such a position that he might escape the punishment which the House would put upon him?

Mr. BECK. We have provided by a resolution that while in the common jail he shall be in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House.

Mr. DAWES. I hope gentlemen will forbear leaping before they get to the stile.

Mr. BECK. I hope the Committee on the Judiciary will be able to frame some law that will meet this and similar cases.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. DAWES. For a minute.

Mr. KELLEY. As a member of the Forty-second Congress who supported the grant of this subsidy, not only earnestly but almost enthusiastically, I desire to say a brief word to the House. Since the adjournment of the Committee on Ways and Means, of which I have the honor to be a member, I have had an appeal made to me for mercy so far as my voice goes. I want to echo that appeal. As the chairman of the committee has said, every member of the Forty-second Congress that voted for that bill, and every member of that Congress who being in Washington did not vote against it, is under a disgraceful charge sworn to by this witness. And I ask Congress to bear them merciful in remembrance, and, in justice to every man who was here and whose hands are free, to stretch the law to its utmost verge to compel this man to do justice to me and those who were associated with me from honorable motives in trying to secure the grant of this subsidy.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman to yield to me a moment.

Mr. DAWES. I will do so.

Mr. RANDALL. Having originally introduced the resolution in the last Congress, by which the Committee on Ways and Means was directed to make this investigation, I want to correct an inference which seems to be conveyed by the language of the witness, that the present House has no jurisdiction in connection with this investigation. The investigation was proceeded with by the Committee on Ways and Means of the last Congress, and at the close of that Congress, (I think on the last day, or the day before,) this testimony was reported to the House, and reported sealed, so it was not known what was therein. But the recommendation of the committee was that it should be transmitted to the Committee on Ways and Means of this Congress. The connection is complete so far as the authority of this committee is concerned, for they took that testimony which was transmitted by a former Congress, and proceeded with the investigation under the law which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] has read. I thought the correction of this inference was important enough to justify me in directing the attention of the House to it.

Mr. DAWES. I now yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE, of Maine. For one I bid God-speed to this investigation, and I hope it will be carried to the bottom. But I want to enter my protest against the declaration just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] that is, that whatever becomes of this investigation, unless it shall follow that this recusant witness is made to testify in full, all the members of the Forty-second Congress who voted for this subsidy, for whatever reason might seem good in the mind of any member, or who being in Washington declined to vote against it, goes home with a deep disgrace resting upon him. I protest against that as an injustice to the Forty-second Congress.

Sir, there are some things that go to make up public reputation, public honor, and integrity that are not at the mercy of a hired lobbyist, who comes to these doors and employs others in one way or another that he sees fit not to tell. There are some things, thank Heaven, that are not at his mercy. What will the gentleman do with his broad charge against a whole Congress if this witness continues recusant, if he goes to confinement where we send him, and if he refuses to open his mouth, and will not testify where this vast sum of money went to, and the term of the House expires and we have no further jurisdiction over him? Is public service nothing? Is a long record untarnished by suspicion, such as many gentlemen have here in this House and who were members of the Forty-second Congress that voted for that subsidy—is that to go for nothing? I ask again, is a whole Congress at the mercy of a hired lobbyist who by implication or insinuation intimates that money has been paid here on this floor to affect legislation? Does the gentleman, in looking over his statement, candidly believe that if we do not get at this man and make him testify everybody goes home in disgrace to their constituents? I for one protest against any such thing.

There are members here who voted for that subsidy for honorable reasons, who knew nothing of any lobby, or never heard of it until afterward; who believed the measure was in the interest of commerce; who believed that there was a virgin field of commerce open to them and that they could hold it and protect it. I remember the discussion here on the floor at that time on this subject; I took part in it myself. And I know for myself, and there are others who know equally for themselves, what influence governed them in their votes. I again protest against its being said that a whole House is at the mercy of a hired lobbyist.

Mr. MAYNARD. So far as any personal reflection may rest upon any gentleman who was a member of the Forty-second Congress, however he may have voted, I am quite indifferent. If, as has been well said by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] the character of a member of this House is not sufficient to protect him against such testimony as we have had here to-day, then it is of so little consequence that it matters not whether it is adverse or otherwise. It is the general character of Congress I would protect rather than that of individual members.

My object in rising now is to call the attention of the Committee on Ways and Means to the technical legal attitude of this witness before the House. Undoubtedly we can hold him in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms until the 4th of March next. But it is very manifest that that would be quite inadequate punishment for this man, who confesses that he has pocketed $750,000; and the very fair and strong presumption is that it is in his pocket now, so far as anybody else has derived any benefit or advantage from it. What I ask the gentlemen to consider is that, when we leave him on the 4th of March in the custody of the judicial department, he shall be so left that there shall be no loop-hole out of which he can creep in order to escape the penalty of the statute read by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.] For this reason I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] whether they are satisfied that after we have taken the steps contemplated by the resolution against this witness there will be no embarrassment in his being proceeded against by the judiciary under the general statute?

Mr. STEPHENS rose.

Mr. DAWES. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS.]

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say but a word. This is, as the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] stated in his opening remarks, a very grave question. It involves principles of the greatest importance. It involves the rightful power of this House to punish for contempts of this sort. This, sir, is not a new question here. It is as old as the arrest of the editor of the Aurora (in 1798, I believe) on the charge of a contempt, (or what was styled a libel against the Senate.) There must be a violation of law before any body or any tribunal can rightfully punish in Heaven or on earth. Where there is no violation of law, there is no sin against man or God. This resolution proposes to punish by this House, against law. Now, sir, the law that was read by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] and which was passed some years ago, when I was a member of this House, to meet a similar case, (in which a person was imprisoned, as I believe, illegally, and therefore unjustly,) provides a mode of punishment in a rightful way. Whatever may be the crime of this witness, he is entitled to a trial according to the law provided for all such offenders. In this case the power of the House is exhausted.

The concluding section of the act referred to by the gentleman from Iowa, which he did not read, provides what shall be done in this very case. The matter is to be certified to the proper officer of the proper court, and the party is to be indicted and tried by a jury as all other offenders of a like grade. Real contempts of this House should be properly punished, but they can only be properly punished when punished according to law. The great right of all persons charged with high crimes and misdemeanors (except in cases of impeachment) is as sacred as any secured by the Constitution. I ask the Clerk to read the whole act.

A MEMBER. What is the title of the act?

Mr. STEPHENS. The title of this chapter in the Revised Statutes is "Congressional investigations."

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 102. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by the authority of either House of Congress to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either House, or any committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100 and imprisonment in a common jail for not less than one month nor more than twelve months.

SEC. 103. No witness is privileged to refuse to testify to any fact, or to produce any paper, respecting which he shall be examined by either House of Congress, or by any committee of either House, upon the ground that his testimony to such fact or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous.

SEC. 104. Whenever a witness summoned as mentioned in section 102 fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact, under the seal of the Senate or House, to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I call particular attention to the last section just read. Upon the report of the committee now before us, as I have said, our power under this law in this case is exhausted. If this party has committed a crime (it is not for me to say whether he has or not, I prejudge no man) he has a right to trial by a jury of his countrymen; and, Mr. Speaker, it is your duty under that act to certify this case to the district attorney, that the grand jury may indict him, and that he may have a regular trial like all other persons accused of crime. We have no rightful power to punish in the way proposed. We are as much bound by law as other people. Our duty is to maintain the law and not to break it.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] before he sits down, state whether in his opinion the act which has been read does not only give an additional remedy in the nature of a punishment, but deprives the Houses of Congress of the remedy existing by ordinary law?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Where is the "ordinary law?"

Mr. KASSON. The law under which we have acted for years. We have in many cases held men for contempt under the ordinary provisions of parliamentary law.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, parliamentary common law is not in force in this country. This House has no inherent power whatever, and can rightfully exercise no power except that which is conferred upon it by the written Constitution. These powers are ample, but they are to be executed according to law. There is no common law extending to this House. This body has no right, on its own mere volition, to punish for contempt, except so far as may be necessary to preserve order in the House or for securing a quorum, as provided in the Constitution. There is no "ordinary law" in the sense intimated by the gentleman from Iowa. When this question arose some years ago, and when the contumacious witnesses were put in jail, Congress saw the necessity for passing a law on the subject. That law has just been read. It was passed with reference to just such a case as this; and it provides that a contumacious witness shall be turned over to the court to have a trial. That is what I say should now be done here. This House has no right to punish in such a case as this. In my judgment the case is already provided for by law, and should be turned over to the courts.

Mr. DAWES. It would seem to be a sufficient answer to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] and the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] for the present at least, to say that this proceeding does not contemplate any punishment whatever. The question before the House is whether we shall call this witness before the bar to show cause why he should not answer.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir; why he should not be "punished for contempt." Let the gentleman read the resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Clerk to read it again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Speaker issue his warrant, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms attending this House or his deputy, commanding him to take into custody forthwith, wherever to be found, the body of Richard B. Irwin, and him bring to the bar of the House to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt; and in the mean time keep the said Irwin in his custody to wait the further order of the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Do you hear?

Mr. DAWES. Exactly; to show cause——

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. To show cause why he should not be punished for contempt.

Mr. DAWES. Exactly; and we propose to hear him before we decide the question whether we shall punish him for contempt or not. I do not know but my friend from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] and my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] have some other idea. I propose to hear him. I wish to enter my protest against the idea that the House of Representatives has no power to punish any person for contempt. Whatever may have been the object of the statute, the Constitution of the United States has given to the House of Representatives power to govern itself and all matters appertaining to the just and fair exercise of its powers. It is a grand inquest of itself. The Constitution makes it a court of inquiry. Its very constitution and purpose and functions are those of inquiry—an inquest—an examination. It implies at every step of its progress, in the discharge of its duties under the Constitution, examination, inquiry, deliberation, and along with those powers and functions are carried all the means necessary for their fulfillment.

The Congress of the United States never stripped itself of the power to protect itself from any contempt on that body inflicted upon it from outside. That a witness may be punished for not having appeared here, whether we bring him before the bar of the House and attempt to enforce our order or not, has been the uniform practice of the House of Representatives since it had an existence. It never was doubted upon the records of the House, to my knowledge, until to-day. One week ago we brought this witness——

Mr. TODD. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will allow me to ask him a question, and that is, is it not a legal principle that wherever the general power exists, or a common-law remedy exists, if it is changed or altered by statute the statutory remedy must not be pursued exclusive of all others?

Mr. DAWES. No doubt that as a general proposition it is true, but it does not govern this case.

I was saying, a week ago we arrested this very witness upon a charge just as much within the letter of this law as the charge to-day, and to-day upon his having shown cause we have discharged him.

Mr. NIBLACK. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether this witness has been discharged from the arrest he has been under for several days?

Mr. DAWES. He was discharged by order of the House this morning.

Mr. NIBLACK. The understanding was that he was to be discharged, but it had escaped me whether the House had acted upon that report of the committee.

Mr. DAWES. The committee reported the fact to the House that the reason assigned by the witness for having neglected to obey the summons of the House was satisfactory. Upon that report the witness was discharged from custody.

I cannot understand by what process it is supposed the House of Representatives, clothed by the Constitution and not by statute with the power to enforce its own rules and its own orders, is stripped of that power merely by attempting in addition to that authority to punish a witness who shall fail to appear.

Mr. KASSON. Will my colleague allow me to correct a misapprehension in reference to the law, and state a fact in addition?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. KASSON. By reference to the act of 1857, which is in the Revised Statutes, the language will be found to be, after providing for the case of refusal to answer, "the person so refusing shall, in addition to the pains and penalties now existing, be liable to indictment," &c. The original act which is referred to in the Revised Statutes contemplated the continuance of the then existing penalties, and not their abolition as suggested by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Existing penalties of another statute.

Mr. DAWES. The proposition is this, that whether this House shall have the benefit of the testimony of a witness before it depends not upon itself, but upon the action of some other tribunal hereafter. Therefore the position of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] is that the House of Representatives is without power to pursue an investigation under any circumstances except such as may be voluntary, because whether the witness shall be punished or not does not depend on them; whether he shall be forced to appear before the House does not depend on them, but depends upon another tribunal to be assembled hereafter, over whose action the House of Representatives has no control, and which, if the position of the gentleman from Georgia be correct, can intervene between the House of Representatives and any investigation whatever and render nugatory any attempt to arrive at the truth. Such a construction of existing laws, not supported by a single precedent upon record, but in direct conflict to every precedent from the beginning of the government to this very hour, and especially in the last Congress, from which were taken all these orders and resolutions in hæc verba, must require the clear, unequivocal, and positive enactment in conformity with an equally clear and positive constitutional authority. This House of Representatives might as well proclaim to the world that it has stripped itself naked of the power for investigation and no longer is able to protect itself when assailed in reference to the good morals of legislation.

Mr. BECK. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question before he sits down.

Mr. STEPHENS rose.

Mr. DAWES. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he has ever heard that where a man commits an assault and battery in the presence of a court, although there is a law to indict him for it, that court cannot punish him for contempt? Is not that an analogous case to this one?

Mr. DAWES. I always supposed they could until to-day.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, obtained the floor, and said: I yield to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS.]

Mr. STEPHENS. I have not proposed, nor have I uttered a sentiment leading in that direction, to maintain the proposition that this House has not the power to punish for contempt. I do not suppose that any gentleman on this floor entertains that view. There is no doubt that if a man committed an assault and battery in the presence of a judge, he would be committed for contempt. But how would it be if he committed the assault and battery outside on the street? Would the judge then punish him for contempt? He is then liable to the law of the land. We have rules in the House, made under the Constitution, regulating the discharge of the duties incumbent upon us in that respect.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say to the gentleman from Georgia that if this witness made his statement to somebody in the street we could not punish him; but he has made it to a committee of this House.

Mr. DAWES. And I wish to inform the gentleman from Georgia that a man committed an assault and battery on a member of Congress down at Richmond, and we brought him here and sent him to jail for three months.

Mr. STEPHENS. And I say you had no authority to do so.

Mr. ELDREDGE. That was what I said here at the time.

Mr. DAWES. The decree of the court, on a writ of habeas corpus being sued for, was that we had the authority.

Mr. STEPHENS. The House of Representatives by the Constitution has the right to determine the rules for its proceedings and to punish for violation of its rules. But the House has no right to punish any person for any offense committed outside of the House or in the streets, even against one of its own members. I know it has done it repeatedly; but I question its power to do it. This matter in regard to the power of the House to punish a witness for contempt was thoroughly debated in 1857.

Mr. DAWES. I want to say one word——

Mr. STEPHENS. I am not quite through. I will detain the House but a few moments. The question now before us is how far a witness can go and save himself from punishment by refusing to answer a question put to him by a committee of the House. That, sir, is settled by law. That is my answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts. That is settled by law, and all that I ask is that this House adhere to the law.

The gentleman from Massachusetts said that this resolution was not to punish. I suppose from its terms that the witness will be required to show cause why he should not be punished. Well, if he comes up to show cause why he should not be punished, I suppose he would show no other cause than he has done already; and the next motion would be to punish him; and that, I say, under the law, we have no power to do.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. As a member of the Forty-second Congress, who was a member when this subsidy passed, I have no such fear as makes it necessary for me to air my virtue by oppressing any man. I can stand here and look the people right in the face without feeling that I must put anybody in jail to vindicate my character or to prevent people from suspecting me of having to do with subsidies. I have no fear; I have no favors to ask of any body; and I can stand erect in the image of the God that made me and deal with the principles of right as they shall seem unto me just.

Now, sir, I would not interfere with this matter any more than I did with the passage of the Pacific Mail subsidy, were it not that some of the most valuable principles of the Constitution and the rights of the citizen are about, in my judgment, to be trampled down at the instance of honest and honorable men like my colleague at the head of committees and honest and honorable men on committees, and that precedents will be set which will return to plague us when stormy times come and bad men get the rule. Therefore I think it is that this House of Representatives should see to it that they set no precedent to-day which shall hereafter be detrimental to the liberties of the citizen.

I have no sympathy with the man who has stated and sworn upon his oath that he gave this money to purchase legislation. Neither have I any sympathy with those who are calumniating every public man for every action and every want of action that may be taken. I have suffered as much, perhaps, as some of my neighbors, and suffered in silence from wrong imputations, and therefore I may speak, I trust, with that plainness and with that calmness with which a grave judicial question should be treated. I have had brought here before, upon my motion, a man to have him show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of the House of Representatives, and he was restrained of his liberty for a given time. His name was Charles Wooley. I thought myself justified wholly and completely in that case, as I should not think myself justified in taking the like action in this case.

When my friend talks of precedent I desire him to look carefully into the precedents. What is the power of Congress? It takes three bodies, the President, the Senate, and the House of Representatives, to make laws. The House of Representatives can make no law binding upon anybody in this country except its own members and its own officers. The moment you step beyond that you are powerless. Am I not right, Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House?

But the Constitution has given the House certain powers, and one is the power of impeachment, and in the exercise of that power we have a right to all the incidental powers necessary to carry it out. We are, then, the grand inquest of this nation, and we are the only grand inquest of this nation. When we have to inquire into the impeachment of some officer, being made by the Constitution the impeaching power, we have then to ascertain whether the man is worthy of impeachment or not. Then we have the power of punishment for contempt, and can do all other acts necessary to the ascertainment of the truth; but where in the Constitution do you find this new-fangled mud-machine, called an investigation, in which no man's character is safe, in which no rules of evidence prevail or are for a moment observed? In the Committee on Ways and Means last session such questions as these were asked about myself: "Did you ever hear a rumor that he did so and so?" "Was there not some talk in the city about it?" And there was some miserable newspaper talk that they could see my coat-tail going out of the committee-room.

Sir, this is not the power given to us by the Constitution. I say that we have the power of investigation. What is that power? That power is to ascertain such facts as are necessary to instruct our consciences in regard to our duties here, and when we have done that, we have gone as far as we have any power to go; and of course in these necessary investigations we are not a grand inquest in any form. Our power is simply to investigate facts, to summon witnesses, to take their testimony and report it to the House for our instruction.

Now, I remember well that the law now found in the Revised Statutes was passed in 1856 under precisely these circumstances: The tariff law of 1856 was changed, and a member of Congress from Massachusetts was Speaker. It turned out that an individual from Massachusetts had said somewhere that he had paid $82,000 for that change, and there was a movement to have it investigated. The matter was brought before the House, and it resulted in such disagreement of opinion in the House that this law which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] has called attention to, was passed to meet the case. But I ask you where does the power of investigation stop?

Mr. DAWES. My colleague will allow me a moment. I was here at the time to which the gentleman refers. The witness in that case was confined in the jail of the District of Columbia, under the order of the House, until the gentleman from Georgia himself got up and requested the Massachusetts delegation, because the man's wife was sick and at the point of death, to ask that he be discharged. In this case the precedent has been followed exactly in the words of the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am very much obliged to my colleague for mentioning that fact.

Mr. DAWES. If my colleague will indulge me, I will say that I remember the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] stating the fact that under the Constitution we had no right to commit that man to jail. That was before this law was passed. The gentleman from Georgia entertained the same ideas before this law was passed that he entertains now——

Mr. STEPHENS. And favored the passage of the law.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I thank the gentlemen for this, because it shows exactly what I said to the House; for I speak with accuracy—I mean to—that because of that discussion as to the powers of the House, this law was passed.

Mr. DAWES. No, sir.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir; and it was before the law was passed that this action was had. And it was due to the party that was not in the majority, to the democratic party, about which I knew something in those days, the party to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] belonged, that held to the doctrine that we have always held, and the doctrine I hold to now, that there can be no imprisonment without the law of the land and the judgment of a court.

Mr. DAWES. My colleague is mistaken; it was a democratic majority that committed him.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me.

Mr. DAWES. The republicans were in the minority, and got the aid of the gentleman from Georgia from the majority to help us.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me; was not Banks, the know-nothing, Speaker of the House?

Mr. DAWES. No; James L. Orr was Speaker when it was done.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let me say further——

Mr. DAWES. I was here.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me; I am not misrepresenting you now, and you would not hear me when you were misrepresenting me, word for word. Now keep quiet.

Mr. DAWES. I will.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I was saying that the majority of the democratic party passed this law, and then I was interrupted.

Mr. DAWES. The law——

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If you must talk, talk low. I say the majority of the democratic party aided to pass the law And since that time, for one, I never would have moved to put a man in prison for simply refusing to answer in an ordinary investigation.

Now, what have we the right to investigate about? Nothing but whether a law is or is not a good one to be passed. For instance, take this Pacific Mail subsidy; the question is whether it is best to repeal that law or not. I do not see why we should go into this investigation further. The agent of the company has sworn upon his oath, being dragged here by process, not coming here voluntarily, so far as I have heard. The last I heard of him before this was that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means was before the House asking that somebody should be sent to bring this witness here, sick or well. If I remember, he did not volunteer to appear here as a witness, but he was dragged here by process; and after he is brought here he swears that he paid something to somebody to get this subsidy passed. If he did, then for that reason alone I will vote to repeal it, unless the Pacific Mail Company will show that they had nothing to do with it.

I do not care whether he paid it to one man or another. I do not care whether he paid it to Mr. A, Mr. B, or Mr. C; but I utterly protest against this doctrine that the House can sit here and put men in jail in order to clear the character of anybody in a former Congress. We have enough to do to take care of the country in this Congress without clearing the characters of members of a former Congress. We have no right to drag out testimony either for or against members of former Congresses who are not here to answer for themselves. The half a dozen who are left over here have no right, in order to vindicate their reputations, to drag out testimony against men who are not here. Because members may say that they feel under a load, they have no right to insist that a burden shall be thrown upon the hundreds of men who are not here to answer. The cruelty is extreme.

I go farther and say this, that when this witness comes here and says, "I have done this, that, or the other," he has done all he is bound to do. You cannot go farther; or if you do, you can only go on under the law and turn him over to the courts for punishment. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] seems to have forgotten all his ideas and opinions of liberty; and he now asks us to pass a retroactive law. That is, we have got the man here, and he would pass a law to inflict a more severe punishment or penalty upon him, compel him to answer or else keep him here during his natural life. He would bring him up here and ask him a question which he knows he will not answer; he will get him to break the law, having passed one which he knows he will break. What unbridled license this desire for investigation will cause to spring up in a man so honorable as the gentleman from Kentucky usually is.

Why not put the thumb-screws upon him and torture him? You would put in jail a sick man whom you have brought here; you would put him in a damp dungeon. Why not put the thumb-screws on him at once, and compel him to answer? Think a moment. We are in the year 1874, and very near Christmas, when "peace on earth and good will to men" is what we should be thinking about. We are in a land of liberty, a land of law, a land of right; and no body of men can summon a person as a witness and then without trial, without allowing him to be heard by counsel, thrust him into a dungeon. Let us not get frightened out of our propriety of thought with reference to the rights of citizens. I was surprised to-day by the great heat and feeling shown by my friend, the chairman of this committee, [Mr. DAWES.] Why, sir, that gentleman is a judge in this case. He is one of those in whose keeping this man's liberty is. Why this feeling against him? And why did another gentleman, my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] whom I respect very much, who I know always votes for that which he thinks will promote the prosperity of his country and the progress of the world, without any hope of reward but the reward of doing right, and who I would not believe to have been guilty of any wrong if forty men like Irwin should come here and swear that they had placed a bag of gold in his hand—why does he feel it necessary to say that all of us who were in the Forty-second Congress are under a stigma unless we can squeeze certain testimony out of this man? And the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] says, "let us strain the law." What language for a law-maker! "Strain the law" to do what? To put a man in prison.

What right have you here to investigate whether this or that member of a previous Congress was bribed any more than you have to inquire whether a member of a previous House committed robbery, or adultery, or any other crime, or was divorced from his wife or she from him without good cause? Why not go into such matters if you are going into examinations of this kind? Where shall we stop? The Constitution and the law and reason tell us we should stop when we pass out of our own doors and out from among our own number.

Sir, this is no new doctrine of mine. When you undertook the Credit Mobilier investigation, and when there were blank faces all over this House, mine was an exception. I was not frightened then any more than I am now. When you undertook to go and take the Vice-President out of his seat in the Senate and investigate his past conduct, the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I was then a member, brought in a report (which was unanimous with a single exception) that you had no right to investigate his doings in a past Congress under any circumstances. That question never directly came up, because when the Credit Mobilier Committee came to act they only acted upon the cases of Mr. Ames and Mr. Brooks, who were members of that Congress.

What are you going to do? Suppose you find out that every member in the last Congress not in this House took bribes; how are you to punish them? You may ruin them, because they may have no opportunity for a defense; you may ruin them, because some man, to account for money that was put into his hands, may say that he gave it to them; and they may have no opportunity to come in and answer. You may destroy the hopes of them and their families without the judgment of law or the trial of their peers. You have the brute force to do it, but you have not the legal power.

Now, this man has committed a crime known to the law, the crime of refusing to answer questions put to him by a committee of the House of Representatives about a matter which they say they have a right to inquire into. He answers back and says, "I appeal to the law; I am advised that you have no right to compel me to answer; you have no jurisdiction of the question; I appeal to the law of the land." The law of the land says that if a man refuses to answer in such a case he is to be tried by a court and jury, and punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year. Now, suppose you bring him here, and put him in a common jail and keep him three or four months and then turn him over to the court, where he is convicted of this crime. Then he is punished by an additional imprisonment of a year. Suppose the next Congress should meet in March; for I want to see my democratic friends deal with this sort of questions awhile when they are in the majority. Suppose he should then be brought up again to answer concerning what he did in the Forty-second Congress, and should then refuse. You may then keep him in prison until the end of that Congress, which will be two years; and then you turn him over again to the courts to punish him by imprisonment for another year. In other words, when the law has said to this man, "If you do this thing you shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year," you punish him by imprisonment for three years or more. By what right? By the supposed right of "common parliamentary law," unheard of and unknown except in the British Parliament, which has supreme and unlimited authority. There is no common law of the United States. There is a common law in the States between man and man, and under it they are crimes against the States; but there is no common law of the United States, and there is no common parliamentary law in force here. But were there ever so much law, when a statute has provided distinctly that in such a case a man shall be punished thus far and no further, you cannot without wrong, and great wrong, lay an ounce more of weight upon him, however much you may detest the crime with which he is charged.

Let us not be driven from our propriety of thought, our manhood, our feeling of justice and right; let us not be driven from our stand upon the provisions of the Constitution in favor of personal liberty; for those safeguards are all that is left us in troublous times. Let us not in our hurry and excitement put a man in prison without authority of law because we are anxious to vindicate the character of some of our associates. There is nothing in the Constitution about the moral character of legislation that I ever heard. There is no reason and no ground to investigate for that reason. It is ad captandum. The whole argument is ad captandum when we say we are called upon here to vindicate the character of our friends and associates. It is appealing to our sympathies for them as against this man for whom none of us has any sympathy.

We stand here not now as legislators. We stand here now called upon to lay down our legislative character and assume the rod and ax, and bring this man in to show cause why he should not be punished. I agree, sir, that this man should show cause why he should not answer, but I object to a resolution that he should be brought in to show cause why he should not be punished. We have no right to punish. The House of Representatives under this clause of the Constitution——

A MEMBER. What about the case of Pat Woods?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I agree to the punishment of Pat Woods. That was another and a different affair. But point me to the statute, point me to the Constitution, point me to the law, point me to the rule of Congress which shows we can punish. I call on my learned friend from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] from his learning to point to me the law or constitutional provision which provides for this power in a mere matter of investigation—not for the purpose of impeachment, or for the purpose of expelling a member, or for the purpose of enforcing order. Where is it? This is not to enforce order. All this man did was——

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is necessary for us to have facts upon which legislation shall be founded.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Under what law was Pat Woods punished?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Under the law which protects a man; the power which we have to protect our members coming to and going from their attendance upon Congress. Mr. Porter swore exactly and precisely that he was coming here to answer his name on the roll-call when Pat Woods struck him down.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. But you say there is no law which gives to Congress power to punish.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me, it does; it is the power of self-protection. I say whatever we have a right to do we have the right to all the incidents. But my proposition is that we have no right to go into the investigation of what took place in another Congress. That is no more our business than it is to ascertain what took place in the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States.

My learned friend from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] says it is in order to learn facts necessary for legislation. Why will it do him any more good to learn the fact that Mr. A received the money rather than Mr. B, if we know this money was paid by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company or its agents?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield to me.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I cannot in a moment say what I want to say.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then I will give the gentleman reasonable time to say what he wishes to.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, this is an important question, affecting the powers of this House, the rights of citizens, and the interests of this country. I have had no time to consider it as it deserves, and shall present only such views as now occur to me. The first question to be determined is this: Has this House, by the common parliamentary law, the power to punish for contempt? Now, there are two classes of powers: those which are conferred by express provision of the Constitution and those which are incidental. No man doubts but each house of the British Parliament has power to punish for contempt. It is a power long exercised, declared by all writers on the British constitution, and denied by no one. When our Constitution confers upon Congress, as it does in the very first section of the first article, all legislative powers therein granted, there is given to Congress the incidental power to ascertain every fact necessary to enable it to legislate intelligently on every subject within its constitutional jurisdiction. Among the powers necessary to accomplish this purpose is the power to summon witnesses and to compel them to testify. The power to punish for contempt is not an incident on an incident. It is only a necessary part of the one incidental power. That power has been exercised from the foundation of the Government up to this time, and it has never been doubted or denied until this day. In accordance with that general power, that incidental power, it is stated in Barclay's Digest—

That the failure or refusal of a witness to appear or refusal to testify is a breach of the privilege of the House, and has been punished by commitment to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms and by commitment to the common jail of the District of Columbia.

Then in this book are cited the pages of the journals where instances have occurred of the exercise of this power. This power has been affirmed to exist by the decision of the Supreme Court, by every commentator on the Constitution, by the uniform usage of the House, and never been denied until now. I shall assume, therefore, that by the common parliamentary law, as a necessary inherent incidental power of this House, that it has the authority to punish for contempt just as fully for all authorized legislative purposes as the House of Commons of England. The Constitution, in creating a House of Representatives, intended to give it the same incidental powers within its jurisdiction as the House of Commons had in that country, from which we derive so much of our constitutional, parliamentary, and other law.

But my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] and my friend from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] say this power has been taken away by act of Congress—that act which provides that if a witness shall refuse to testify he may be handed over to the courts and subjected to punishment.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Shall be.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly, shall be.

Sir, there are or may be two offenses. There may be a crime against the public, and there may be the offense against the power and authority of this House. When we punish for contempt it is an exercise of the power of this House to punish for an offense against this House.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to say one word? I am informed by the Sergeant-at-Arms that while this discussion is going on the witness has gone. I desire to know whether the vote may not be taken immediately, so that his arrest can be secured.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I wish to say but a few words more. There exists a power in the courts to punish for the crime against the public, and a power in this House to secure its rights and punish for a disobedience of its authority. Now, my friend from Massachusetts knows very well, and any gentleman who will turn to Sedgwick "On the Construction of Statutes," will find it there laid down that a statute does not repeal or take away a common-law right unless it contains negative words—words expressly abolishing the common-law right. But this statute to which reference has been made has no negative on the common-law powers of the House, and those powers are twofold, to enforce obedience and to punish. One has as its object to give effect to the general powers of the House; for which purpose it may be necessary to punish for a refusal to obey the House in the exercise of its lawful and constitutional powers. Without this penal authority of the House its powers would become unavailing and would fall into contempt. The act of Congress to which reference has been made has for its object the punishment of crimes against the public. There is a necessity for this power in the courts. The House, unlike the Senate, is not a continuous body. It dies with the end of the Congress. It can therefore only punish by imprisonment not longer than the end of the Congress. That may be, and now is, a very brief term. The punishment by the House may be very inadequate. For that reason provision was made giving the courts a cumulative or additional power to punish. Now that, it seems to me, is all there is in this matter, and it seems to me perfectly proper that this witness shall be brought before the House, that he may be called upon to answer, and we can then determine whether he has committed such an offense as that and on account of it he can be committed for contempt. We ought not to barter away or surrender the common-law powers of this House, so essential to obtain information and to secure the ends of justice.

Mr. POLAND. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] a question. Suppose the House should declare that this man is in contempt, and we voted that, as a punishment for that contempt, he be imprisoned in the jail of the District of Columbia six days; does the gentleman hold that after receiving that sentence and that punishment this man would still be liable to be indicted by the grand jury of this District for the same thing, and be punished by a year's imprisonment?

Mr. LAWRENCE. No, sir; not for the same thing, but for the crime against the public. Let me illustrate. An example has already been given. A court has power to punish as for contempt an assault and battery committed in its presence, and yet the party so punished may be indicted and punished for the offense against the State. So it may be a crime by statute, for which the offender may be indicted and punished, to transfer a promissory note for the purpose of defrauding creditors. It may also be a contempt of court to violate an injunction restraining the transfer of the same note, and there may be a punishment as for contempt for violating the injunction and for the crime against the public. The act for which the punishment is inflicted in both cases being the transfer, there yet may be an indictment and punishment for the fraud against the public under the statute as well as the punishment for contempt in violating the injunction.

Mr. POLAND. The difference is that in one case there is a civil remedy, in the other a criminal.

Mr. LAWRENCE. They are both penal in their nature. The punishment for contempt of the authority of this House may just as well be called a civil remedy.

Mr. POLAND. How does the gentleman reconcile the two punishments with the provision of the Constitution which declares that a man shall not be tried but once for the same offense?

Mr. LAWRENCE. That has reference to courts of criminal jurisdiction, and has no relation to the common parliamentary powers of this House no more than it has to proceedings for contempt in the courts. No commentator on the Constitution has ever claimed otherwise.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The parliamentary power to punish a man twice?

Mr. LAWRENCE. The parliamentary power to punish is and can be only exercised once, and is then functus officio. It is a power which has been exercised since the foundation of this Government down to this day to punish for contempt. There is no punishment twice for the same offense; they are different offenses, punished by different tribunals, and for different objects. This power has never been disputed until now. Bishop, in his Criminal Law, has shown that the same act may constitute different and distinct offenses; and Congress in passing the act which gives the courts the power of punishment expressly recognizes the common-law parliamentary power to punish, and in express terms says that—

Any person summoned as a witness by authority of the House to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter before the House or any committee thereof, who shall willfully make default, or who, appearing, shall refuse to answer any question pertinent to the matter of inquiry in consideration before the House or committee by which he shall be examined, shall, in addition to the pains and penalties now existing, be liable to indictment as for a misdemeanor.

Note the words:

In addition to the pains and penalties now existing.

To wit, those that may be inflicted under common parliamentary law. What other pains and penalties can be referred to?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is not on the record.

Mr. SPEER. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly.

Mr. SPEER. Does the gentleman believe that a confinement which a party in contempt has the right to terminate at any moment is punishment within the language or spirit of the Constitution?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Not at all. That clause of the Constitution which prohibits any person from being twice put in jeopardy of life or limb because of any offense, has no reference to the exercise of common parliamentary power by the House of Representatives. It relates only to the administration of criminal justice and to those offenses which by law are classified as crimes, and which may be punished in the courts. Here is a case where a contumacious witness may put an end to his imprisonment, the object of which is to secure his testimony and not to punish him, so far as the ends of justice are concerned.

Mr. SPEER. That is the precise point.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The House has, however, the power to punish. We have been asked to point to the clause in the Constitution which confers the power to punish for contempt. It is found in that clause which confers legislative power and is an incident of that power. It is inherent in the House. It has been said in the case of the United States vs. McDaniel, (7 Peters,) and in United States vs. Lytle, (5 McLean, 9,) that the Executive Departments must necessarily have the inherent power to do many things essential to the discharge of their duties for which no express statute can be found. The same may be said of the Houses of Congress. It has been said that the Revised Statutes containing the law giving the courts power to punish a refusal to testify do not contain the words "in addition to the pains and penalties now existing." They were in the revision dropped out as mere surplusage—as unnecessary. That revision, as we all know, made no change in the law.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I resume the floor. I was desirous of hearing what might be said on the law of the matter, and it resolves itself into this, that Congress is omnipotent about this matter because the British Parliament is omnipotent. I want to say that that is not a doctrine I can subscribe to.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is not this House as omnipotent as the House of Commons in relation to those subjects which are expressly intrusted to the House by the Constitution?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is my point.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. In expelling members we have all the powers of the British Parliament. But the other element is mere arrogation.

Mr. LAWRENCE. And to ascertain the facts necessary to enable it to legislate under the Constitution; that is a power inherent in the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There are two incidental powers involved. There appears to be here an incidental power and an incidental power devolved from that under which you claim the right to punish a man.

Mr. SPEER. Has not the House the right and power to expel a member who has been corruptly influenced in his votes here?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPEER. Well, then, has it not the power to investigate the question whether he has been so corruptly influenced or not?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPEER. How, then, are you to conduct the investigation if the House has not the power to compel the attendance of witnesses and to punish them for contempt in refusing to testify?

Mr. LAWRENCE. What is the good of saying that the House has the power to investigate such questions when you do not allow it to carry into effect that power?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This man has sworn expressly that he has given no pay to any member of Congress.

Mr. LAWRENCE. O! that is another question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There is no charge made here against any member of the House. If there were, then you might sweep the whole world for witnesses and punish for contempt those who refuse to answer the proper questions. You cannot do it unless there is some such charge made, unless there is something to which you can direct your inquiry. Without that you have not the power to send a drag-net through all creation and to scoop up everything you can against any man's character.

Mr. SPEER. How are you going to make charges against a man if you are denied the power to summon witnesses?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. How are you going to summon witnesses when there is no charge made against any member of the House? When a member of the House rises and alleges in his place that there is certain evidence against a member of the House, then the House has full power to summon that evidence, and not otherwise.

Mr. SPEER. If it be not in the power of the House to compel the production of evidence, all a man has to do is to refuse to testify on matters affecting the conduct of members.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me; I am sorry you did not understand me better. You can only inflict punishment as long as you are in existence; but where the Constitution gives you no power you infer a power.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is stated that the agent of the Pacific Steamship Company used money improperly to influence legislation. There is such a charge. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] has said that if this was true he would vote to repeal the subsidy. We have a right to inquire into the facts touching that matter, so that the gentleman from Massachusetts may know how to vote on a proposition to repeal that subsidy. The House has the right to get all the facts in reference to it. In other words, we are charged with a duty, and that is to inquire in regard to the legislation we have to provide. Is the House powerless to ascertain the facts?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This power now claimed is not one that can be found in the Constitution of the United States. You find in the Constitution no power for this investigation. You infer it, and you then infer the power to control this investigation. Now, when you say that this power of imprisonment has been exercised by the House, I say it has been exercised in one or two cases, and then the law was passed about it; it was exercised in cases of impeachment and in cases where a member was charged with the commission of some act deserving expulsion.

Let me repeat here, so that there can be no mistake; where the Constitution has given us the power to do a thing, it has given us all the power incident to it; but where it has not given us the power to do a thing, it has not given us an incidental power to take away the liberties of a citizen. One thing further: Congress in 1856 did exactly what it had a right to do. This incidental power, they said, we will exercise under this limitation, and this only. If the man does not answer, we will turn him over to the courts to try him, and punish him by imprisonment for one year. And so far Congress laid down their power, if they ever had it.

Mr. LAWRENCE. There has been no repeal of the common-law power.

Mr. MAYNARD. Allow me to ask a question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. MAYNARD. Have we not always exercised in proper cases the power to send for persons as witnesses?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MAYNARD. Have we not the power to detain those persons until they shall have testified?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MAYNARD. Well, that covers the whole ground.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, it does not cover the whole ground. I thought somebody would blunder on that. That power to which the gentleman refers is the power of detention, not the power of punishment. We do not detain those persons in order to punish them, but we detain them in order to use them, to obtain their testimony. We have that power. This is the power of punishment. That is the difference, and it does not cover the whole ground. What I am contending for is not that the House has no power to investigate, but I am contending that this power to punish is against the Constitution of the United States, that it is a power without warrant of constitutional law, or a word of law; that all we can do is to send him to the courts. That is the only way in which we can undertake to punish a man for contempt of the House in this respect, for we have laid down by statute our power to so punish him if we ever had it. And you must have a proper case for investigation. You have no right to send for persons and papers in order to investigate the question whether John Smith, of Iowa, did this or did the other thing.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is not that a matter for our own discretion?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is it not for us to determine what we want to know and what we do not?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me; if you want to know ever so much, you have no right to use the power of the House to learn such a thing as that. I have suggested the common school for that.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Does the gentleman deny the power of this House to hold in custody a witness who refuses to answer?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. To hold him for the purpose of compelling him to answer?

Mr. DAWES. To hold him in custody?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. In a case where we have the right to bring him before us. But we have no right to bring him here in order to find out whether John Smith's wife has done this or that.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The gentleman seems to deny the power of the House to do anything in this case, and therefore it is not such a case as can be certified to the courts by the Speaker.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. By no means. I was speaking of the Constitution before. Under the law we can bring this man before the House, adjudge him guilty of contempt of the House, and send him to the courts under the certificate of the Speaker.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Must we part with our right to hold that witness in custody and to control him, and put him beyond our reach, because he happens to-day to refuse to answer?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No; we need not certify him to the courts unless we please.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Can we hold that witness in custody until Congress shall adjourn?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. You have only two remedies, even as you yourselves claim; first, you can hold him here before the bar of the House, and the other is to send him to prison for a year. You have done all you can when you get through with that. The fact that you cannot put the thumb-screw on him, as some people would like to do, that you cannot put his foot in a boot and twist it up, as they used to do in the old times when there was neither law nor constitution; the fact that you cannot put him on the rack and compel him to answer is no reason why you should do this thing.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Does the gentleman say that this House has no power except such as is expressly given by the literal words of the Constitution?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. By no means. I have stated over and over again, and I will endeavor to make it plain to the commonest comprehension, that by the Constitution this House has certain expressed powers and certain incidental powers; the expressed powers carry with them incidental powers, but the incidental powers do not carry other incidental powers; that is all.

Mr. LAWRENCE. This House has the power to judge what are its incidental powers. The Supreme Court has decided that Congress is the sole judge of its incidental powers "necessary and proper" to carry into effect its granted powers.

Mr. DAWES. I call the previous question.

Mr. COTTON. I would like to offer an amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I cannot yield for that purpose.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. DAWES. I now call up the resolution in regard to the holiday recess, which has been lying over since last Monday.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, the 23d instant, they adjourn to meet again on Tuesday, the 5th day of January next, at twelve o'clock noon.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. SENER. I object to any debate.

Mr. DAWES. I will yield for any amendment proposing to shorten the time or for a motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. Speaker, I have offered this resolution, according to the usual custom, as a report from the Committee on Ways and Means. From my experience here my own opinion is that it would be impossible to keep a quorum here for business during the holidays. If a quorum would stay here and do business, I should be very glad to be one of that quorum. But I have seen the effort made a great many times to prevent a holiday recess. I never saw it succeed but once; and on that occasion there was not a quorum here on a single day of the proposed recess, and no business was transacted. If a majority of the House are disposed to stay here and feel it their duty to do so, I should be very glad to be one of that number.

Mr. SPEER. The gentleman should state that three special committees recently appointed have to be absent during the holidays.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HALE, of Maine, there were—ayes 72, noes 96.

Mr. TODD and Mr. SENER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 100, nays 126, not voting 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Barrere, Bass, Bradley, Buffinton, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Clayton, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Corwin, Crutchfield, Curtis, Darrall, Donnan, Field, Freeman, Garfield, Gunckel, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Harrison, Hatcher, Havens, Hays, Gerry W. Parker, Pelham, Phelps, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Potter, Purman, Rapier, Ross, John G. Schumaker, Sessions, Sloss, Smart, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Southard, Standiford, Starkweather, Stephens, St. John, Storm, Sypher, Taylor, Thornburgh, Marcus L. Ward, Whiteley, Wilber, and Wood—63.

So the resolution was not laid on the table.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. LUTTRELL. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. POTTER. If he were present he would vote "no;" I should vote "ay."

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LAMISON. If he were here he would vote in the negative, and I in the affirmative.

Mr. BUNDY. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. DEWITT, who, if present, would vote "no," while I should vote "ay."

Mr. SCOFIELD. My colleague, Mr. ROSS, is detained from the House by sickness.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Massachusetts yields to me to offer an amendment that the House shall adjourn from Thursday next, the 24th of December, to Tuesday, the 29th day of December. December.

Mr. DAWES. I now call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question first recurred on Mr. GARFIELD'S amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 90.

Mr. MAYNARD demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 92.

So (one-fifth of those present not having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SENER demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred on the original resolution.

Mr. PAGE moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, demanded the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. NEGLEY and Mr. RANSIER.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 38, noes not counted.

So (one-fifth of those present having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 121, nays 93, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Barnum, Beck, Berry, Biery, Blount, Bowen, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Burchard, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., John B. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Archer, Banning, Barry, Begole, Bell, Bland, Bundy, Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Crocker, DeWitt, Duell, Dunnell, Farwell, Fort, Garfield, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Hathorn, Hendee, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hubbell, Hunton, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamison, Lansing, Leach, Lofland, Loughridge, Luttrell, McJunkin, Morey, Myers, Orth, Hosea W. Parker, Pelham, Phelps, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Potter, Purman, Rapier, Ross, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Sessions, Shanks, Sheldon, Sloss, Small, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Southard, Standiford, Stephens, St. John, Storm, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Thornburgh, Wallace, Wheeler, Whiteley, Wilber, John M. S. Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, and Wood—75.

So the resolution was adopted.

During the vote,

Mr. LUTTRELL stated that he was paired with Mr. POTTER, who would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. ARCHER stated that he was paired with Mr. SHELDON, who would vote in the negative, while he himself would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, stated that he was paired with Mr. LAMISON, who would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. BUNDY stated that he was paired with Mr. DEWITT, who would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. STRAIT stated that Mr. DUNNELL, who would, if present, vote in the negative, was detained from the House by illness.

Mr. SHANKS stated that he was paired with his colleague, Mr. WOLFE, who would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Massachusetts, stated that he was paired with Mr. HUBBELL, who would vote in the negative, while he would vote in the affirmative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. NEGLEY moved, by unanimous consent, that the bill (H. R. No. 3550) amendatory of the act approved March 3, 1873, entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, at Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri," which was made the special order for to-day after the morning hour, be postponed until the next Monday, after the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (S. No. 1023) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands; when the Speaker signed the same.

BOUNTY.

Mr. COBURN. I move by unanimous consent that the first Tuesday after the recess be set for the consideration of the bill in relation to bounties.

The SPEAKER. Where is the bill?

Mr. COBURN. It is upon the general Calendar. I move that Senate bill (S. No. 14) in relation to bounties be taken from the general Calendar and considered in the House on that day.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It ought not to be taken from the general Calendar, and I therefore object.

Mr. COBURN. I move to suspend the rules in order that that order may be made.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 25.

Mr. COBURN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 22, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLINTON LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that when the two Houses adjourn on the 23d instant, they shall adjourn to meet again on Tuesday, the 5th day of January next; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 1023) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SCOTT. I present the memorial of the board of commissioners for the improvement of the Ohio River and its tributaries, a body appointed by the governors of seven States, calling the attention of Congress to the importance of making a necessary appropriation for the purpose of inaugurating the system of improvements which they have indorsed in resolutions embodied in this memorial. They do not take up time or space in giving statistics, but they direct attention to public documents in which the argument of statistics on this subject may be found. As this memorial comes from a board representing seven States, composed of commissioners appointed by the governors of them, and is very brief, I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS presented a petition of certain clergymen of different denominations in the District of Columbia, praying exemption of churches and church property from taxation; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, asking aid in the construction of the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad. Inasmuch as this memorial relates to a bill which was reported favorably at the last session by the Committee on Railroads and is now on the Calendar, I move that the memorial lie on the table; and as it is very short, I move also that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of Major J. W. Drew, late assistant paymaster United States Army, asking relief on account of loss of certain vouchers; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CARPENTER presented the petition of John Spicer, praying damages for the breach of a contract for the delivery of twenty-nine hundred cavalry horses; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of William W. Burns, praying payment of royalty on thirty-one hundred and ninety-five Sibley tents claimed to have been used by the United States Government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CLAYTON. I present the petition of 889 citizens of the State of Arkansas, setting forth that for many months past there has not been in that State a lawful government; "that those who once held our race in bondage have wrongfully seized upon and usurped the functions of the government of the State in all its departments without law, against right, and in direct opposition to the voice of the people emphatically expressed at the ballot-box." They go on to state further facts and ask for relief. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented the petition of James Millenger, of New Jersey, asking compensation for property destroyed by the Union Army at Nashville, Tennessee; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SCHURZ. I have been asked to present the petition of Henry H. Robinson, of Fort Wayne, Indiana, for the restoration of the President's salary to the accustomed sum of $25,000. As it contains a legal argument, I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FLANAGAN presented the petition of John G. Todd, late of the Navy, praying to be placed on the retired list; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of James Alexander and others, asking for the erection of a light-house and signal station at Star Island near the Isle of Shoals; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, presented a petition of settlers in the Des Moines Valley, Iowa, asking for redress of grievances on account of their titles to certain odd sections of land which were decreed to be Government lands by the Supreme Court in 1859, and from the right of which they have been stripped by a recent decision of the same court in 1869; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WEST presented a memorial of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, asking congressional aid in the construction of the Texas and Pacific Railway, and praying also that the New Orleans and Texas Western Central Railroad be incorporated as a branch of the original road; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented the petition of Wakeman W. Edwards, praying compensation for property taken by the United States military authorities in 1864; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2976) to define a legal day's work in certain cases, which touches the topic in respect to which a resolution was introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] yesterday, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same may be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom the resolution was referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That change of reference will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of the passage of a law authorizing the pre-emptors and homestead settlers on the public lands in certain of the western counties of that State to abandon their claims for one year and extending the time of proving their claims and making payment for their lands for one year without working a forfeiture of their titles, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, the subject-matter having been acted upon; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of the passage of a law authorizing homestead settlers in the regions of that State devastated by grasshoppers, chinch-bugs, and the drought to be absent from their homesteads for the period of one year, and extending the time of proving their titles and paying for their lands for one year without working a forfeiture of their titles, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, the subject-matter having been acted upon; which was agreed to.

Mr. KELLY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2506) for the relief of Rev. John R. Hamilton, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3178) for the relief of the children of Baker White, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. On the 24th of February last the Committee on the Judiciary reported to the Senate House bill No. 1373, providing for the assignment of judges in the Territories, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. On the 8th of April that bill was recommitted to the committee. I am instructed now to report it back to the Senate with the same amendment, in the nature of a substitute, and to recommend that the bill as thus amended be passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. THURMAN. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3745) to remove the disabilities of James Howard, of Baltimore, Maryland, have instructed me to report it with the recommendation that it pass; and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting therefor.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BOUTWELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1061) to amend title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, entitled "Regulation of steam-vessels;" which was read twice by its title.
